DESPITE DEBT, HUGE SUM IS PAID BRITAIN

War Department Settles for Transportation of Soldiers Abroad.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, July 16.—Despite Great Britain's debt of $4,500,000,000 to this country, payment of $32,688,352 has been made by the American government to the British Ministry of Shipping in settlement of a claim against the War Department, treasury officials said today. The payment was made, officials added, pursuant to an opinion by Atty.-Gen. Daugherty.

The British claim was for transportation services arising out of the war with Germany, and the payment, it was explained, constitutes final settlement between the War Department and the British Ministry of Shipping of all claims of either party against the other for transportation services.

Secretary Mellon asked Mr. Daugherty for a ruling as to whether the act of March 3, 1837, which requires the Secretary to withhold the payment of any judgment against the United States where the claimant is indebted to this country in any manner, applied to such claim.

Mr. Daugherty held the act did not apply, as it was not the practice of sovereign nations to prosecute their claims against one another in the courts and obtain judgment, but adjust such matters through diplomatic channels.

It was apparent that oil took top place in interest among the House membership in the five contested schedules on which a separate vote is to be permitted by special rule. Everybody, it seemed, was anxious to speak and worn out by the all-day wrangle over dyes, members were ready to lay off until Monday and get their forces lined up for the real fight.

The dye embargo stood up against a combined attack by Democrats and Republicans, described by those supporting it as a device to shackle the vast dye interests of Germany, it was denounced by Representative Frear of Wisconsin, a Republican member of the Ways and Means

OBSTACLES OVERCOME.

Water Power Body is Handicapped.

Congress Gives Meager Funds, but Fails to Grant Authority to Use Them.

Force Borrowed from Other Federal Departments to Handle Jobs.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

WASHINGTON, July 16.—Through the failure of Congress to provide adequate means for its expeditious administration, the Federal Water Power Commission at the end of its first year of existence, finds itself almost impotent to handle properly the requirements of water power development.

With the coal and oil situations serious and demands for horsepower growing greater each year, the most productive water power sources in the world are left undeveloped, while the commission, in order to function at all, is forced to borrow its personnel from other government departments.

The extent of the water power possibilities, shown from the first year's operation of the new commission, give a clear indication of the need for the legislation creating it and the extent to which water power development had been delayed by lack of satisfactory Federal laws.

APPLICATIONS MANY.

Up to June 30, 1921, there had been filed with the commission 225 applications aggregating 14,675,000 horsepower and affecting 33 States, the District of Columbia and Alaska. This amount is 75 per cent greater than the entire water power development of the United States today. It is 50 per cent greater than the combined water power resources of Norway and Sweden, and considerably in excess of the combined resources of France and Italy. It is five times greater than the aggregate of all applications filed with the Federal government in the preceding fifteen years. The projects applied for vary in size from less than 100 horsepower up to the 2,000,000 horsepower scheme of the Southern California Edison Company on the Colorado River.

In creating the commission and putting upon it duties many times greater than had been exercised previously by any of the executive departments in connection with water power development, Congress gave the commission no personnel to perform its work other than its executive secretary and engineer officer. To do what it has done it has been necessary for the commission to borrow from the several departments personnel for its Washington office.

It has been able to secure from this source eight engineers, two attorneys, two accountants, twenty draftsmen and sixteen clerks, a force inadequate to handle expeditiously the various applications presented, even after the omission of all other duties placed upon the commission by the act.

The commission has no field force, loaned or otherwise. Even the limited appropriations made by Congress for the work are being returned to the treasury unused because Congress, after making these appropriations, failed to grant the authority to use them.

HANDICAPS OVERCOME.

Although the commission has been obliged to work under serious handicaps, it has nevertheless accomplished many things. The law under which it acts is complicated, and great care has been necessary in the preparation of rules and regulations for its administration.

The first ten regulations, covering the requirements for applications, were issued on September 3; the remaining ten, covering maintenance and operation of project property, rental charges, depreciation and amortization reserves, allocation of earnings, and accounts and reports, were first issued on February 28, and later revised and reissued on June 6. In the preparation of these regulations, conferences and hearings were held over a period of several months.

The issuance of permits and licenses necessarily awaited the approval of the regulations. The first license was issued on March 1 to the Niagara Falls Power Company. Between that date and July 1 final action has been taken on forty-seven applications, thirteen preliminary permits have been issued, involving 1,075,000 horsepower, and 150 licenses, involving 157,000 primary horsepower and 460,000 secondary horsepower, or a total of 1,217,000 horsepower, making an aggregate of 288 projects involving 2,292,000 horsepower, or as much as was issued by all the executive departments during the ten years preceding the passage of the Water Power Act.

APPLICATIONS PENDING.

There were also pending on June 30 for final action at the next meeting of the commission, sixteen applications involving 190,000 horsepower.

Only 60 per cent of the applications filed with the commission have been accompanied by sufficient information to warrant more than preliminary action. Seventy-five per cent of them have been advertised in local newspapers, as required by the act, and an equal number have been submitted to the field for examination, hearing, and report by the several departments.

A draft of a system of accounting has been prepared, following as closely as the requirements of the act will permit the uniform system proposed by the National Association of Railway and Utilities Commissioners. The commission has also instituted investigations of Deschutes and Columbia rivers as a preliminary to action upon applications for power sites on those streams.

SEMENOFF, MASTER OF SIBERIA, IS JAP TOOL.

Cossack Bandit and Murderer is Screen for Nipponese Control of Pacific Coast in the Far East.

BY CAPT. FRANCIS McCULLAGH.

[Copyright, 1921, by the New York Herald.]

REVAL, July 5.—The new masters of the Siberian Pacific Coast are undoubtedly the Japanese, but the Mikado's military leaders who organized the Vladivostok "revolution" are keeping well in the background, so that I can say nothing about them. I can say a good deal, however, about the Russians who are acting as tools of the Japanese, for I spent over a year in Eastern Siberia as a military officer in the employ of the British government. Consequently my knowledge of Gens. Semenoff, Boldyrev & Co. is greater, I think, than that of any newspaper correspondent who was in Siberia at the same time.

Boldyrev is an honest man and a sincere Republican, who in 1918 was in the Uta government and afterward in the Omsk government, but some of Kolchak's supporters, thinking him too liberal, ejected him by a quite unjustifiable coup d'etat, which was as criminal as the Bolshevik coup d'etat a year earlier in Moscow. He is apparently having nothing to do, however, with the new Vladivostok government, for he must see very clearly that it is dominated by the Japanese.

CAREER LIKE FAIRY TALE.

To describe Semenoff properly I must make a long digression else the readers of The Los Angeles Times would think that I was telling fairy stories, for the career of this young man—he is only 28—is as marvelous, though not as pleasant, as a fairy tale.

The latest news about him to hand while I write is a telegram from the Far East saying that he has made his appearance off Vladivostok in a Japanese ship, with a large staff and a very large quantity of ammunition. The consuls are opposing his landing, and as he is not in the good books either of the English or the Americans it is possible that his employers, the Japanese, will send him back to Port Arthur. But it is fairly certain that he will turn up later and play a dominant part in the buffer state which the Japs have founded on the shores of the Pacific, so that I make no apology for saying a good deal about him.

SEMENOFF A "THROWBACK."

Semenoff is a figure that can hardly be paralleled in European history of any later date than the wars of the Spanish Succession. He is a "throwback" produced by the complete demoralization of Russia and by the abrupt retrogression of all Europe as a result of the great war. That retrogression has gone on to an extent which would have been considered quite impossible ten years ago. It has brought back the powerful German people to the stage in which they were warring with the Poles,

MRS. KABER'S SENTENCE IS A LIFE TERM.

Cleveland Woman Guilty of Murdering Husband; Others Are Facing Trial.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CLEVELAND, July 16.—Mrs. Catherine Eva Kaber today was found guilty of first-degree murder in connection with the killing of her husband, Daniel F. Kaber, by a jury in Common Pleas Court here. The jury recommended mercy. The penalty is life imprisonment. Mrs. Kaber was immediately sentenced to Marysville reformatory for women for life.

Mrs. Kaber took the sentence calmly. She was carried out of the courtroom in the arms of a deputy sheriff.

Dan Kaber was stabbed twenty-four times as he lay paralyzed in his bed at his Lakewood (Ohio) home the night of July 18, 1919. The evidence at the time of the murder was insufficient to warrant an indictment. Moses Kaber, father of the murdered publisher, hired private detectives, who shadowed Mrs. Kaber. Enough evidence had been collected early this year to warrant placing the matter in the hands of county officials.

Indictment of six persons on charges of first-degree murder and the arrest of five of them followed in quick succession. Besides Mrs. Kaber, those indicted were her mother, Mrs. Mary A. Brickel; Miss Marian McArdle, daughter of Mrs. Kaber by a former marriage; Mrs. Emma Colavito, midwife, charged with supplying the arsenic found in Kaber's stomach and hiring the actual assassins; Sam Cala and Vittore Pisselli, alleged to be the hired assassins. Pisselli is still at liberty.

MOTOR RUNS WITH WATER.

Denver Veteran Will Demonstrate His Invention to Officers of the Army.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

DENVER, July 16.—Marvyn Smith, Denver inventor, formerly of the Three Hundred and Forty-sixth Battalion, United States Tank Corps, heavies, may be the long-sought champion of the poor automobile owner. United States Army airplane experts, high officials of the United States postoffice air mail service division and automobile manufacturers in all parts of the country are watching Smith with interest, for the young Denverite has invented a hydrogen gas motor, propelled not by gasoline, but by water.

Smith has letters from government officials seeking more information in connection with his patent, and has arranged for a practical demonstration of his motor, at which various United States Army officials and officials from the French and British armies have signified their intention of being present.

The motor, according to Smith, who has organized the Smith Motors Company, Incorporated, at Aurora, will be ready for practical demonstration within the next two weeks. As soon thereafter as possible Smith will give a public demonstration of the motor in an automobile climb of the scenic incline at Table Mountain, Golden.

Installed in a car, the Smith motor, which he calls a "hydrogen gas motor," uses the water over and over again. The water runs from the tank to the transformer and is then expanded by running through electrical plates, separating into hydrogen and oxygen. The hydrogen, being lighter, rises to a container above, while the oxygen, being heavier, drops to a container below and returns to the tank, forming again into water en route, preparatory to going through the same process.

The hydrogen, which has risen to the container above, running through a rheostat, is compressed 880 explosive points. The entire system is run in a vacuum and the water is transformed two seconds after it starts from the tank. All freezing is taken care of by electrical units.

The motor is double compression with twenty-four cylinders mounted on twelve connecting rods with six valves to the cylinders, four carburetors, four duo magnetos and two hydraulic oil pumps, the same, according to Smith, as two Liberty motors in one.

The motor is capable of 1000 horsepower, according to Smith, weighs 722 pounds and can propel a car at the rate of 125 miles an hour, the wheels of the car turning six times with one revolution of the motor. There is no transmission. The speed of the car can be reduced to three miles an hour.

The motor is thought to be particularly adapted for use in airplanes, according to Smith, will serve with equal success in automobiles and can be used for any other purpose to which the ordinary gasoline motor is adapted.

CONFIDENT OF JAPAN.

Washington Waits For Answer.

Diplomatic Preliminaries to Disarmament Conference Are at Standstill.

Tokio Statesman Discusses His Proposition That Met With Failure.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, July 16.—Diplomatic preliminaries to the disarmament conference went into a period of quiescence today while Japan deliberated whether to consent to the broad discussion of Far Eastern problems, considered essential by the United States, if a serious disarmament effort is to be attempted.

So far as could be learned no word had come to the State Department tonight in response to the informal explanation made to Japan yesterday relative to the probable scope of the conference. Officials, however, made no secret of their continued confidence that Japan eventually would join Great Britain, France, Italy and China in accepting full participation in the discussions.

It was emphasized that no hasty decision was sought, and that there was no desire here to have the Tokio government accept unreservedly until it had satisfied itself as to the exact purposes and good faith of the United States in proposing the conference. The general belief was that a delay of several days would ensue before the next important development.

OZAKI'S STATEMENT.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

TOKIO, July 15.—Yukio Ozaki, former Minister of Justice, whose resolution proposing curtailment of naval armament was rejected by the Japanese House of Representatives in February last, in commenting today on President Harding's proposal for a congress of the great powers on armament limitation and Far Eastern questions, said that when he introduced his resolution the people thought it Utopian and it was indifferently treated.

"Now that President Harding has issued a world summons, other questions will be discussed, but their importance is dwarfed by that of disarmament," M. Ozaki declared. "Participation by China may seem strange because of her slight navy, but it is only reasonable that she should be invited because she is vitally interested in Pacific problems."

LEAGUE GOES AHEAD.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

PARIS, July 16.—The League of Nations is going ahead with its disarmament work on the theory that it will in no wise interfere with the proposed conference on limitation of armaments in Washington, and that it may develop information which would be of use to such a conference.

That was the decision announced at the opening session today of the temporary mixed commission for the reduction of armaments, approved by the League, which was presided over by Rene Viviani of France, chairman of the commission.

CONFERENCE RESULTS.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

LONDON, July 16.—With the conference of prime ministers of the British Empire nearing its close, it is possible to sum up its achievements, which include the following:

It paved the way for and made possible the great disarmament conference of the world powers.

Its deliberations resulted in the decision that the Anglo-Japanese alliance must be brought into harmony with the covenant of the League of Nations, which means that the military clause of the treaty must be eliminated, and it prompted the idea of a conference on Pacific problems, which, if it be successful, will make the Anglo-Japanese alliance unnecessary.

It created the atmosphere favorable for the step toward the settlement of the Irish question and produced Gen. Smuts to rescue the negotiations from failure at an extremely critical juncture.

It enabled the statesmen of the dominion to arrive at full knowledge and comprehension of the principles underlying the British foreign policy and of the effect which the application of such principles produced upon the international situation.

The naval question was not discussed. The matter came up in a general way in connection with the consideration of the Anglo-Japanese alliance, and it is believed that an innocuous noncommittal resolution will be passed in connection with it, but there has been no attempt to formulate a policy and no suggestion whatsoever from any quarter that the principle laid down in the resolution of 1918, namely, dominion control, should be departed from.

NEW POLICY OUTLINED ON IMMIGRATION.

Johnson Would Name Only Qualified Men to Vise Passports Abroad.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

WASHINGTON, July 16.—Representative Albert Johnson of Washington today introduced a bill which he designed for acceptance by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, of which he is chairman, as embodying the permanent immigration policy of the United States.

The bill provides for examination of prospective immigrants at American consulates abroad, authorizing assignment of experienced immigrant inspectors and physicians to act as vice-consuls, and denying authority for granting of vises to immigrants except after examination by such vice-consuls. Mr. Johnson stated that his bill has already received careful examination at the hands of the foremost students of the immigration problem, including members of the House Immigration Committee, nearly all of whom have placed their approval upon the plan.

"This bill," said Mr. Johnson, "aims to place the passport vise system on a peace basis insofar as the immigration service is concerned. It is intended to prevent the departure from foreign ports of immigrants who cannot or should not be admitted to the United States.

"If such a bill as this should be enacted wide discretion would be vested in the vice-consular inspectors who would administer it. By a wise and patriotic exercise of such discretion the United States would be making effective a system of selecting immigrants such as has been advocated for many years by the most advanced students of our immigration problem. Our vice-consular inspectors would have authority to refuse vises to persons who could not meet the requirements of the immigration laws."

SENATE VACATION CERTAIN

Enough Votes at Hand to Force Adjournment From July 22 to September 12.

BY ROBERT B. ARMSTRONG.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

WASHINGTON, July 16.—Senate leaders have enough votes lined up to force an adjournment of the Senate on July 22 until September 12. The House will pass the tariff bill on Thursday next and that measure will reach the Senate Friday.

Robert Armstrong

It is now planned to have the Senate recommit the tariff to the Senate Finance Committee Friday and then adjourn until the second Monday in September. During this period the members of the Finance Committee will hold hearings on the tariff, prepare such amendments as it deems proper and report the bill back to the Senate with the changes suggested as soon as it reconvenes.

In the meantime the House Ways and Means Committee will perfect the tariff revision bill, and it is expected that a measure will be reported early in September to the House for changing the present internal taxes, eliminating or correcting the excess profits taxes, and possibly enacting a general sales tax.

SPEED IS URGED.

Senators are urging in every possible way expedition of this measure to the end that the House will pass such legislation promptly and transmit it to the Senate.

If the Senate should be able to get this measure early enough before general consideration of the tariff is attempted on the floor, it is the plan to substitute this for the tariff and push the tax revision to the exclusion of everything else. The House leaders pin all their political faith on the tariff, however, and insist that the protective legislation have the right of way in both houses.

Regardless of all this, however, the Senate adjournment will take place as scheduled, and this time the block of Senators representing the agricultural interests of the West will vote for the adjournment they defeated a few weeks earlier.

The reason for the change of front is opposition to certain measures now pending in the Senate and which will surely come to vote if the Senate remains in session. The administration is obj[illegible] to some of them because they tend to put the government further into business.

WANTS ALL FACTS.

One of these bills is the Norris plan for a hundred million dollar fund to handle exports of agricultural products; another is the Capper bill for co-operative financing of agricultural products, and then there is the grain exchange and cotton exchange bills for the regulation of trading. All these the administration desires be considered in the regular session in due course and with all of the facts before them.

There is an effort being made in the Senate to give the bill for the consolidation of all government activities dealing with veterans of the World War, known as the Sweet bill, the right of way in the next few days before adjournment. This will provoke a fine row in the Senate, as the drys insist that the beer bill be made the unfinished business, and other Senators are in favor of giving the time to the maternity bill. On this measure there is much opposition, however, and it is regarded by many members of both Houses as government paternalism run riot.

Senator Borah also will insist that his Panama tolls bill get consideration for passage before the Senate adjourns, but the probability is that the Sweet bill, which will be more to correct the difficulties in vocational training compensation and insurance for the soldiers than any other measure, and place half a billion additional as available for the needs of the soldiers, will be the business before the Senate.

The House will remain in session in the meantime and will take three days recess until the House Ways and Means Committee gives it the tax bill on which to begin work. As soon as these two bills are made into law, it is the program to adjourn both Houses, but unless there is much greater speed manifested than heretofore the special session will run right up to the regular session, which will convene the first Monday in December.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 16.—R. Miller is a graduate of Stanford University. Before taking the place with the commission he engaged in private practice at Fresno.

DEAD OR A FUGITIVE?

Coast Scoured for Dr. Brumfield.

Dentist Accused of Killing Laborer, Beheading Body in Insurance Plot.

Bullet Wounds in the Corpse Found in Wreck of Doctor's Automobile.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

ROSEBURG (Or.) July 16.—Any lingering doubt that the man whose headless body was found last Wednesday night in the flaming automobile of Dr. R. M. Brumfield was the victim of murder was dispelled today when a minute examination showed that death had been caused by shots in the back. Two wounds were definitely identified as bullet holes and pieces of the bullets were found by the Coroner.

One bullet entered the back, tearing out three vertebrae and ranged upward into the chest cavity. The other shot was about four inches beneath the right shoulder blade, fracturing two ribs and ranging upward, indicating that the assailant fired from behind and from the hip.

CONFIRMS SHERIFF'S THEORY.

This diagnosis tends to confirm the theory of Sheriff Stamer that Dennis Russell, a powder man employed by Brumfield, was shot by the dentist whom the police are now seeking on a murder charge. The Sheriff has contended that before sending his blazing car over an embankment of the Pacific highway, bearing its ghastly burden, Brumfield went to the home of Russell, which was not far from his own at Melrose Station, shot the workman and then carried his body to the place where it was found and where its head had been dynamited away in the hope that it would be thought that Brumfield had met with an accident and his wife would be enabled to collect the $27,000 insurance money which he carried.

The day following the crime, blood marks were discovered at Russell's home. There was also a hat bearing blood stains and bullet holes. It now seems evident that Russell was shot there and that, in addition to the bullets that entered the back, other shots punctured his hat.

STOMACH IS EXAMINED.

The contents of the victim's stomach also were examined today. They showed that soon before his death he had partaken of a heavy meal of meat and potatoes. So far as it can be ascertained Brumfield had eaten only a small quantity of ice cream.

Another development today was a report from Portland that Brumfield had been seen there Thursday afternoon by W. F. Waldorf, a garage man. Waldorf said that the dentist was in company with a man in Owners to Absolutely Ignore Maritime Unions.

Employment Office Opened in San Francisco.

Protection Assured New Crews by Association.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SAN FRANCISCO, July 16.—No further negotiations will be conducted with maritime unions by ship owners of off-shore and coastwise vessels. This decision was reached at a joint meeting of the Ship Owners' Association of the Pacific and the Pacific American Shipping Association, yesterday. The last possible chance of a settlement with the unions was defeated several days ago when the offer of the Ship Owners' Association of the Pacific to resume operations on a 15 per cent wage reduction was turned down by the unions.

USE NONUNION CREWS.

Yesterday's decision will place all classes of vessels in the status of operating with nonunion crews. Heretofore, only the off-shore vessels made any serious attempt to conduct regular sailing schedules. An employment bureau, operated by the two ship owners' associations was opened today. It will remain open Sundays as well as week days. Immediate steps will be taken to recruit crews for all steam schooners and other classes of coastwise vessels. Owners of off-shore vessels say that no crews will be needed for their vessels, as all steamers for which there are cargoes are operating on regular sailing schedules.

ADVERTISE FOR MEN.

Advertisements have been sent broadcast by the ship owners for mates, engineers, sailors, firemen, oilers, cooks, stewards and galleymen. The men will be hired with the assurance that they will be given full protection and will retain their jobs as long as they are efficient to hold them.

No new strikes are feared by the ship owners as a result of the reviving of the waterfront federation, which contain all of the maritime unions. It is believed in shipping circles that the new organization will attempt to negotiate a settlement of the present trouble with the ship owners.

JAP HEIR APPARENT PAYS VISIT TO POPE.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

ROME, July 16.—Crown Prince Hirohito of Japan, after visiting the principal historical churches Friday morning, called at the Vatican in the afternoon and had a cordial interview with Pope Benedict, with whom he exchanged presents.

The Crown Prince told the Pontiff that Emperor Yoshihito had entrusted him with the mission of conveying to the Pope his greetings and wishes for a long and prosperous reign. Pope Benedict replied he was much gratified by the cordial expressions. Later, on behalf of the Pontiff, Cardinal Gasparri, Papal Secretary of State, made a return visit to the Crown Prince in Altciera Palace.

SEARCH COAST FOR MISSING MAN

soldier's uniform and that the two inquired the way to Hood River. The men were travel-worn and the one identified as Brumfield was exceedingly nervous.

While the report is being followed up, the authorities are not inclined to attach too much importance to it. Waldorf does not know Brumfield, but identified him from a newspaper picture. It is realized, too, that in such a case mistaken reports of identification frequently arise.

SURE OF IDENTITY.

Waldorf, however, is absolutely sure of his ground.

"I'm dead certain of it," he declared. "Mrs. Waldorf is certain of it, too.

"Although, of course, I didn't know about the affair at the time, I said to Mrs. Waldorf afterward: 'Something is wrong with that fellow. He was too much unstrung, paraded up and down for a while, then sat down to rest himself.'"

Both men were anxious that they should meet no delay on the road, Waldorf said. Waldorf did not pay close attention to the car, he said. It was a small machine, but he did not notice either the make or number.

The hour at which Waldorf saw the suspects was about eighteen hours after the time the Roseburg murder occurred.

An automobile could have covered the distance from the Southern Oregon city to Portland in that time without great trouble.

PUZZLING CIRCUMSTANCES.

There are still many puzzling circumstances about the identification of the murder victim. It was learned that Russell, several years ago, sustained a fracture of one of his forearms, but the examination of the body failed to disclose any evidence of the bones in either arm ever having been broken, although the physicians admitted that such might have been the case.

James Hunter, Portland finger-print expert, may be able to aid in the solution of the mystery, when the plates made by him today are examined. Prints were taken from the body and also from the cabin of Russell. It was impossible to find any finger imprints on any of the surfaces in the office of the dentist. Every surface had been wiped clean, either by the dentist himself or by the janitor.

Mr. Hunter stated that identification of the body may be made as that of Russell, but his failure to secure prints of Brumfield's fingers will fail to establish the case completely in the event the prints made from the body are not those of Russell. The plates have been taken to Portland for examination and a report will be made for the inquest, which will be held Monday.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY HERE.

Dist.-Atty. Neuner, who will be in charge of the prosecution if Brumfield is apprehended, is now in Los Angeles, where he went to attend the Elks' convention and remained for a visit. He has been urged to return at once and is expected early in the week.

Mrs. Brumfield is still confident that the body is that of her husband. However, she declines to discuss the subject in detail, saying that she has employed an attorney, who has instructed her not to talk. Virtually all evidence, however, tends to show that the body is not that of Brumfield, including that of his tailor, who says that the measurements of the body do not correspond to the clothing measurements in his records.

The people of Roseburg are in a state bordering on nervous panic. Virtually all business is suspended and the streets are crowded at all hours. The interest is intense, not only because of the mystery, but because of the prominence of the Brumfields. The dentist was a member of a prominent family in Indiana and a graduate of the University of Indiana and the dental department of the University of Illinois. He was at one time Superintendent of Schools at Owensville, Ind. Mrs. Brumfield is the daughter of an Owensville physician.

SUBMARINE'S OFFICERS ARE IMPRISONED.

Germans Who Fired on Hospital Ship and Lifeboats Must Serve Four Years.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

LEIPSIC (Germany) July 16.—Lieut. Dittmar and Lieut. Boldt, charged with murder in the first degree for firing on lifeboats after the Canadian hospital ship, Llandovery Castle, had been torpedoed in the summer of 1918, were each sentenced today to four years imprisonment. The sentence did not, however, carry hard labor with it, as demanded by the public prosecutor.

The case of Dittmar and Boldt differed from the others which had been heard by the Supreme Court here in connection with trials growing out of violations of the rules of civilized warfare in that the two lieutenants were brought to trial by the German public prosecutor. Great Britain only had demanded the trial of Commander Patzig of the submarine which torpedoed the Llandovery Castle, who fled the country. The public prosecutor, however, after an examination of the evidence, ordered that Dittmar and Boldt be placed on trial. Lieut. Boldt, who, a short time ago, retired from the navy, was ordered deprived of his civil rights.

The men were sentenced for manslaughter on the ground that the "officers acted on the impulse of the moment." An excited crowd filled the courtroom.

Dr. Schmidt, president of the Supreme Court, in reviewing the case, declared the Llandovery Castle was torpedoed against the law of nations.

"Everything aboard was in perfect order," he said, "and, furthermore, the sinking was against all regulations of the German Admiralty, as the ship was in waters where torpedoing was forbidden. The court finds the lifeboats were fired on intentionally, with the object of removing witnesses who could testify to the misdeed of the submarine commander."

Tax Penalties Net Millions to Treasury.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

WASHINGTON, July 16.—Approximately $60,000,000 was added to the revenue of the government during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1921, in additional taxes, penalties and fines resulting from false and fraudulent income tax returns, the Bureau of Internal Revenue announced today.

Fraud upon the revenue by way of filing false and fraudulent tax returns appears in many unique ways, bureau officials assert. Some taxpayers are extremely crude in their methods, and reduce their taxes by merely omitting large items of income from their returns. Thus in one instance a prominent merchant in one of the larger cities owned and operated two stores. For three years straight he omitted entirely from his returns the income of one of the stores.

In another instance a prominent man received approximately one-half of his income as salary from a corporation of which he was president and of which corporation he owned virtually all of the stock. The corporation took this salary as a deduction and a necessary expense; the man himself entirely omitted to report this salary, never thinking that the corporation's return would be checked on his individual returns.

During the last year many jail sentences have been imposed, ranging from sixty days to one year, in addition to the fines and penalties. Indictments have been returned during the last year in virtually every section of the United States and many of the cases are now awaiting trial at the fall term.

Trying to Rescue Passengers From Beached Steamer

OGDENSBURG (N. Y.) July 16. Strenuous efforts were being made tonight to remove 320 passengers from the steamer Rapids King of the Canadian steamship line, which was disabled in the Long Sault Rapids, of the St. Lawrence River late today.

The craft was disabled by the breaking of a rudder chain. The tiller was used to beach the vessel in seven feet of raging waters. No boats were able to approach the disabled craft because of the swiftness of the current.

An improvised platform was constructed by farmers in an attempt to get the passengers ashore, but at a late hour their efforts had not been successful.

Air Mail Pilot Instantly Killed When Plane Falls

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, July 16.—Howard Smith, United States air mail pilot, was instantly killed late today near the Marina by the fall of his plane as he started on his regular trip to Reno.

The plane took a nose-dive and burst into flames as it struck the ground. Smith's body was burned beyond recognition. He was 25 years old.

Engine trouble apparently was the cause of the accident. Smith was transferred here recently from the Chicago division of the air mail service.

French Governor of Metz Dies.

and the Austrian people to the stage in which they were contending not with the French and the English but with the scattered Slavonic tribes on their frontier.

Highwaymen are now the curse of several remote parts of Germany, as they were 300 years ago.

In the same way the warfare in Siberia, South Russia, Poland, the Ukraine and the Caucasus sank during the last three years to the level of the warfare waged 300 years ago.

BUDENNY ILLITERATE.

Budenny, the Bolshevik cavalry leader, is a Caucasion Cossack who can neither read nor write, and the majority of the other leaders on both sides two years ago in South Russia and Siberia had never risen in the pre-war army above the rank of captain, while very many of them had been only N. C. O.'s, privates and officers' servants. Gen. Gaida, the great Czecho-Slovak leader in Siberia, had been only a stretcher bearer. Gen. Sirovi had been a lawyer's clerk. Gen. Sakharov, the commander-in-chief of all Kolchak's armies, had never been considered fit for more than a captaincy during the great war, and his handling of th Omsk retreat showed that he ought never to have been anything more.

Sometimes good men rose to the top, as always happens during revolutions, but as a rule it was the mud at the bottom that rose, owing to the complete demoralization of the armies, on the principle, I suppose that a brawny teamster with a voice like a foghorn is better fitted to control a mule outfit on corduroy forest tracks than an expert and gentle-voiced motor driver, accustomed to asphalt roads. Most of the fighting that has been done in Europe and Asia since the armistice would have amazed Gen. Pershing, for the armies were generally mobs, there was no staff work at all, commanders-in-chief did not know at critical moments where their flanks had gone to, artillery advanced without any covering infantry whatever, and every possible sort of mistake was committed—sometimes with the happiest results, the enemy being in an even worse muddle.

NO STRATEGY IN BATTLES.

Battles became affairs of psychology rather than of strategy. Swift advances by small bodies of badly armed troops scared the life out of large bodies of better armed troops, and led to the loss of thousands of square miles of territory.

All this is preliminary to a short description of Ataman Semenoff who, according to a telegram received from Berlin, has been appointed by the Japanese as head of the new Russian government in Vladivostok. If this news is confirmed, it means that Gen. Boldyrev, who is an honorable man, has refused to let himself be used any longer as a figurehead by the Japanese military leaders. But it will certainly arouse suspicion in England and America as to this Vladivostok government's claim to describe itself as Russian. I would like, for instance, to have the opinion of Gen. Graves of the United States Army on Semenoff, also that of Col. Slaughter, likewise of the United States Army, on the same subject. Both these officers have been in Siberia and know Semenoff well.

LIKE OLD-TIME BRIGANDS.

If the Washington government were to publish a blue book giving all the dispatches sent to the State Department and to the War Office about Semenoff from the middle of 1918 to the present time, it would be one of the most sensational volumes ever issued by any government press. For these dispatches would prove that Semenoff is in the pay of the Japanese government and that he is as bad a brigand as California ever saw in the forties of the last century. The publication of such a book would make impossible Semenoff's retention of government in the Far East.

Semenoff, who is of mixed Russian and Mongol blood, served with the Verkhneudinsk Cossacks—most of them Buriats—and rose to the rank of captain during the great war. Neither his education nor his military talent permitted of his rising higher, and he would not have risen so high had it not been for the war, which accounted for very rapid promotion of regulars in all the belligerent countries. He saw a little service on the European front and then returned to the Far East, where he fell under the influence of old Gen. Khorvat, the head of the Chinese Eastern Railway and a strong reactionary. With financial help from Khorvat he formed in Northern Manchuria a curious military outfit comprising Russian boys of 16 and 17, Chinamen, Coreans, Mongols and Japanese. This was 1918. This variegated gang could do nothing against the Bolsheviks, though the latter were very weak at this time, until the Japanese came along with their regular troops and cleared a way for Semenoff as far as Chita. There Semenoff reigned, under the protection of Japanese bayonets, till the fall of Kolchak. Without Japanese assistance he could not have held on for a day, for though he had some Russian officers and a good many Cossacks attached to him the entire civil population was against him. He is in the same position now at Vladivostok.

PAID BY JAPANESE.

The Japanese paid him then, as they pay him now, for the upkeep of his troops, and they give him besides a regular subsidy in money in return for which he has to do exactly what they order him to do, exactly as if he were an officer in the Japanese army. In the middle of 1918 he was subsidized by the British government, and when they dropped him he hired himself out to the Japs, whose paid servant he still is.

Semenoff, when at Chita, did not depend entirely on the Japanese, however, to balance his budget. He had other ways of making money. Holding as he did the frontier town of Manchuria, strongly garrisoned by Japanese troops, he insisted on collecting the customs there, though he had no right to do so. This proved a gold mine to him, for he could extort as much as he liked not only from merchants coming in, but also from merchants going out, particularly from Chinese merchants.

Sometimes Semenoff went so far that his Japanese employers had to remonstrate gently with him. He stopped on one occasion an English officer in uniform and took money from him, but a vigorous complaint from the British commander led to an apology from him and a return of the loot. He had at least a dozen misunderstandings with the American troops, and on one occasion the Americans were on the point of opening fire on him.

PROTEST IS IGNORED.

While passing through Semenoff's territory, Gen. Knox, the British commander in Siberia, was held up by Japanese troops, a soldier mounting guard over the engine driver while other soldiers examined the train. This naturally led to a vigorous protest on the part of the British general, but, though the Japanese quibbled and explained, they never really apologized. After Kolchak formed his government at Omsk, Semenoff continually stopped ammunition, equipment and supplies for the Russian troops on the Ural front. This elicited scores of the most violent complaints from the British and American generals, who were supporting Kolchak, but still the thing went on, and it probably had something to do in the end with the "Supreme Ruler's" downfall.

Semenoff never really acknowledged Kolchak, and Kolchak could never win the obedience of this Cossack bandit, who had behind him the might of Japan, the only country that really counted in Siberia, for it could send 500,000 men into the Maritime Province in the course of a month, a feat which neither America nor England could possibly do. If Japan had really wanted to crush the Bolsheviks it could have done so easily in 1918. If it had really wanted to assist the "Supreme Ruler" it could have seated him in the Kremlin in 1919. But, judging by its actions, it seemed to desire that Russia should remain weak and divided, and it seems to desire so still.

SOVIET FEAR JAPAN.

The soviet government is afraid that Japan will launch from Vladivostok a great attack not only on Red Siberia, but even on Red Russia, but it need have no cause for fear. The Japanese want to keep the Russians fighting one another ad infinitum, and if any of the White generals in its pay are too successful against the Bolsheviks it will get rid of them, for a strong Russia, whether White or Red, is the last thing in the world that the Mikado's government desires. Its one idea is to make the Russian Pacific coast really Japanese, though nominally it may be Monarchist or S. R. or Menshevik.

But whatever it be Japan will rule the roost. Even in 1919, when there were American, British, French and Italian troops in Siberia, the Japanese soldiers and officers behaved as though they were cocks of the walk. Incidents illustrating the contempt with which they treated foreign officers could be cited by the score. On one occasion at Harbin four American officers had taken a compartment in a railway car by paying for it and getting a proper authorization from the railway authorities to have it entirely to themselves. But after the train had started a Japanese major, who spoke English, insisted, despite all protests, on forcing his way into it and taking the best seat. There was naturally a row, in the course of which the major drew a revolver, but was knocked down and kept a prisoner till the end of the journey.

In introduce this question of the Japanese because it is intimately bound up with the question of Semenoff, who is only a tool in the hands of the Japanese. If he rules in Vladivostok, the Japanese will be masters of the port, and American business will be firmly, but politely, frozen out.

To continue, however, my account of Semenoff. In 1919 he had a most violent row with Kolchak, who denounced him for holding up ammunition and whom he in turn defied, greatly to the delight of the Japanese, to whom Kolchak was not sufficiently subservient.

Later on in the year great pressure was brought to bear on Japan by England and France, with the result that Semenoff and Kolchak became nominally friends. The former was given the rank of General—he had previously given himself the rank of Ataman—and invited to come to the Ural front with his Cossacks. He accepted the rank and still retains it, but he never moved from Chita, and, when Kolchak fell he was unable or unwilling to assist him. He did, indeed, come as far as Irkutsk in his armored train, but, being extremely bad as a military leader, he had to retreat again and soon had to flee to Japan.

Semenoff is married, but having annexed a woman in a cafe of Kharbin, the worst sink of inquity in the Far East, he has made her share his "throne".

GRANT AGAINST BONUS MEASURE

Harding Had Precedent for His Actions

Reasons in 1875 Are the Same as Those Today

Statement is Issued from the White House

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

WASHINGTON, July 16.—President Harding has found a precedent for his course in urging delay on enactment of soldiers' bonus legislation. Following the shelving of the measure yesterday in the Senate, which precipitated one of the stormiest sessions in the history of that usually dignified body, the White House today issued a statement showing that President Grant vetoed a soldiers' bonus bill because it would have seriously embarrassed government refunding operations in progress at the time.

"President Grant," says the statement issued at the White House, "in the spring of 1875, vetoed a soldiers' bonus bill which had just been passed by Congress. In doing so, he presented reasons substantially the same as those urged by President Harding a few days ago when he appeared in the House. The Grant veto follows

GRANT'S REASONS.

"To the House of Representatives: "House Bill 3341 is hereby returned without my approval for the reasons, first, that it appropriates from the Treasury a large sum of money at a time when the revenue is insufficient for current wants, and this proposal is a further drain on the Treasury. The issue of bonds, authorized by the bill to a very large and indefinite amount, would seriously embarrass the refunding operations now progressing, whereby the interest of the bonded debt of the United States is being largely reduced.

"Secondly, I do not believe that any considerable portion of the ex-soldiers who, it is supposed, will be beneficiaries of this appropriation, are applicants for it, but, rather, it would result in a measure for the relief of claim agents and middlemen who would intervene to collect or discount the bounties granted by it. The passage of this bill at this time is inconsistent with the measures of economy now demanded by the necessities of the country.

(Signed) "U. S. GRANT."

The measure would have given to each soldier $100 per year for his service, with, however, the deduction of whatever bounties he received from either the Federal government or his State. Estimates of expenses ranged from $20,000,000 to $150,000,000.

ENGLISH LORD GETS MARRIAGE LICENSE.

FORMER CAPT. PAGET WILL WED NEW YORK GIRL NEXT TUESDAY.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NEW YORK, July 16.—Society was taken by surprise today when Lord Hugh Queensborough, better known in this country as Almeric Hugh Paget, son-in-law of the late William C. Whitney, and Miss Edith Starr Miller of 1048 Fifth avenue, went to the City Clerk's office and obtained a license to be married next Tuesday, July 19.

In 1895 Lord Queensborough, then Capt. Almeric Hugh Paget, married Miss Pauline Whitney, daughter of the ex-Secretary of the Navy under the first Cleveland administration. She died in 1916, leaving a large estate to her husband.

Lord Queensborough gave his age at the marriage bureau as 60. Miss Miller was recorded as a "spinster," 33 years old, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. Starr Miller of this city. She is a niece of Whitney Warren and of Mrs. Robert Goelet.

SEEK SWINDLERS ON BOARDWALK.

Burns Detectives Are Busy in Atlantic City.

Believe Police in League With Con Men.

Old Wire-Tapping Game is Bait for Suckers.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

ATLANTIC CITY (N. Y.) July 16. Twenty Burns detectives, financed from a secret source, swarmed all over this playground today, making no secret that their mission was to uncover the alleged link between the police and swindlers who have sought to take hundreds of thousands of dollars from wealthy men at beach front hotels through the old wire-tapping game.

Charles H. Dennis, Philadelphia manager of the detective agency, was in personal charge of the operatives. He said tonight that his men already had struck the trial and that sensational disclosures would come soon.

SUSPECTS EX-POLICEMAN.

Dennis is working on the theory that an ex-policeman of Philadelphia has acted as go-between for the crooks in huge operations which they have conducted with impunity in Miami, Fla., in the winter and in which they came so near being successful here.

He said that the presence of this man in Atlantic City while the conspirators were dallying with their quarry had been established and that the man in question was in close touch with the police and city officials here and evidently enjoyed their confidence.

JUDGE IS SUSPICIOUS.

There was a conference between Dennis and Judge John J. White of the New Jersey Court of Errors and Appeals and president of the Marlborough-Blenheim Hotel Company. It was Judge White who recently announced that there were reasons for suspecting that both the police department and the prosecutor's office had connived at the escape of the wire-tappers and who called upon Mayor Bader and Director of Public Safety Cuthbert to bestir themselves to clear the skirts of the administration. This case was that in which an attempt was made to fleece Irving P. Chapman of Oneida, N. Y., out of $100,000. In a second case the intervention of a friend saved a guest at the Chalfonte from investing $50,000 in the fraud, and in the third a bank cashier persuaded a credulous depositor not to throw that same amount away.

STUDY FINANCING OF COTTON CROP.

GOVERNORS OF FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS WILL CONFER WITH RESERVE BOARD

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

WASHINGTON, July 16.—Governors of the Federal reserve banks of the five chief cotton-producing sections have been summoned to Washington to confer with the Federal Reserve Board next Saturday on matters relative to the financing of the cotton crop. The purpose is to formulate a uniform policy for handling cotton loans during the coming marketing season.

The Federal reserve banks which will be represented at the conference are those of Richmond, Atlanta, St. Louis, Kansas City and Dallas.

Gov. W. P. G. Harding, of the Federal Reserve Board, in announcing plans for the conference, said that the board has received numerous requests that it announce a general policy on cotton loans. As a result of these requests, it was considered advisable that the Governors of the five banks be invited to work out a uniform policy, which will assist in the orderly marketing of the cotton crop.

Following an agreement upon a general policy the action will be announced by the various governors of the Federal reserve banks and the Federal Reserve Board will issue a statement giving its approval. In this manner assurance will be given that rediscounts will be obtainable at the Federal reserve banks in accordance with the general policy.

The plan for making cotton loans will include provisions relative to such matters as terms of loans and the security which will be required.

PARENTS HAVE PLACE IN CURBING CRIME.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CHICAGO, July 16.—"Parents could spend a wholesome half-day now and then thinking of their own responsibility for marshmallow brains, loose morals, delinquency and crime," said Prof. Robert H. Gault, lecturing on "Curbing Crime" before Northwestern University students.

"Parents cannot shove off upon the police, courts and crime commission their own responsibility for curbing and preventing crime. The problem is, in the main, two-fold. First, finding the children and youths that are especially likely to run into delinquency and crime and finding them so early in life that they may be put upon the right path by means of restraint and training.

"Secondly, prompt and certain apprehension and punishment of the guilty are more efficacious as preventives of crime than severity. Those who say fear has no place in social control are wrong. Anybody who lives in the light of commonsense knows that wholesome fear restrains many persons until habits are formed that make it unnecessary to inspire fear of consequences."

BAY CITY COPS TO USE ARMORED CAR.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, July 16.—An armored automobile, equipped with two machine guns and protected by steel, one and one-half inches thick, is to be used by San Francisco police in operating against thieves who work from automobiles, Chief of Police Daniel O'Brien announced here today.

The car will be in operation within fifteen days and will be a permanent addition to the Police Department's equipment. It will carry a crew of four or five men.

WASHINGTON NEWS IN BRIEF.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

WASHINGTON, July 16.—Japan has been assured by the United States that she will not be compelled to play a lone hand at the forthcoming Washington conference and must now make the next move in the negotiations preliminary to the gathering.

A precedent for the action of President Harding in urging delay on soldier-bonus legislation is set forth in a statement issued today from the White House showing that President Grant vetoed a soldiers' bonus bill because it would have seriously embarrassed government refunding operations in progress at that time.

The Sweet bill failed to get through the Finance Committee again today, being held up by a flood of minor amendments. The committee probably will not get it out now until the middle of next week. Representative Sweet denied assertions by Senator Smoot that the soldiers' relief measure would add $343,000,000 to the annual cost, maintaining that it would not add more than $14,500,000.

The Bureau of Internal Revenue reports that $20,000,000 has been added to the government revenue for the last fiscal year by additional taxes, penalties and fines resulting from the discovery of false and fraudulent income-tax returns.

Governors of Federal reserve banks of the five chief cotton-producing sections will meet here next Tuesday to plan for the financing of the cotton crop. Exporters of bituminous coal through Atlantic ports were heavier in June than any month since November. Opponents of the dye embargo in the tariff bill, led by Representative Frear of Wisconsin, failed by a vote of 106 to 122 today to have the embargo stricken from the bill.

Legalization of 2.75 barley-malt beer was urged upon Congress today by northwestern farmers, who declared it would add about $300,000,000 to their yearly revenue.

A lobby representative of investment bankers opposed to a Federal blue-sky law is working actively against the bill introduced by Representative Denison of Illinois, which is now before the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

DUTY ON PETROLEUM URGED ON PRESIDENT.

OIL AND GAS ASSOCIATION HEAD SAYS PROTECTIVE DUTIES CAUSE CONFLICT.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

WASHINGTON, July 16.—Taking issue with the claim of geologists that American oil resources are limited, William W. Davis, president of the Mid-Continent Oil and Gas Association, sent a letter to President Harding today urging him to approve the duties on crude petroleum and fuel oil as contained in the Fordney tariff bill. The President recently sent a letter to Chairman Fordney, of the House Ways and Means Committee, in which he declared that protective duties on oil would be in conflict with the government's policy of encouraging development of oil resources in foreign lands by Americans.

"The policy of encouraging the investment of American capital in the development of petroleum in foreign countries is, perhaps, wise, but I trust I may say without offense that the estimates of the world's petroleum reserves, which show but one-sixth of the total within the United States and Alaska, are being taken far too seriously, and have unduly exaggerated the importance of American ownership of foreign oil production," said Mr. Davis in the letter.

"Practical oil men have for years smiled good-naturedly at these alleged scientific estimates. I respectfully submit that a policy based upon so unstable a foundation should not be permitted to crush the many thousands of individuals and small corporations producing oil at home, and to throw out of employment hundreds of thousands of men to the advantage of ten or a dozen corporations of great capital whose operations in Mexico have created the utter demoralization of the oil industry in this country to their own great ultimate profit.

GIANT LINER TO BE SALVAGED OR SOLD.

LEVIATHAN, IDLE, IS COSTING TAXPAYERS $45,000 A MONTH, REPORT.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, July 16.—The giant Leviathan, which has been idle at her pier in Hoboken for two years, costing the taxpayers $45,000 a month for upkeep, will be ordered reconditioned, salvaged and sold within the next month. This was announced today by Chairman Lasker of the Shipping Board, after he had inspected the former German liner Vaterland, which was seized during the war and converted into an American troopship.

If it is decided to refit the 54,000-ton steamer and put her on the seas again as a first-class passenger liner, the cost probably would be $12,000,000, experts told Mr. Lasker.

The cost of building and refitting a ship of the same size today would be in the neighborhood of $30,000,000, it was said.

P. A. S. Franklin, president of the International Mercantile Marine, who was a member of the inspecting party, said his corporation had an agreement with the Shipping Board to operate the Leviathan for five years, if the government decided upon reconditioning her.

BARUCH SEES WIRTH AND TALKS FINANCES.

[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

BERLIN, July 16.—Bernard Baruch, who, in his book on the Peace Conference, declared Germany could pay in full, has just had a confidential meeting with Chancellor Wirth, who, upon forming the new Cabinet, made a similar statement.

Mr. Baruch is said to have been well impressed with the good faith of the German Chancellor. It is understood Dr. Wirth told the American that Germany's making good depends upon its retaining the Upper Silesian coal basin.

KIDDIES PROTEST PRICE OF CONES.

More Than 500 Children Parade in Des Moines; Nickel Their Limit.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

DES MOINES, July 16.—More than 500 children between the ages of 6 and 16 paraded through the downtown section of Des Moines today protesting against the high price of ice cream cones. Most of the children carried placards inscribed, "We want nickel ice cream cones."

STEAMER DRIFTING AT SEA TWELVE DAYS.

JAP LINER WITH A BROKEN CRANKSHAFT DISABLED 4000 MILES OUT.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, July 16.—With a broken crankshaft, the Japanese freighter Hamburg Maru, which left San Francisco June 20 for Yokohama, has been drifting since July 4, about 4000 miles out in the Pacific from here, according to a wireless message received here today by the marine department of the Chamber of Commerce. The advices said it was expected another shaft would be installed by the crew within a week.

The liner Africa Maru, which left Tacoma July 13 for Yokohama, has been requested by wireless to go to the aid of the disabled steamer, it was reported.

The Hamburg Maru is a new steamer of the Osaka Shoshen Kaisha fleet, is 3159 tons net, and carries a crew of sixty men.

Her present position was given in the wireless messages as about 2500 miles northwest of Honolulu.

GERMAN PLEBISCITE HAS BEEN DISSOLVED.

INTERESTS IN SILESIA WILL HEREAFTER BE CARED FOR BY PEOPLE'S COUNCIL.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

BERLIN, July 16.—The German plebiscite commission in Upper Silesia has been dissolved, says a dispatch from Breslau, Prussian Silesia, to a local agency. German interests in the plebiscite zone hereafter are to be represented by a "people's council" comprising members of various German political parties and civic organizations, under the chairmanship of Dr. Lakaschek.

Vorwaerts declared that 40,000 Silesia for interior Germany since Silesit for interior Germany since the resumption of railroad traffic in the area where the recent uprising of Polish insurgents occurred.

FULLER DIVORCE CASE NOW SAID TO BE NEAR.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CHICAGO, July 16.—Mr. and Mrs. William A. (Billy) Fuller II, married in Hot Springs, Ark., last October, have separated, and divorce papers are in the offing, according to dispatches received from Memphis. Mrs. Fuller was Ada Thompson Norfleet, daughter of J. Chambless Norfleet of Memphis. "Billy," son of Mr. and Mrs. Leroy Fuller, was one of Chicago society's best known and most eligible bachelors.

Two years ago they met at Miss Lolita Armour's winter home at Santa Barbara, Cal. They met again at Hot Springs and a swift courtship followed. They were married on October 9. Mrs. "Billy" was quite ill last winter and went to a sanitarium for a rest cure. Since leaving there she has been with relatives at Memphis.

TO DEPORT KOREAN FREED FROM PRISON.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

PORTLAND (Or.) July 16.—The first deportation to Korea to be made by the local immigration bureau in several years will be effected tomorrow when Park Moon Ki, recently released from the State penitentiary, where he served a term for burglary, will be sent across, according to R. P. Bonham, chief immigration inspector.

The Korean will be conducted to San Francisco by John R. Sawyer, Vice-Consul-General at Shanghai, and from San Francisco will be placed aboard a ship for his native land.

DIPLOMATS OF CUBA ARE TO SELL SUGAR.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

HAVANA, July 16.—Cuba will employ her diplomatic corps in a campaign to sell the existing enormous sugar surplus, under a decision reached today at a meeting of the Cabinet with President Zayas.

The Secretary of State was instructed to initiate negotiations in every country where Cuba is represented diplomatically for the sale of sugar on conditions favorable both to Cuba and the country approached. Specific mention was made of Chile as a possible customer for sugar, denatured alcohol and tobacco.

Long Quiz is Behind Action of Grand Jury.

Three City Trustees, the City Treasurer and the City Engineer of Venice were named as defendants in accusations filed yesterday by the county grand jury with Dist.-Atty. Woolwine. The accusations are the result of nearly two years of investigation on the part of the 1920 and the 1921 grand juries and Mr. Woolwine and his staff.

The defendants in the accusations, which are separated, are A. E. Coles, former Mayor of the beach city, who recently resigned from the Board of Trustees and then was reappointed by the board; J. G. Harrah, a Trustee; C. W. Holbrook, a Trustee; James T. Peasgood, Jr., the City Treasurer, and W. F. Crawford, the City Engineer.

The filing of the accusations with the District Attorney brings to a head an investigation that has been simmering for several years, was revived about two years ago and was presented to the 1920 grand jury just before that body adjourned for the year. It has been a matter of inquiry before the present inquisitorial body for several months.

CHARGE CORRUPTION.

Although there are four articles of accusations against each of the three trustees, the first contains the principal charge. In this the three—Trustees Coles, Harrah and Holbrook—are accused of entering into an agreement on March 29, 1920, with Carroll J. Daley, a real estate broker of long residence at Venice, to have the city lease the Center-street pier, located southerly from Windward avenue, to Mr. Daley at an agreed rental of $83.33 per month for the first five years, and $125 a month for the next ten years. It is stated in the accusation that Mr. Daley, who had long been identified with affairs at the beach city, was actively engaged in aiding Trustee Harrah in his fight for re-election in the municipal campaign then being carried on. It is charged the three trustees "knowingly and corruptly" entered into the agreement with Mr. Daley.

VALUABLE PRIVILEGE.

It is stated in the accusation that the three trustees, without the knowledge and consent of Trustee E. A. Gerety, now Mayor, and Trustee W. G. Lutz, caused the City Attorney of Venice to draw up a resolution which was adopted over the protest of the two latter trustees. This resolution, it is stated, contracted with Mr. Daley for the lease of the Center-street pier at the agreed rentals for amusements and general business purposes. This would give the lessee the right, according to Dist.-Atty. Woolwine, to extend the pier far into the ocean, and, it was said, was worth considerable more than the rental price. It is said in the accusations that the three accused trustees did not give Trustees Gerety and Lutz a chance to have other persons bid for the same privilege. Mr. Coles, it is charged, signed and executed the contract.

LEASE TRANSFERRED.

Article II of the document charges that on July 6, 1920, before the meeting of the Board of Trustees, the three accused trustees, without the knowledge of the other two trustees, met at the home of E. C. Dunnavant, a cafe and amusement man of the beach city, and entered into an understanding with him to assign to Mr. Dunnavant the lease granted to Mr. Daley and that the lease would be extended to a period of twenty-five years, at rentals of $83.33 per month for the first five years; $125 a month for the next ten years and $166.67 a month for the last ten years. The leases, in both instances, also carried a provision that the lessee could at any time remove any buildings erected on the pier. It is charged that later on the same day the three trustees adopted a resolution granting the altered lease to Mr. Dunnavant, over the protest of the other two trustees.

Article III of the accusation charges that the three trustees, making up a majority of the board, failed during the year 1920 to advertise for bids for handling the city printing, or advertising, or to ask for responsible bidders.

VIOLATION CHARGED.

The fourth article in the document charges that the Board of Trustees, "with the connivance of C. W. Holbrook (a trustee accused) knowingly and unlawfully agreed to pay W. F. Crawford $225 a month as City Engineer and Street Superintendent, while an ordinance of the city provides that his compensation should not be over $6 a day."

Because of these accusations the grand jury asks that the Superior Court remove the three trustees accused from office.

Five articles of accusation are filed against J. T. Peasgood, Jr. It is charged that in 1920 he failed to charge or collect any interest for moneys of Venice, deposited with the First National Bank of Venice; that in 1921 he deposited $90,000 of the city's funds with the same bank, although the paid-in capital stock of the bank was $50,000 at that time; that on May 15, 1921, having been previously informed that various banks in this county were paying 3 per cent on daily balances of public moneys, and that the First National Bank of Ocean Park made a specific offer of that nature, he advised Mayor Coles to accept 2 per cent interest, and later, with the Mayor, established that as the interest rate on the money.

W. F. Crawford, City Engineer and Street Superintendent is accused of purchasing a surveying instrument from the Adolph Frese Optical Company at a price of $414, turning in a similar instrument, owned by Venice, at $110, as part payment. It is further charged that Mr. Crawford issued vouchers in the forms of checks on the assessment-district fund for the improvement of Virginia avenue and Strong Drive, for two sums of $80, indorsing them over to the same optical company, supposedly for rental of a surveying instrument. It is also charged against Mr. Crawford that he estimated the cost for the improvement of Virginia avenue and Strong Drive at $39,534.39, and later approved demands for the improvement for the amount of $64,339.57.

SIGNS ACCUSATIONS.

The accusations were all signed by Charles L. Elmdorf, foreman of the jury, and Mrs. Martin G. Carter, secretary. They were filed with the District Attorney, who issued citations for the five accused to appear before the presiding judge of the Superior Court on the 29th inst., to answer to the charge. If trials are held in these accusations, the cases will be presented to a jury for a verdict, the penalty being removal from office.

Mr. Coles last night explained that the pier, which had remained useless for several years, was of no value to the city, and that when the Sunset Pier Company wanted to rent it and improve it, he, with Mr. Harrah and Mr. Holbrook, believed they were doing the city a good turn by renting it without a parley. The pier has been carried out several hundred feet and now has many amusement resorts on it.

Mr. Crawford declares that the city needed a transit and he started to buy one on the rental basis. The city, he says, paid the remaining installments and has never paid him for the amount he expended.

The others mentioned in the charges could not be located last night at Venice.

County Bean Man's in Lively Suit.

Hired Kid McCoy Down Evidence.

for Estimate of Lewis's Holdings.

her cross-complaint, which transferred the case from Ventura courts to Los Angeles, and the representations in an original separate maintenance suit, has been brought to a close.

Attorney Martin Levering, sitting as referee for Judge Walton J. Wood in the Superior Court, heard the final testimony of witnesses yesterday afternoon. Continuance was set for next Saturday morning at 9 o'clock, at which time the attorneys will bring in appraisals of 750 acres of land, which Mr. Lewis owns, near Camarillo and the findings of Attorney Levering will then be submitted to Judge Wood.

SEEKS ALIMONY.

Mrs. Lewis is asking for $500 a month alimony and $15,000 attorney fees. The young people have each been married twice and neither is more than 25 years of age. Mr. Lewis is one of five children and his testimony and that of his father yesterday brought out the fact that their property is valued at $1,500,000 and has been handled practically as a family matter or community estate.

Attorney W. J. Gilbert, representing Mrs. Lewis, fenced hard in court during the afternoon and finally established a basis for arriving at an estimate of her husband's interest in the property. J. W. Lewis testified to having put $300,000 in cash outlay into the Lewis cannery, but denied that his son actually owned an interest in it. He admited, however, that his son had borrowed $100,000 from a Los Angeles bank on the 750 acres, which were deeded over to him by the father and then paid all of that amount except $250 over to a bank in Ventura to cancel notes held by the bank against the senior Lewis.

DETECTIVES EMPLOYED.

Earlier testimony of the day included a rehearsal under cross-examination of the facts in connection with house parties, automobile rides and meetings on the part of both the defendant and plaintiff, each having employed the services of detectives to secure evidence that might have a bearing on the divorce action.

"Kid" McCoy, ex-prizefighter, admitted he was paid $500 by an attorney for Mr. Lewis to round up evidence against Mrs. Lewis. He failed to get any, and said that Mr. Lewis asked him to return the $500. Mr. Lewis denied McCoy's testimony.

UNITE TO OPPOSE LOS ANGELES PLAN.

SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY COUNTIES TO FIGHT WATER-POWER FILINGS OF CITY.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

MODESTO, July 16.—Representatives of eight counties in the San Joaquin Valley today united on a program of opposition to water-power filings of the city of Los Angeles in the Sierra Nevada Mountains in their applications before the State Water Committee. The filings will be opposed on the grounds of public policy; at the same time steps will be taken to persuade the Governor to make a survey of hydroelectric power sites and file upon them in the name of the State.

Senator L. L. Dennett, counsel for the San Joaquin Valley Commercial Secretaries' Association, stated the opposition to Los Angeles might also lead to the introduction of a State amendment to relieve cities from tax exemptions on public utilities and make them amenable to the State Railroad Commission and subject to tax for State purposes.

DENY AMBASSADOR OFFICIAL HAS QUIT.

Reports from Santa Barbara that Grover A. Sholem, vice-president and general manager of the Pacific Coast division of the Ambassador Hotel System, had resigned his position to enter the building business in Los Angeles, were denied at the Ambassador here yesterday evening. Mr. Sholem, when questioned at his offices at the Alexandria yesterday, declined to confirm or deny the report, stating he would issue a statement later. Attaches at the Wilshire Boulevart hotel declared the report to be entirely without foundation.

GOT LICENSE TO WED; CHANGED MINDS; OTHERS USED THE PAPER, SAYS PASTOR.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

OAKLAND, July 16.—Suit for the annulment of a marriage in which the principals involved declare they did not participate, was filed in the Alameda county Superior Court here today.

Miss Estelle M. Harvey of Oakland filed the suit, asserting that she and Kelsey Hastings, to whom the records show her to be married, never were married. She stated that in April, 1921, she and Hastings procured a marriage license, but the ceremony was postponed. At a dance which the two attended, the complaint alleges, the license was taken from the pocket of Hastings and used by others.

Rev. J. M. Brown, Oakland pastor, says he performed a marriage ceremony for a couple giving the names of Hastings and Harvey, but declared they were not the principals involved in the present suit.

PARALYSIS PROBABLY ATTACKED HAWKER.

FAMOUS AVIATOR SUFFERED STROKE, LOST CONTROL OF PLANE, INQUEST THEORY.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

LONDON, July 16.—Harry G. Hawker, the famous aviator who was killed Tuesday last, probably suffered a sudden stroke of paralysis due to spinal disease which caused him to lose control of the machine in which he was flying, and crash to the earth, according to testimony introduced at the inquest over the body today.

Testimony concerning his physical condition came as a surprise in view of the fact that he was entered in the 200-mile aerial derby around London today.

A physician stated that Hawker had tuberculosis of the spine and that the disease had progressed so far that a very slight movement or strain would be sufficient to cause a rupture. The physician said he thought Hawker was seized with paralysis. The famous aviator had been advised to go to bed eighteen months ago, he asserted, but he had persisted in flying. Few of Hawker's friends knew the smiling aviator had a deadly disease.

FIGHT FOR RETURN OF ZION CITY PARKS.

RESIDENTS ASSERT COUNCIL HAS TURNED PROPERTY OVER TO VOLIVA.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

WAUKEGAN (Ill.) July 16.—That the public parks in Zion have been grabbed by the autocratic party and have been turned over to Wilbur Glenn Voliva, Zion overlord, who has caused them to be fenced in with padlocked gates, so that the members of the independent faction are prevented from enjoying them, are charges made in a bill for injunction against the Council of Waukegan today by proclamation of three residents, who filed the suit on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated.

The bill sets forth that, under the original plans of Dr. John A. Dowie, founder of the city, as is shown by an original plan, a large number of public parks were laid out and property was sold on the distinct understanding that the parks were to be a permanent feature. Lots which adjoined these parks were sold for more than others because it was held that their value was enhanced by the presence of the parks.

In 1912 the autocratic Council, according to the bill, "conspiring and confederating with Voliva, passed a resolution saying that all parks in the city were the sole property of the said Voliva."

Since that time it is charged that the Mayor and police have forbidden and prevented members from entering these parks on the ground that they are private property. To further carry out this idea it is claimed Voliva is paying taxes on this property. A number of arrests have taken place of persons who have trespassed in the parks.

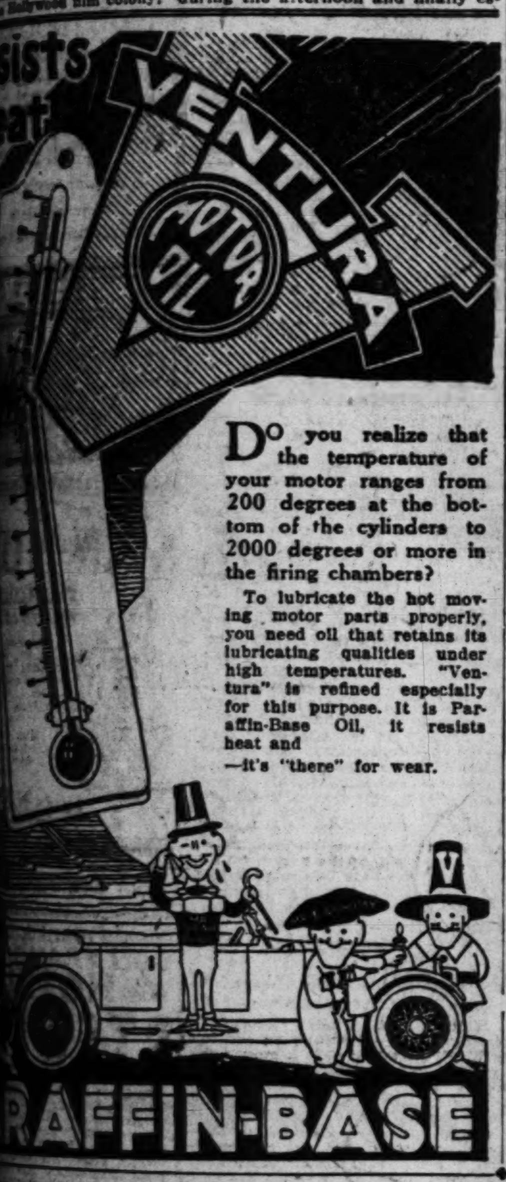
[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

LONDON, July 16.—A gap in an 11-year-old girl's upper arm bone was filled recently in a London hospital with a beef bone which was boiled forty-eight hours and shaped and put in place. A few weeks later the child had full use of her arm.



Do you realize that the temperature of your motor ranges from 200 degrees at the bottom of the cylinders to 2000 degrees or more in the firing chambers?

To lubricate the hot moving motor parts properly, you need oil that retains its lubricating qualities under high temperatures. "Ventura" is refined especially for this purpose. It is Paraffin-Base Oil, it resists heat and —it's "there" for wear.

Race to San Diego Feature for Today.

In to[illegible] private flyers will compete in many contests at the Speedway, beginning at 10 a.m.

Flying in parade formation, the military as well as some civilian aviators passed over Los Angeles and suburbs before noon as the first of the day's events. During this flight handbills were dropped advertising the tournament. When they reached the Speedway the planes went past the grandstand in review, thus starting the day's "stunts."

The ten-minute altitude contest was one of the most hotly contested numbers on the program. The first place honor went to a Loening monoplane of the U. S. Navy, which reached a height of 9500 feet in the ten-minute time limit. A Vought Navy biplane was second with a mark of 9000 feet and a De Haviland biplane with an 8500-foot altitude was third.

REMARKABLE DEMONSTRATION

Demonstration of how the air forces combat the sea and land forces was made by Loening two-seated combat monoplanes, De Haviland spotting planes, Vought one-seated fighter planes and Martin torpedo planes. The altitude contest followed.

The hundreds of spectators were given a clear insight into the troubles and conduct of a student making his first flight when the next number was run off. The bombing contest developed into a demonstration of accuracy when the several planes flew over the field dropping bombs at targets.

Among the other events on the program were acrobatics in formation drills; air fighting as done over the front in war time; exhibition of how huge planes drop torpedoes from various altitudes, and the destruction of a battleship, showing how a ship is destroyed by airplanes in theoretical war combat.

Events to be staged in today's program include an endurance race to San Diego and return, with eight competing aviators; the Jennie Scramble, with seven competitors; a two-heat relay race; a sport plane handicap; stunts such as wing-walking, plane-changing, aerial acrobatics and cranking propeller in midair, and a three-heat match automobile race between Tommy Milton and Roscoe Sarles, nationally famous speedway kings.

Venice donned her holiday clothes yesterday and welcomed thousands of Elks and their friends in a special entertainment planned for them. The Bills had enjoyed the hospitality of the Santa Monica, Ocean Park and Venice citizens last Tuesday and the way the visitors returned for the Venice festivities spoke well of the impression the beach cities had made.

ELKS REMAINING.

Although many of the reunion visitors left yesterday and the day before for their homes, thousands of them are taking advantage of their presence in the city to extend their visit several days beyond the regular time set aside for the official program events. It is especially noticeable that the large delegations, which came on special trains and cars from all sections of the country, have returned with their ranks much thinned on account of the attraction Southern California has held for them.

Among the representations leaving yesterday were the Seattle lodge members, Braddock, Pa., and other Pennsylvania groups, including Wilkinsburg. The railroad officials declare that thousands of the visitors have made private reservations for departure several days from now and that much of the exodus will be handled on the regular trains since the rush will not come all in a few days as when the visitors arrived.

MIAMI SENDS GREETING TO LOS ANGELES.

Message from Commerce Body in Florida Delivered to Chamber Head Here.

"Greetings from the greatest winter resort on the Atlantic to the greatest winter resort on the Pacific" were delivered to Secretary Wiggins of the Chamber of Commerce yesterday in the form of a letter from the president of the Miami, Fla., Chamber of Commerce. The letter was brought by T. J. McLean, manager of the largest theater in Miami, a delegate to the Elks' convention, who made the entire trip of approximately 4000 miles in a specially built three-ton touring car.

When he left Miami May 18 he baptized the rear wheels of the ocean-to-ocean car in the Atlantic. The baptism will be completed tomorrow when the front wheels dip into the Pacific on the beach at Venice.

Other letters of greeting were delivered by Mr. McLean yesterday to Mayor Cryer and the presidents of the realty board, advertising and automobile clubs from corresponding officials of Miami.

The Miami delegate, accompanied by R. S. Case, mechanic, and Jack Melton, cameraman, reached Los Angeles Friday, three days behind schedule. The delay was caused by the loss of a rim at Needles.

Two members of the party, C. G. Westwood and Paul Mulvrey, dropped out at St. Louis. They will be picked up on the return trip. The machine is equipped with a set of silver chimes valued at $500 and a complete motion-picture outfit. Films showing Miami scenes were shown at stopping points on the way here. The car is decorated in orange and black and carries panel paintings with descriptive data of Miami and its growth of 440 per cent between the 1910 and 1920 censuses. Miami disputes with Los Angeles the title of "largest growing city in the world," McLean declared yesterday.

CARNIVAL FOR ELKS ON STEAMSHIP YALE.

PALATIAL VESSEL WILL BE DECORATED COLORFULLY FOR DELEGATES.

As a final wind-up of the B. P. O. E. Grand Lodge reunion, a novel carnival will be given in honor of the large body of Elks who will depart on the steamship Yale for San Francisco tomorrow afternoon.

"According to R. F. Cullen, district passenger agent of the Los Angeles Steamship Company, elaborate plans have been made to give the sea-going Elks the time of their lives. The jollity will commence shortly after the palatial Yale sails from her dock at the harbor and will continue throughout the afternoon and into the night.

There will be confetti, serpentine rolls, balloons, funny hats and other favors galore, together with all the other fixings of an honest-to-goodness carnival. The Yale will be decorated particularly for the occasion. At the dance to be held in the luxurious veranda cafe ballroom in the evening, special jazz music will be provided. An elaborate dinner will also be served.

The festivities will not be confined to Elks but will be participated in by all the passengers on this particular trip of the Yale.

HAWKPLANE LATEST SHIP OF THE AIR.

ITALIAN AVIATOR INVENTS FLYER WITH MOVABLE WINGS, NO RUDDER.

[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

ROME, July 16.—An Italian aviator, who lives in Rome, has invented a new type of monoplane, quite different from the types existing up to the present. He calls it the "falcoplano," or "hawkplane."

The new airplane has movable wings, has no rudder and consequently no movability of the ail, and has starting and landing legs, which feature is calculated to eliminate the necessity of a landing field. Its maximum speed will be over 312 miles an hour and the minimum speed a few miles an hour. The new machine, in case of war, may be used as a pursuit plane on account of its great speed. It will be constructed in several sizes, the smallest of which will have but one machine gun, as armament. The inventor's name is Epaminonda Bertucci.

LITTLE ACTRESS DIES.

Eunice Elenor Woodruff, Featured in Many Productions, is Called.

Funeral services for little Miss Eunice Elenor Woodruff, featured in many motion pictures, will be conducted tomorrow at 10 a.m., at the Church of the Blessed Sacrament, Hollywood. The body is at the establishment of Utter & Ruppe, 4254 Moneta avenue.

The child, who was 11 years old, died Friday at the home of her parents, Mr. an Mrs. G. L. Woodruff, 1331 Fleming street, Hollywood. She entered pictures in 1916 with D. W. Griffith, and has appeared in several big productions, including "Crossed Currents," "Ashes," "Street Waif," "Virtuous Sinners" and two Dorothy Dalton productions. She was a skilled dancer.

TWO MURDERED BY UNIDENTIFIED MEN.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

ANN ARBOR (Mich.) July 16.—George Burg, 66 years old, farmer, of Saline Township, ten miles from here, and his farm hand, Henry Velmer, were shot to death in a barn on the farm yesterday. Miss Lucille Burg, a sister of the murdered man, saw four men run out of the barn and get into a gray automobile. The Burg family had recently come into possession of about $40,000.

Probably two hours before, the four men had called at the house and asked for water for the radiator of their car. She recognized the men running out of the barn as the men who called at the house.

GATHER TO PLAN FOR JUDGESHIPS.

Attorneys Are Told Method of Bar Association.

Lawyers Will Suggest Three Names to Governor.

Ballots to be in Secretary's Hands Next Saturday.

"I had no definite idea in mind when I asked the newspapers to announce this meeting," said J. W. Bell to sixty-five attorneys who assembled in Dept. One of the Superior Court at noon yesterday. "I have no ax to grind and I just thought it would be a good thing to have an open and free discussion of the various candidates for the three Superior Court judgeships to be filled in the near future by Gov. Stephens."

William J. Hunsaker was nominated as chairman, but declined, explaining that as he is chairman of the committee of the Los Angeles Bar Association appointed to carry out the suggestion of the Governor that a poll be taken on the appointments, he could not preside at this meeting, but that he would be glad to explain the proceedings that are being followed by the association to select men for the judgeships.

Mr. Bell was then made chairman.

"I move we adjourn," called Attorney A. W. Sorenson. The motion was seconded.

"It would be advisable to hear of the plan of the Bar Association from Judge Hunsaker," suggested Charles C. Montgomery.

"What were we all brought here for on a hot day?" was asked. The adjournment motion was withdrawn.

LETTER READ.

Attorney Hunsaker then made it clear that the meeting had not been called by the Bar Association, and read the letter which is to be sent out tomorrow to all attorneys in Los Angeles county. The ballot to be inclosed calls for the selection of four men in two groups—one of attorneys in the city and the other of attorneys in the county—and requires that, unless four names are voted upon in the respective groups, the ballot will be annulled. As stated in the letter, this is required in order "to prevent any 'single shooting,' which the committee feels is not consonant with the purposes of this plebiscite." The ballots are to be returned to the secretary of the Bar Association by 5 o'clock Saturday. In the event that a definite majority is shown for any four candidates in either of the two groups, these names will be forwarded to Gov. Stephens. If this result is not attained, a second ballot will be sent out containing the highest eight names in a group where a definite majority has not been shown and the attorneys will then vote on four of the eight names.

LIST SUGGESTED.

The list of attorneys who have been suggested to Gov. Stephens as available timber for the three judgeships is as follows:

Job in Mexico Causes Man to Jump Bail Here.

It now turns out that Charles Aceveda, whose bond of $1000 was declared forfeited in U. S. District Judge Bledsoe's court, on the failure of the defendant to appear to stand a second trial on the charge of looting cars of the Salt Lake Railway at Indio, of valuable goods, is now a chief mechanic in the employ of the Mexican government, having in charge the restoration of the railways in the republic, with headquarters in the City of Mexico. His contract calls for the payment of a salary of $1000 a month in Mexican money.

An effort was made to have Aceveda inform the Mexican government of his predicament and have the case postponed until fall, when he might get a leave of absence to attend to it, but Aceveda did not want his employers to know about his troubles, and thought it better policy to forfeit the bond.

PICTURES DISCUSSED.

City Club Told of Increasing Use of Films for Education.

The steadily increasing use of motion pictures for educational purposes was the subject of discussion at yesterday's luncheon of the City Club, the speakers being John A. Burgan of the U. S. Educational Films Corporation of this city and George Frederic Wheeler, director-general of the Atlas Educational Films Company of Chicago.

The speakers told how 80,000 schools and 44,000 churches in this country now include motion-picture projection machines as part of their equipment, but said that many of these machines are idle most of the time because of the dearth of suitable and interesting educational pictures. After telling of the value of motion pictures in teaching [illegible] canism, science, history, geography and other subjects, Mr. Wheeler expressed the hope that Los Angeles will lead the world in the development of this phase of the industry.

PORTLAND GETS SPUNK UP AND TRIPS BENGALS.

Heaver Pillette Too Much for Snarling Tigers; Poole and Wolfer Pull Off Swell Catches.

BY HARRY A. WILLIAMS.

Portland won a ball game yesterday which it should have won, and last night Walter McCredie took the ice packs off his throbbing temples.

Behind Pillette's pitching the Beavers bumped Vernon, 6 to 3, and if, with the help of Bro. Isaiah, they should perform the miracle of winning twice today, it would give them the series. Nothing of the kind, however, is anticipated in sporting circles. The count now stands three to two in favor of the Tigers, and the tin-horn gamblers and the bass-drum betters alike are backing them to salt the series.

SUNDAY CAP.

Bill Essick yesterday purchased a new Sunday cap to wear on the ball field to celebrate winning the series, and it wouldn't do to lose the same after making all these arrangements. Bill would look a fine bum wearing a new and fashionable bonnet in the hour of defeat.

Portland has lost a squad of games which it should have won, and won a few that it should have lost. This time it rearranged matters and grabbed one which really belonged to it.

The Beavers played in a way that hardly looked natural, and was more than human. Behind and in front of the pitching of Pillette, and on both sides of it, they hung on the ball like it was something good to eat. That is, when it came to them in the form of line drives.

HAND TO HAND.

At other times, requiring quick action, they passed the ball from hand to hand and base to base as though it was something too hot to hold. Poole with a one-handed stab of Schneider's liner nipped a big Tiger killing in the third, and Wolfer brought the bugs to their tired feet with a spectacular catch of French's foul in the next inning. The only approach to Poole's several good performances was Locker's grabbing of tall throws around the same base.

The Beavers bumped Tony Faeth in the fourth and fifth, and Shellenback's wildness forced across their final run in the eighth. Pillette was effective until the eighth, when a burst of belated batting netted two runs.

GIFT TALLY.

Aided by a gift tally, Vernon was the first to count. This was in the third, when Smith singled with one down. Chadbourne drove to Hale, who heaved wild to Krug, sending Smith to third. Locker dumped the ball to Pillette, who snapped it to Baker. J. Carlisle was ruled safe on a close play at the pan. It was then that Poole proved himself more than a mere puddle by hauling down Schneider's air-line drive, and stepping on first for a two-ply killing.

Portland went one run to the front in the fourth, and never was turned. Hale hammered a single, and scampered around when Poole squirted a double. The latter moved to third on Wolfer's sacrifice, and after Baker's walk, scored on Young's fly to Schneider. It was by pooling these two runs at the plate that Portland took the lead.

THREE IN FIFTH.

Visitors massed three in the fifth. Charley Gorman made a nice effort on Genin's infield hit, and then threw to the stand. Genin and his shadow raced to third on the error. It was a dead head between them. Both hit the base at the same time. Genin with a loud thud, while the shadow slid in silently, completely fooling Smith, who by this time had the ball. Krug walked. After Hannah had strangled Cox's foul, a mess of singles by Hale, Poole and Wolfer counted three.

Ham Hyatt was propped up at the plate to bat for Faeth in the fifth, but couldn't deliver in his present dilapitated condition. Frank Schellenback then took hold, and brushed the Beavers aside until the eighth, when Genin's infield hit and three passes forced in a run.

BASES FILLED.

Tigers filled the bases in the sixth, but a double play frosted fond hopes of a bountiful harvest. Schneider started it with a double through short which rocked Young, and took third on High's out. Hughie was back in the game after being vulcanized and retreaded. Hannah walked, and Pillette punctured French with a fast one, loading the sacks. Gorman grounded to Pillette, who tossed it into double, Baker to Poole, dry-cleaning the bases.

Locker opened the eighth with an infield hit to Young, who fell down and met the ball with his face. Schneider doubled him to third. Pillette soft-pedaled High on strikes, and walked Hannah. With the cushions in this condition, French singled, scoring two, and sending Truck to second. Genin grabbed Gorman's fly, and Schellenback suicided on strikes.

In addition to the regular inhabitants, a few hang-over brethern from the convention, were out. But it was by no means a large Saturday crowd. This was not due so much to falling off in attendance as to a reduction in the swelling of the individual feet. However, we are still a flat-footed community from watching too many parades.

"CHICK" EVANS VICTOR AGAIN.

Wins Western Amateur Golf Title for Sixth Time.

Knepper Weakens During Last Half of Match.

Champion Says He Will Not Compete Next Year.

BY JOSEPH DAVIS.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CHICAGO, July 16. — Defeating Rudy Knepper of Sioux City, Iowa champion, 3 and 2, in the thirty-six-hole final at the West Moreland country Club, Chick Evans of Edgewater retained the western amateur golf championship, which he won last year, 1 up, at Memphis from Bobby Jones.

It is the sixth time Chick has won the George R. Thorne trophy. Also it will be the last, as Evans announced during the prize presentations that six wins were too many for one player.

SHOOTING GOOD.

Today's final virtually was the chip shot against the long putt.

Chick, long famed for his iron shots, hit the green targets with great regularity, while the Iowa boy lacked this precision, and was in a defensive position most of the route.

Catching Chick a little off in the outgoing round in the morning, Knepper was able to turn 1 up, but so sound was Evans's play on the incoming nine that Knepper had no chance to win a hole by normal play, as he was unable to perform any miracles.

It was a tough task for the young contender, and simply indicates the difference in the play of a man who has reached the pinnacle in amateur golf and one who has not arrived, but is climbing fast.

GREW STRONGER.

Knepper had played through the Iowa championship the previous week and was tired, while Chick, who had a good rest after his play in Great Britain, grew stronger as the tournament progressed.

The intersectional character of the match attracted a crowd of 2000, many of whom saw the contest on the skip-stop plan—skipping a hole and making for the next green.

Whatever slim chance Knepper may have had was dissipated by a slump in the early stages of the game when some of his tee shots lodged in the rough. Shooting the first six holes in five strokes over par he lost four of them, and Evans, who turned 2 up in the morning, had the match sewed up with a lead of six holes.

Knepper, who had not won a hole since the eighth in the morning, finally broke the monotony by taking the ninth hole, so that at the twenty-seventh he was 5 down.

He fought on gamely and won three of the remaining holes, Chick taking one. This merely delayed the finish, a half in four, giving Evans the match on the sixteenth green.

Dear Sir:

I wish to state that in using Richfield gasoline in the fourth heat and final event which I won here yesterday I found it to be all you claim and more.

Thanking you for courtesy extended me, I beg to remain

RICHFIELD
The Gasoline of POWER

Beverly Hills Speedway, April 10.—Jimmy Murphy snatches victory from defeat — breaks all world's records for fifty miles. One more page of racing history.

After battling three losing heats, unable to place in the money, Murphy changes to Richfield gasoline and wins fourth and final heats in as sensational a "come-back" as was ever staged on any track!

Richfield will give YOU the same qualities that make it a favorite with many racing drivers. Greater power — quicker "pick-up" — longer mileage.

MILTON, SARLES IN DEAD HEAT.

That the grudge race between Tommy Milton and Roscoe Sarles around the big board bowl at Beverly Hills this afternoon is not to be a one-sided affair was proved yesterday when the race drivers tore off their qualifying trials.

Milton took the track first and ripped off five laps at the rate of 112.4 miles per hour. This is very close to the fastest time ever made on the Speedway, lacking only five-tenths of a mile of equaling Ralph De Palma's record. Immediately after Milton had qualified, Sarles gave his car the gun and snorted through five laps himself. It was discovered that his time was exactly the same as Milton's, and that he traveled at 112.4 miles per hour. It was a dead heat, with honors even.

With motors capable of developing this sort of speed the three-heat battle at Beverly Hills promises to keep them all awake this afternoon.

NTER-SIMPSON DUO VICTORIOUS

were out to view the new course and the matches.

FIFTY-FIFTY.

There were two other conflicts on the program in which amateurs came together against professionals, these ending on a fifty-fifty basis. Amateurs "Scotty" Armstrong and Everett Seaver toppled Professionals Frank Peebles and Arthur Clarkson, 2 and 1, and in the Ed Gayer-Ernest Martin and Max Behr-C. H. Palmer, Jr., match the pros came out on top by a score of 4 and 2.

The scores registered by the athletes afford ample proof of the severity of the course. Fowler has trapped it and bunkered it, taken advantage of all natural resources, such as barranca, hill and the ocean wind, and manufactured a real championship test of golf.

Jimmy Simpson had the best card of the day. The San Diego Golf and Country Club pro circulated the eighteen holes in 73 strokes. MacDonald Smith of San Francisco was a close second with 74, and Dr. Paul Hunter required 75.

NOT SENSATIONAL.

Armstrong had an 82, Seaver 85, Peebles 78 and Clarkson 80. Cards of the other four players were not available, but none reported anything sensational.

As all of the matches were four-ball affairs none of the scores are authentic, conceded putts of anywhere from three feet to fifteen feet being represented in each man's score. Then, too, winter lies were permitted, but this was necessary because of the condition of the fairways.

As shown by the tally sheet Jimmy Simpson was the only man who camped dangerously close to Old Man Par's tail, his 73 being one stroke over. Simpson played a beautiful game from tee to green, and was rarely in trouble.

Dr. Hunter's game, as usual, was marked by his magnificent recovery shots from disappointing localities. It was a good bet with the gallery that whenever Dr. Hunter encountered difficulty on the course he was bound to score a birdie. One of the best instances of this occurred on the eleventh hole, par 5, where he made a birdie following a poor second shot, his approach being dead to the pin.

MacDonald Smith was a shade behind Simpson in the matter of score, but his irons played him tricks at times. His shots from the tee with the wood were things of beauty. Jack Neville made the prize tee shot going to the sixth, distance, 375 yards. The wind was behind his back. His ball carried to the trap that guards the green about fifty yards away, and outdistanced all others by many yards.

A TOUGH HOLE.

The short fourth, distance 168 yards, was a nemesis to all but Simpson. MacDonald Smith and Neville drove out of bounds against the wind, and the air currents carried Dr. Hunter's ball into the trap at the right.

Some of the boys had a tough battle going out, but did better comin home. Everett Seaver had a 45, but bucked up and took 40 in. Frankie Peebles shot 43 out, but settled down for a commendable 36 in.

Long Drivers C. H. Palmer, Jr., and Ed Gayer had quite a combat, Gayer sinking one in the ozone on the first nine and never finding it.

CARPENTIER TO SEEK A RETURN MATCH.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, July 16.—Notwithstanding defeat by Jack Dempsey in Jersey City on July 2, Georges Carpentier, it is reported in boxing circles here, will seek a return match for the championship, believing that by adopting an open style of battle he may be able to win.

Should Georges again be matched with Dempsey and the bout held in New York State, where the boxing rules permit fifteen rounds to a decision, he might win the championship by outpointing Dempsey. Carpentier's friends believe that he is clever enough to box Dempsey and stay away for fifteen rounds.

STAUBER NIFTY WITH SHOTGUN.

Turns in High Target Score at Vernon Club.

Lou Reed, With a Total of 197, is the Runner-Up.

Sport Will be on Tap Again This Morning.

With no parades to upset things and street-car service back to normalcy, the second day of registered shooting at the sixth annual registered trapshooting tournament of the Vernon Gun Club came off yesterday with great success.

Two hundred targets from 16 yards in events of twenty-five birds each was the day's program, and they kept the contending "long Tom" toters on their toes at all stages of the game.

IS DANGEROUS.

What's more, A. J. Stauber, a shooter that is proving to be dangerous to the many champs and near-champions at target bustin' in these parts, was high gun on the 200 targets, breaking 199.

This Stauber shooter was also high on 400 targets, the first block of 200 being shot at on Friday. For the two days' shooting Stauber has broken 392.

Lou Reed, who went high on Friday's block, came out second yesterday with a score of 197x200, and stands in second place on the 400 birds with 390.

FINISHES THIRD.

Bob Bungay, who has won more shoots than a cat has means of escape from an enemy hound, came out third with 195. The Venetian stands third on the 400 targets with 388, or four birds behind Stauber, the high man.

Only 100 more registered sixteen-yard targets remain of the tournament, and will be bumped over this morning, starting at 10:30.

Close on the heels of Bungay for third honors is B. A. Gillispie, who like thousands of others, has forsaken Arizona and Oklahoma for a home here and our wonderful Vernon shooting grounds.

SHOOTING FAMILY.

Young Gillispie comes from a shooting family. His father, F. A. Gillispie, has been a well-known clay-bird exterminator for years. B. A. stands fourth in the tournament so far with 387 kills.

After the fifth hundred birds have been shattered this morning, President A. W. Bruner will put on the 100-target handicap and following that event the trophies, moneys and what nots will be awarded the high gunners.

PRIZES UP.

The Hotel Van Nuys, Vernon Gun Club and Hi Everding trophies are the prizes up. Now that it is learned that the Los Angeles Gun Club's head has resigned and that the club will change hands, more than likely the Vernon organization will become the shooting center of California. It is ideally located, and some of the greatest scores ever recorded in trapshooting history have been made there at Bruner-Kimble blackbirds. Scores follow:

NEW YORK, July 16.—Ran into Eddy Kane, manager for Tommy Gibbons, as the smart little fellow was making tracks for Madison Square Garden this afternoon. Edward is all smoked up over the prospects of his charge being sent in with Georges Carpentier for a trip at Tex Rickard's big park in Jersey City next October. Kane has submitted his "figgers" to Tex and denies that there was any attempt at holding up the promoter.

"Tom is away up in the Minnesota woods and will stay there all summer," said Eddy by way of greeting. "Nothing doing on any fight stuff for Tom during the hot spell, he never works in the summer. Of course, he is tickled at the chance of getting on with the Frenchman, and will be there like a duck, if he happens to be Mr. Rickard's choice in the matter.

"There is an erroneous report being spread broadcast that Gibbons has been beaten several times by Harry Greb. As a matter of fact Tom never lost a fight in his life. He boxed Greb three times, winning the first two starts decisively and getting the verdict from a majority of the writers on his last jaunt with Greb in Pittsburg. However, we are going to let results speak for themselves and do not propose to enter into any controversy. Just watch our smoke when Tom gets started against the Frenchman."

Tex Rickard skipped the town today to spend the week-end at Spring Lake. The big promoter will doubtless close all arrangements for the Carpentier match early next week.

HEILMAN AGAIN LEADS PARADE.

Passes Tris Speaker in the Batting Carnival.

Sisler Still in Front of the Base Purloiners.

Roger Hornsby Retains Stick Honors in National.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CHICAGO, July 16.—Harry Heilman, the slugging outfielder of the Detroit Tigers, last week batted himself into first place in the race for batting honors in the American League with Tris Speaker, the Cleveland world's champions' pilot, who stepped out in front a week ago.

Heilman boosted his average to .432, compared with .409 a week ago. Speaker lost 21 points, his average dropping from .415 last week to .394, the same figure held by Ty Cobb, the Detroit manager, who has not been in the game the last few weeks because of injury. Tobin of St. Louis is fourth with .375, and Babe Ruth of the Yankees next with .371.

BABE HITS IT.

Up to the recent New York-Chicago series Ruth had been unable to get a home run in Chicago this year. Little Dick Kerr, who set the "home-run king" back during the last invasion of the White Sox in New York, pitched the final game in Chicago, and fell the victim of Ruth's bat. Chicago was the last of the American League cities to come in on Ruth's string.

Ruth is far ahead of his last season's record for homers, having scored thirty-five circuit drives. He also has scored more runs than any other player in the league, having crossed the plate eighty-nine times. Although he has only 106 hits, he leads the league in total bases with 245.

FAILS TO ADD.

George Sisler, the St. Louis star, failed to add to his string of stolen bases during the past week, but his sixteen thefts continues high. The averages are those of players who have participated in fifty or more games. Other leading batters: Severeid, St. Louis, .367; Williams, St. Louis, .364; Veach, Detroit, .358; Sisler, St. Louis, .357; E. Collins, Chicago, .354.

Cutshaw, the first sacker of the Pittsburg Pirates, is making Roger Hornsby, the St. Louis star, step lively to retain the lead among the National League batters. Cutshaw, who boosted himself up to second place a week ago by steady hitting, has increased his position appreciably.

ROGER SLUMPS.

This week the averages show him hitting .382 compared with .365 a week ago. Hornsby slumped eight points, but still retains the lead with .420. Cy Williams of the Phillies boosted himself to third place with an average of .364.

George Kelly, the slugger of the Giants, again leads Irish Meusel of Philadelphia for circuit drive honors. Meusel failed to add to his string during the past week, while Kelly drove out his thirteenth home run. Frisch of New York and Carey of Pittsburg are having a merry race for the stolen-base honors. Carey leads with twenty-three thefts, while Frisch is one behind. Frisch, however, leads the league as a run-getter, having crossed the plate seventy times.

Other leading batters: Grimes, Chicago, .360; Young, New York, .357; Meusel, Philadelphia, .354; McHenry, St. Louis, .352; Mann, St. Louis, .351; Fournier, St. Louis, .346; Maranville, Pittsburg, .345.

TOUGH LUCK HITS CAMBRIDGE TEAM.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SWAMPSCOTT (Mass.) July 16. The hard hand of ill luck struck the Oxford-Cambridge track team another resounding blow today when it became known that H. B. Stallar of Cambridge, England's great distance runner, had developed a lameness in the left foot that may keep him out of the meet with the Harvard-Yale team at Cambridge next Saturday.

JAFFE STILL AHEAD IN CHESS STRUGGLE.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

ATLANTIC CITY (N. J.) July 16. Charles Jaffe of New York retained his lead in the chess masters' tourney despite a defeat today by Stasch Mlotkowski of Los Angeles, in the eighth session after forty-two moves. Samuel Factor, Chicago, defeated J. B. Harvey, Feneton Falls, Ont., after only fourteen moves.

RICHARDS WINS AND IS TO PLAY HAYES.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

INDIANAPOLIS, July 16.—Vicent Richards, Yonkers, N. Y., by defeating John Hennessey, of Indianapolis, in the final round of the western tennis championship here this afternoon, won the right to play Walter T. Hayes of Chicago, western title holder, in the challenge round tomorrow. The score today was 7-5, 6-3, 6-3.

AUTHORITIES TO GET AFTER RACING PEOPLE.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WINDSOR (Ont.) July 16.—Efforts to prevent betting at race tracks in Ontario are being made by the provincial authorities. In a test suit to be brought at the direction of Atty.-Gen. Raney, a complaint has been preferred against the Windsor Jockey Club, charging it with operating a common gambling house.

SAN FRANCISCO TO BUILD A SPEEDWAY.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, July 16.—Construction of an automobile speedway here is planned by the Motor Car Dealers' Association of San Francisco, it was announced today. The organization has appointed William Hughson to visit the automobile race tracks at Tacoma and Cotati, near Santa Rosa, and study their construction.

BRITISH GOLFERS WIN.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

LONG BRANCH, N. J., July 16. After riding most of the night in an automobile, in which they were being carried from the Shawnee open tournament to the Norwood Golf club, George Duncan, former British open champion, and his brilliant partner, Abe Mitchell, today defeated Jock Hutchison, the winner of the St. Andrews tournament, and James Donaldson, the Home Club professional, in a thirty-six-hole best-ball match, 4 up. The British pair gained the advantage in the morning and although the Americans cut the lead down by winning two holes in the afternoon, the invaders came back at the seventeenth and eighteenth holes, taking the last with a pair of birdie 3's.

Followers of the match, reticent to believe the stories that have been told of Mitchell's wonderful driving power, are now ready to accept as gospel truth any and all claims that may be made in behalf of the English star. Throughout the entire journey here today, Mitchell was nearly always out in front and at the eleventh hole in the afternoon round the siege gun carried the green from the tee, a distance of 324 yards. Most of his drives carried 300 yards but the feature came at the eleventh.

Hutchison was the winner of the $100 purse offered for the lowest score made in the afternoon round. The holder of the British title was out in 35 and home in 36 for a 71, which eclipsed the best mark of the British pair by three strokes.

Mitchell had the best score in the morning round, with a 71, followed by Duncan with 72. Hutchison shot a 76 and Donaldson a 71. In the afternoon Hutchison led with his 71, Duncan came next with 74 and Mitchell and Donaldson had a 75 and a 77, respectively.

JOE GEDEON TO TESTIFY.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CHICAGO, July 16.—William Burns and Joe Gedeon, believed to be the chief witnesses upon whose testimony the State hopes to convict the seven former White Sox stars and of four alleged gamblers will be brought to the criminal court building by Pinkerton detectives. They will be interviewed by attorneys representing the indicted men, in an effort to get a line on the nature of testimony.

Burns, a former White Sox pitcher, and Gedeon, former second baseman for the St. Louis Browns, are said to have been in the custody of Pinkerton men for more than a month and investigators for the defense have been unable to locate them. On appeal of the defense, Judge Hugo Friend ordered the State produce the witnesses and let the defendant's attorneys interview them.

It is believed they will give very damaging testimony and the defense is extremely anxious to get some advance knowledge of what they will have to combat.

Shortly after this interview the trial will begin and the following eleven defendants will be on hand: Edward "Eddie" Cicotte, pitcher; Charles "Swede" Risberg, shortstop; Claude "Lefty" Williams, pitcher; Arnold "Chick" Gandil, first baseman; George "Buck" Weaver, third baseman; Oscar "Happy" Felsch, outfielder; Joseph "Shoeless Joe" Jackson, outfielder.

Carl Zork, Louis and Ben Levy, and David Zelzer, alleged gamblers.

Eighteen men in all were indicted in connection with the world's series scandal, but the other seven either escaped service or successfully fought extradition from other States.

Federal Judge Landis, supreme baseball dictator, it is understood, is ready to furnish any person connected with baseball, whose testimony is desired.

FEAR FOR SAFETY OF ARTHUR IRWIN.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

BOSTON, July 16.—Arthur A. Irwin, long associated with professional baseball as player, manager, coach and scout and credited with being the inventor of the modern catcher's glove, was regarded today as a suicide. He was missing from the steamer Calvin Austin when it arrived here from New York. Friends to whom Irwin had remarked that he was "going home to die," said he was depressed by illness and probably jumped overboard.

BOOZE AND AUTO WILL MEAN JAIL

Fines Ineffective, Decision of Three Judges Here.

Public Must be Protected, is Mutual Agreement.

Man With Wife and Child is Assessed Five Hundred.

Judges Avery, Reeve and Willis of the Superior Court have mutually agreed to impose jail sentences on offenders found guilty of driving automobiles while intoxicated. Only in cases of extreme extenuating circumstances will the leniency of a fine instead of a jail sentence be given.

This understanding was concurred in by the three judges yesterday.

"We have talked the situation over carefully and feel that conditions existing today and the increasing number of violations call for drastic action in the interest of public safety," said Judge Avery.

"Notwithstanding the fact that prohibition is in force, there is an unquestioned increase in the number of cases of this nature coming before our courts and the courts generally throughout the country. I feel that the situation is critical, made doubly so because of the dangerous manufactured liquor that is apparently being consumed."

"I heartily concur in Judge Avery's ideas and Judge Willis stands with us in this decision," said Judge Reeve. "We stand solid in our determination to help put a stop to the driving of automobiles by anybody when intoxicated. There is but one remedy, the jail sentence, and we have decided to exercise it.

BAD LIQUOR BLAMED.

"To show you the effect of some of the liquor that is being drunk nowadays, I can cite a recent case in which an intoxicated driver cut a corner at high speed; an officer blocked him and forced him into the curb and in the time that it took the officer to walk over to the automobile the man became insensible, with his head lying across the steering wheel.

"Apparently ether or something similar is being used in some of the cider that is being sold, judging from the number of cases in which drivers have gone to sleep at the wheel or have passed out under conditions which endangered lives and property. The plea, 'I drank nothing but cider and thought it was perfectly harmless,' will not carry any weight in the future. If men do not know absolutely what they are drinking they had better leave it all alone and stick to plain water."

"That is exactly the point," interrupted Judge Avery. "Most men who attempt to drive an automobile while under the influence of liquor deliberately make the mistake of filling the wrong tank and with the wrong tank filled an automobile becomes a dangerous instrument from which the public must be protected. The guilty defendant too often feels that a heavy penalty imposed is purely to punish him. He should be punished, but the real object today of the jail sentences that are to be imposed is to afford protection for life and property by putting a stop to the criminal violations of the law."

FINES INEFFECTIVE.

There are three provisions for judgment for violation of Section 17 of the Motor Vehicle Act—to impose imprisonment in the State penitentiary, imprisonment in the County Jail or a fine of from $500 to $5000. The judges believe that fines are not stopping violations and intend to try jail sentences as a much needed remedy.

"We feel that fair warning has been given," they said.

E. A. Pennington appeared before Judge Avery yesterday for sentence on a plea of guilty in a case of this kind. He was fined $500; given until August 1 to pay it; released on his own recognizance and has the alternative of serving 250 days in the County Jail at $2 per day.

"Because you have a wife and minor child I let you off with a fine," said the court in pronouncing sentence. "But I sound a warning at this time that from now on I shall impose jail sentences on defendants found guilty of driving automobiles while intoxicated."

TESTS MADE.

Dr. Beggs, who was in charge of the Emergency Hospital when this defendant was brought in last April 18, said that he put him through the tests to determine his sobriety and made a report on the customary blank forms furnished for that purpose, stating that "the breath was alcoholic; the gait was staggering; the pupils widely dilated and that the pulse was beating at the rate of 120 per minute. His speech was overbearing and insulting. His station was Rhomberg 3 plus." He had driven his machine into the rear of another automobile in which a woman and a child were riding.

The Rhomberg test is the one used to determine the equilibrium of an intoxicated person and 3 plus, in medical parlance, means the limit for which a man can stand with his eyes shut and in the position he is placed by the medical attendant and 4 plus means extreme intoxication, under which a man is unable to stand without falling. These facts are given as the Rhomberg test is now being applied in all cases of this nature.

ON ASSAULT CHARGE.

H. M. Foster Jailed; Frank Donnelly in Serious Condition.

Frank Donnelly, 118 East Third street, is at the Golden State Hospital suffering from concussion of the brain and three lacerations of the scalp and face, and H. M. Foster, a garage man, employed at 110 East Third street, is in the City Jail on a charge of assault with a deadly weapon.

Police charge Foster with attacking Mr. Donnelly with a large piece of gas pipe during an altercation which took place between them at the place where Foster is employed. The arrest was made by Detective Sergeants Finlinson, Moore and Rico.

TO MY PATRONS AND FRIENDS---

It is an utter impossibility to describe in befitting words the magnificence of this sale. The furniture and furnishings represent a cost of over $100,000. To give in detail a description of the numerous articles to be offered would require too much space. One must see this mansion and the different articles therein in order to fully appreciate this Castle and its elaborate furnishings. Upon entering the Tudor Gothic Hall one is amazed at the wondrous splendor. Famous paintings by the most noted artists of Europe greet you on all sides, antique vases and bric-a-brac collected from all over the world surround you, and the beautiful oriental rugs which have been gathered by the owner in the Orient are the finest specimens that can be found anywhere. The magnificent Chime clock, Steinway & Sons parlor grand piano, Edison Diamond Disc phonograph, furniture and furnishings are a feast that the eye will not soon forget. Without any fear of contradiction, I can truly say that this is the largest and most marvelous sale of its kind ever conducted at Public Auction in the United States. I will personally take time to explain the history of the more important pieces, giving a full description of the paintings, telling where the various rugs were bought, how they were made, and answer any other questions concerning the numerous articles offered for sale. Dr. Alfred G. Castles, the owner, will be on the premises during the entire sale. Catalogues will be furnished at the sale.

REAL ESTATE

Castle Sans Souci is contained in ground 109 feet by 197 feet; implying park beautifully landscaped; has palm drives, pergolas, Roman tables and seats, and is in the highest state of horticultural development, in the heart of Hollywood's exclusive residential section on the heights, commanding a most magnificent scenic environment. Two great lions guard the entrance to the mansion. They are made of Carrara marble, and for 144 years guarded one of the palaces of the Doges of Venice. The massive front door of the Castle opens into a great Tudor Gothic hall, in which recently, during the war, 200 of our army and navy boys, with their sweethearts, waltzed to dreamy music. The imposing windows are all Cathedral style, with art glass from the Royal Art Works of Munich. A famous Van Dyke painting of Charles the First adorns the wall above the long wide imposing Tudor Gothic mantel. Behind the mantel is contained a space for a pipe organ. Soft lights gleam amid the mural paintings of the old and modern masters. While around the hall stand dummies in suits of armour, reminding one of the old days, when the Crusaders fell exhausted under the heavy raiment. Each of the sixteen rooms in the mansion represents some special period in the medieval history. RUSH WORK ON SECOND DRYDOCK

Completion Expected Within Next Sixty Days.

Dredging for Big Slip Soon to be Started.

Supplemental Facilities Are Also Assured.

Work on the test boring of the Southwestern Shipbuilding Company's slip at East San Pedro, preparatory to the dredging of the slip where the new $1,250,000 dry dock of the company is to be established within the next sixty days, was progressing rapidly yesterday.

The installing of the second huge 12,000-ton dry dock at Los Angeles Harbor is the first of a series of improvements of the first magnitude planned by the shipbuilding company. Announcement of the tentative plans of the company for the development of its twenty-five-acre unoccupied site between the slip and the main channel was made Friday by J. A. Talbot, its vice-president and general manager.

The announcement of these plans was considered of great importance, considering the fact that it had been currently rumored for weeks that the Southwestern was planning to dismantle its entire plant and offer its equipment for sale following the completion of contracts next October.

MEANS GAIN.

In place of losing one of the most important industries with the slump in shipbuilding activity, Los Angeles Harbor is to have an even finer plant which will become the center of one of the greatest commercial shipping areas in the United States.

In the near future the center of activity at the plant will pass from the shipbuilding ways, where twenty-five large steel steamships have been built in the last three years, to the new 12,000-ton dry dock, where repairs to some of the largest vessels operating on the Pacific will be made.

Following the widening of the main channel of the harbor, work on which is expected to begin in the near future, the unoccupied acreage adjacent to the Southwestern plant will be transformed into a steamship and railroad terminal, rivaled only by the Bush and a few other of the largest terminals in the country

WORK ON SLIP.

Plans have been prepared for the dredging of a 1400-foot slip, installation of docks and warehouses on both sides of the same and also on the company's frontage on the main channel. The site will be interlaced with railroad tracks of the Salt Lake Railroad.

Among the most important of the improvements planned is the installation of immense Gantry cranes capable of picking up loaded freight cars from the track in the yard and placing them on the docks alongside the steamships loading or discharging cargo.

Space will be set aside for coal bunkers, where modern equipment will be installed to enable large ocean liners to coal in rapid time. A group of storage tanks will be erected for receiving vegetable oils which will be imported in tank steamers from the Orient.

WITHIN SIXTY DAYS.

The first of these vast improvements, the floating dry dock, will be in operation within the next two months. The Southwestern company will operate this dry dock in conjunction with the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Company. The latter concern is expected to send a great quantity of repair work to the local harbor from its numerous plants at San Francisco. After sending one of its big dry docks to Los Angeles Harbor, the Bethlehem concern will still have two floating and two graving docks at their Union Iron Works plant at South San Francisco, as well as docks at Hunter's Point and Alameda.

VEGETABLE RATE FIGHT TO CAPITAL.

Southland Growers to Plan Seeking of Lower Railway Tariffs at Washington.

Prepared to carry their fight for lower freight rates to official Washington, through the American Farm Bureau, a committee of prominent vegetable growers of Southern California will meet tomorrow to discuss additional phases of the situation, which was laid before Gov. Stephens yesterday at a session attended by almost a dozen officials and leading members of various growers' organizations.

Deputy State Market Director Britt, who also attended yesterday's conference, will meet tomorrow with the committee, composed of Thomas O'Neill, president of the California Vegetable Union; C. J. Cogan and J. W. Newman, secretary Coachella Valley Onion Growers' Association.

In addition to these four men, the following attended yesterday's meeting in the offices of the Governor: E. D. McSweeney, potato grower of the San Gabriel Valley and Temecula; N. Newton, Orange county vegetable grower; W. G. Mitchell, manager of the Irvine vegetable ranch in Orange county; T. H. Lambert, director of the potato department of Los Angeles County Farm Bureau; J. H. Williams, grower of miscellaneous vegetables, Compton, and J. R. Watson, president of the San Bernardina County Growers' Association.

Deplorable conditions have been brought about by the asserted excessive freight rates, the producers told the Governor, and Mr. Williams declared practically all the Southern California vegetable growers are hard hit because of inability to find profitable markets.

It was brought out that the vegetable market for the Southern California growers is between here and Chicago and for that reason there is no relief by taking advantage of lower rates offered by the water route to eastern seaboard points.

In connection with the determination to take the matter up in Washington through the American Farm Bureau, it is recalled that an appeal had been made to Gov. Stephens, who in turn appealed to President Harding and the latter referred the case to the Interstate Commerce Commission. That body has the matter under consideration.

FIVE INJURED IN SMASHUP ON HIGHWAY.

Two of Four Women from Los Angeles, Two from the North; Man Also Hurt.

Four women, two from Los Angeles and two from San Francisco, and one Los Angeles man, were injured yesterday in an automobile collision on Ventura Boulevard near Calabasas. All were brought to the Receiving Hospital for treatment.

According to reports made to the Sheriff's office, a large touring car driven by Mrs. O. Cook of San Francisco and carrying Mrs. Thomas Parent, 35, and Mrs. Elizabeth Ludwig, 53, also of that city, crashed into a lighter car in which were Mrs. Katherine Mackey, Miss Sarah Reese and J. T. Granger of 1645 Arapahoe street. Both cars were smashed and the occupants were thrown to the roadway.

The most seriously injured, Receiving Hospital surgeons say, is Mrs. Mackey, who has a broken knee cap and abrasions on the face and head. All the others suffered severe abrasions on the head, face and body, and Mr. Granger has in addition an injury to his eyes from broken glass.

The injured were brought to Los Angeles by T. N. Murray of Owensmouth, where they had been taken for first-aid treatment. According to Mr. Murray, the party of San Francisco women had been to Los Angeles and were on their way home when the collision occurred at a sharp turn. The Los Angeles party had been visiting the Sequoia country and were returning to their home.

Port Notes.

The San Pedro Launch & Towboat Company's tug Standard No. 2 sailed from San Francisco for this port yesterday, beginning one of the most difficult towage feats ever attempted on the Pacific Coast.

The tug has in tow a huge derrick barge with a 95-foot boom, the barge being 100 feet long and equipped to handle a 25-ton lift; two barges of 500 and 700 tons capacity, respectively, and the gasoline towboat Joe & Dick, of 100 horse-power, the five craft all coming down the coast in tandem style with the Standard No. 2 in the lead.

The Joe & Dick is the latest addition to the tugboat fleet of the San Pedro Launch & Towboat Company, and was purchased in San Francisco several weeks ago. The derrick barge, which will be double the size of any other in the harbor at the present time, will be used for lightering cargo from ships.

The British oil tanker Lompoc, under charter to the Union Oil Company, will arrive at Los Angeles Harbor today from Talara Bay, Peru, coming here to load a full cargo of oil for Antofagasta, Chile.

FILM MAN'S FATE HANGS IN BALANCE.

Convicted of Aiding Pyle in Crime of Which Latter is Acquitted; Will Fight.

Just what will happen in the further proceedings affecting the fate of W. J. Conner, convicted of aiding and abetting Edward J. Pyle, in misapplying the funds of the National Bank and Trust Company of Pasadena, a charge of which Mr. Pyle has been acquitted, is somewhat in the air.

Under the order of U. S. District Judge Bledsoe, Conner will be before the court for sentence tomorrow afternoon, and a motion in arrest of judgment or to vacate the verdict as to Conner is likely to be made.

There seems to be a divergence of opinion whether, with Mr. Pyle acquitted, Conner can be held. The jury has held in the acquittal of Mr. Pyle that he did not misapply the funds of the bank. Can Conner be held for aiding and abetting Mr. Pyle in doing something that the jury has declared Mr. Pyle did not do? It seems to be agreed that the highest courts have never passed on the point.

Whatever the preliminary disposition of the case tomorrow, there is certain to be a strong fight put up in behalf of Conner. The situation is one to hold the attention of Judge Bledsoe and the appellate courts for a brief period, at least.

Judge Bledsoe's activities the present week will consist entirely of calling the law and motion calendar tomorrow and the naturalization examination Friday. He will have no jury trials.

With Judge Trippet away for two weeks on a vacation, it will be up to Judge Sawtelle to dispose of the current jury cases, and these will consist for the most part of prosecutions for violation of the Eighteenth Amendment.

HELD AS BURGLARS.

Two Girls, Charged with Operating in Fashionable District, Arrested.

Gertrude Walters, 21, alias Gertrude Johnson, and Margaret Sharp, 20, were arrested by the police yesterday and booked on charges of burglary. Police are looking for three men said to have been their accomplices.

A quantity of loot from three burglaries in the West Adams district, said to have been perpetrated by the girls and their male companions, has been recovered by police, who say that several other burglaries covering a period of three months, will be traced directly to them.

Police state that the girls operated by ringing the door-bells of well-to-do homes, and if there was no response, they would enter by using skeleton keys. If they found occupants at home they would pretend they were soliciting laundry work, the police say.

Ladies of the Elks who visited the Ladies' Plunge at 16th and Flower streets all swam without exertion during their first lesson, although many of them had never before worn a bathing suit. They were astounded at the ease of propulsion of the new style of swimming which they found much easier than walking! Many from the East had never before beheld such graceful swimming as they saw at the Wilkinson College, where ladies were swimming the length of pool (92 feet) in four or five strokes without splashing. Our pupils learn to swim as if by magic and swim miles with ease. Practice and six lessons are sufficient to make you graceful and proficient; the Wilkinson system is a great diversion, learn the new-style swimming without exertion. TELLS HOW TO BEAUTIFY HAIR

Has Devoted Over Forty Years of Study to Hair and Scalp Troubles.

Prof. John H. Austin, bacteriologist, hair and scalp specialist of Chicago, who now has offices at Hamburger's, says that it is really remarkable that so few men and women nowadays possess an abundance of beautiful, healthy hair. Prof. Austin is probably right in saying that so little is generally known about the hair and scalp that when a little trouble actually arises the person afflicted turns to anything recommended by anybody, and usually the results are disastrous.

Science has proved that different ailments of the hair and scalp require different treatments. The particular trouble with which your hair or scalp is afflicted must be known before it can be intelligently treated.

Guesswork is of no prcaitcal value concerning hair troubles. Prof. Austin has found that only a powerful microscope can determine the exact trouble with which the hair or scalp is afflicted.

FREE MICROSCOPIC EXAMINATION of the hair and scalp. Both men and women invited. Private offices at Hamburger's, second floor. Hours, 10 to 12 and 2 to 4.—[Advertisement.

POSLAM OFTEN ENDS PIMPLES IN 24 HOURS!

Folks who know what Poslam can do don't worry any more about pimples!

Whenever any of these annoying eruptions appear, they just dab them at night with that gentle, healing ointment. It is so concentrated that by the next morning the pimples have sometimes dried away. If they aren't all gone then, touch them again with a bit of Poslam. This seldom fails to do the trick, and it is so nearly flesh-colored that it is hardly noticeable on the face.

Washing the face with Poslam Soap and hot water helps the treatment wonderfully, and the regular use of Poslam Soap tends to KEEP the complexion clear. For free samples write to POSLAM, 243 W. 47th St., New York.—[Advertisement.

Los Angeles began to the realization of Mr. valiant prophecy. Danile the Los Angeles cellar- aided by two 2 per cent in- from San Francisco, swooped as they say in the evening on several places so and with such happy per- it was evident crime was

But in the Mr. O'Leary and his attackes, or aides-de-stamp, as they formerly were called, found evidence of a conspiracy to diminish whisky drinking. Beer, of the good, old 5 per cent, was being sold at four bits a flagon, and many barrels of such were confiscated and will be used for hospitals and other institutions where the inmates are fortunately ill.

This, however, does not mean that the conspirators have succeeded entirely in supplanting beer for whisky in the bootleg, corner drug store, soda fountain, or restaurant trades. Liquors are still obtainable in quality and quantity that make the patrons go home much the Angeleno Heights car, which is to say an unescorted cow, travels. The Creme Yvette hiccough is still audible between numbers of the orchestra.

'TIS NOVEL MODE.

Mr. Exnicios evidently has set out on a novel prohibition-enforcement program, novel for California. The bone-dry administration of latter times, if the evidence of courts is to be considered, planned to cause a drouth by hastening the consumption of wines, beers, whiskies and cordials so that the populace might have it over as quickly as possible. But the new administrator of thirst intends, judging from his impassioned avowals, to take away those supplies that come from, who knows where? for the government warehouses are now well guarded against outside, inside or second-story operators.

Booze, as it is vulgarly called, may be obtained in Los Angeles in many varieties, and in many sorts of places. The more expensive restaurants have plenty of a fair grade of whisky, mostly bourbon, some rye, rarely good Scotch. The tea rooms, formerly patronized chiefly by women and men they dragged there, are now chiefly patronized by men, and the women they drag there. In some of these it often is difficult to get real tea, because the high-signs are so many that one gives them inadvertently, as it were. Scotch, rye, bourbon, port, sauterne, etc., are more often in the pot than Oolong, Ceylon, English breakfast, gunpowder or orange pekoe.

Such of the higher-classed and priced places are by the hundreds. After Mr. Exnicios suppresses them, he will have several thousand other institutions to tend to before the month is up and California is made as dry as the Arroyo Seco ought to be. There are the places in Little Italy where red ink, the technical name for table d'hote lubricant, flows as freely as the waters of the Gulf Stream. In many sections of the East Side jackass brandy, so-called because of a peculiar swelling of the ears that it produces, may be had for the asking and paying, as well as many other brands of artificial whisky, hard ciders and plum duff sauces.

AT YOUR CALL.

Then, too, there is the ardent bootlegger, who since boots went out of fashion has been using a dress suit case which holds more. He goes from door to door at telephonic beck and call and is seldom caught if he keeps his mouth shut and his bottles from rattling.

And as a background for this net work we have the home-brewer and distiller, who is legion. To dirties his wife's kitchen utensils, explodes molasses jugs to the alarm of the whole neighborhood and fills his digestive tract with fusel oil to his heart's delight.

But such are the less fortunate in worldly wealth. The others buy real whisky here and there and spurn home-brew. The wealthy who stocked their cellars at the beginning of the prohibition period have found little difficulty in restocking them if they would pay the bill, which they usually would. Good whisky has become not only a social asset, to be hauled out at intimate little family reunions or consequential gatherings about the festive board, as the society reporter insists on writing it, but it has become good business. The director of this corporation reached down in his desk and produces Scotch for the director of that corporation who has called to see about the stock which may be watered, but the whisky, never. The customer gets a drink, the stockholder a bottle and the patron a case.

The drug store sells whisky on prescription only; there is no question about that. For the druggist enjoys knowledge of chemicals that would enable him to make whisky, of a sort, if he cared to violate the laws; which, however, is unnecessary for, he may obtain the real thing to be dispensed for medical purposes only. This is where the physician, with his little pad and pencil comes in. Often he comes in the back door of the drug store, feels the patient's pulse and prescribes on the spot. This is a great convenience for the patient and also for the physician, who thus avoids wear and tear on his office furniture, if he has any. It is also handy for the careful druggist.

THREE OF THEM.

"As everybody has konwn since medical science was established by the Greeks," said a physician thus engaged the other day, "there are three and only three temperaments." "They are," continued the physician, a pedantic person, "phlegmatic, choleric and sanguine. Now, it is my opinion that the new prohibition enforcement officer, what's his name? is of the latter classification. I should say very much so."

But probably the profession that has most profited by this thing called prohibition is the attorney, whose function it is to repair the damage thirst hath wrought. He represents those arrested by the Federal agents, or, sometimes, the city police, whose function it is to enforce an ordinance pertaining to the same subject as the Volstead Act. Attorneys in greater number than ever before were seen in court are busy as bees at honey time.

The fees are all out of proportion to what attorneys are supposed to get for aiding justice. There are usually two appearances before U. S. Commissioner Long, for the arraignment and the hearing. Many cases do not get beyond the arraignment.

Now, for a liquor-law arraignment the attorney's fees range from $100 to $500. A preliminary hearing is worth at least $500, which has caused many a good man to sell his automobile. There is an instance where an attorney collected a cool $1000 for attending an arraignment and arranging for a bond of $1000, and probably no more than an hour

BY ALMA WHITAKER.

I insist that I don't look like it! I was nicely brought up and I am a perfectly proper person.

But it appears that all unwittingly I am forever giving mystic signs. Before the days of prohibition waiters always placed the wine list before me with the deprecating apologetic air which implied it was merely a matter of form but quite understood I probably would not order anything. Hosts understood that I was an essentially moderate person. In short my general reputation was sans reproche.

But nowadays a visit to a hotel or restaurant, a soda fountain or a tea shop is fraught with hectic danger. You see, they all have their mystic signs, silent signs of nectaric portent, which bring a person of beaming, sympathetic understanding directly to one's side, a person the very personification of a large appreciative wink, who whispers sephulchurally in one's ear and awaits one's order in triumph.

For instance, I was out shopping with Mary. Mary is one of my most respectable in-laws with a nice respect for my inherent virtues. After a jazz of sales bargains in hats, what more natural than that I should yearn to sustain Mary's inner woman. Mary looked worthy of one of our most fashionable restaurants. The balcony looked particularly cool and seductive—especially the south end of the balcony. But the waiter seemed bent upon steering us to the north end. So I wafted him one of my very nicest smiles.

"We really want to sit at that other end," I beamed confidentially, "it is the only place I covet."

MYSTIC WINK.

He gave me a shrewd inquiring look and then—confound the fellow, he positively appeared to wink. A sort of semiwink, as it were, a shade impersonal, but alive with comprehensive approval.

The coveted location was ours instanter.

We gave our order, but he still stood waiting.

"Wine, beer or spirits?" he whispered in my ear.

A mild little prohibition joke, thought I.

"Tea," I murmured in my sweetest, but most dignified manner. "Nice strong tea, English tea in a tea pot."

"I get you," remarked the extraordinary person, grinning idiotically.

And really I blush to narrate what arrived in that tea pot. Mary was most suspicious.

"What? Why? How?" I asked that absurdly triumphant waiter.

"Well, say, you would come to this end of the balcony," he explained irately, "and you said strong tea."

I am still explaining to Mary.

IMMUNITY ABSENT.

Then there was the day I took a club president to an entirely respectable afternoon tea — the cup that cheers but never inebriates. Once again that amazing translation of our order. It took all my savoir faire to elicit the information as to just what I had done to perform the embarrassing miracle. It transpired that I had placed two fingers tip down on the table while giving

USURY LAW IS OPENLY VIOLATED.

Money-Lenders Force Unfortunates to Pay Many Times Maximum Legal Rate; "Joker" in Act Enables Lenders to Extract Title Fees and Fat Commissions.

Charges of from 24 to 200 per cent on loans still prevail in Los Angeles, despite the usury law passed in 1918, which fixes a maximum interest rate of only 12 per cent and provides a fine or jail sentence for violators. While some of these excessive charges are unquestionably statutory violations, it seems that others are not and that the men who exact them are at least observing the letter if not the spirit of the law.

These facts have been brought out in an investigation just completed by The Times, following complaints that the usury law is being openly violated.

The most interesting thing revealed by this investigation was not noncompliance with the law, however, but rather the inadequacy of the law itself. For instance, it was found that there is a question whether the usury law passed in 1918 applies to pawnbrokers, though the language of the measure is very broad and evidently intended to reach all classes of money-lenders. It is the opinion in some quarters that the 12 per cent provision is not binding where a chattel put up as security is kept by the lender, but that such cases are governed by a special pawnbrokers' law permitting an interest rate of 2 per cent per month, or 24 per cent a year. This pawnbrokers' law was passed long before the 1918 usury law and is held not to conflict with the latter.

AN OPEN QUESTION.

It appears to be an open question, however, as to which of these two laws does govern the pawnbrokers, and the matter will probably not be decided until a test case is instituted.

It was found further that the 1918 usury law contains a "joker" which enables money-lenders to make charges beyond the 12 per cent rate that cannot be construed as usury. There is a provision allowing certain fees for commission and the examination of titles, under cover of which the loan men who do in fact come under the 12 per cent restriction tack on charges in addition to and considerably in excess of the interest the law allows. Hence, while these money-lenders are careful to charge interest only at the legal rate of 12 per cent, the borrower finds that after he has paid all the extras on his loan the cost runs away beyond what the interest alone would figure out.

In consequence of these peculiarities in the statutes many money-lenders whose charges at first glance seem extortionate and in violation of the Usury Act are in fact complying with the law as they construe it, and it would be difficult if not impossible in many cases to enforce the provisions of that act against them as the law stands today. On the other hand, it goes almost without saying that there are also many loan men, particularly pawnbrokers, who apparently make no pretense of observing any legal restraints whatever in their charges, and who ask any rate they think they can get away with.

BIG INTEREST CHARGES.

For instance, a case was called to the attention of The Times where a man on several occasions within the last six months pawned clothing, each time securing a loan of $12. On each loan he was charged $2 for the first month and thereafter at the rate of $2 a month. This figures out at the rate of 200 per cent a year or more than 16 per cent a month. This was, of course, an absolute violation of the law and the borrower would have had a good case had he submitted his evidence to the City Prosecutor.

In order to secure some first-hand information as to the charges made by various loan companies the writer called on a number of these concerns and asked to borrow money on his watch. At the first place visited, the proprietor, after giving the would-be borrower the once-over and examining the watch with care offered to lend $8 on it. Questioned as to the interest, the loan man replied with studied carelessness that this was a mere trifle, only 50 cents a month. Of course 50 cents is not much to pay for a month's use of $8 but it nevertheless figures out at the rate of over 6 per cent a month.

It may be explained here that from three to six months is the time for which pawnbrokers' loans are usually outstanding, and the contention of the loan men is that they can't do business except at high rates in dealing with small amounts loaned for such brief periods. Moneylenders who aim to comply with the law are said to make it a rule to charge a minimum initial fee of 25 cents as a sort of retainer or commission on small loans, to which is added 2 per cent a month on the amount involved.

COLLECTED IN ADVANCE.

The first month's interest plus this initial fee is always collected in advance. On this basis the first month's charges on $8 would be only 41 cents and the charges thereafter 16 cents a month. So it means the man who quoted 50 cents was not observing this alleged rule nor was any other pawnbroker found who did so.

The experience in the first pawnshop were repeated in others, with but slight variations, except in the matters of rates. In this particular, despite the rule just referred to, there seemed to be an astonishing lack of uniformity. One man quoted a rate of 75 cents a month on any amount from $10 to $25, and $3 a month on $100. This is 3 per cent a month on the last named amount. Another, apparently sizing the applicant up as an "easy mark," offered to lend him $10 on his watch at the rate of $1 a month. This is a straight rate of 10 per cent a month. One money-lender wanted 75 cents a month for the use of $10, but quoted a 2 per cent rate on $100. This was the nearest any of the pawnbrokers called on came to the rate which it is asserted they have a right to charge under the pawnbrokers' law.

There was a noticeable reticence on the part of the loan men to quote on amounts for which no collateral was in sight. They would quote on a $10 loan on a watch they held in their hands, but most of them refused to fix rates on hypothetical loans. Some went so far as to say that the greater the amount of the loan, the lower would be the interest rate, but they shied

ALIEN TOURISTS TO ESCAPE TAX.

State Levy Does Not Apply to Visitors, is Ruling.

Attorney-General Clears Up Point Exciting Canada.

Relies on Discretion of the Registration Officers.

Tourists entering California from foreign countries will not be subject to the State's new $10 poll tax for aliens.

This assurance comes from Attorney-General Webb, and is occasioned directly by a rising apprehension in Canada that the thousands of Canadians who annually visit Southern California, will, in addition to the $8 head tax assessed by the United States government, be required to pay the State of California an additional $10.

INDIGNATION IN CANADA.

Canadian newspapers, in the absence of an official ruling as to the operation of the poll-tax law, have indulged in considerable indignation and reproaches, which, although unnecessary, have been somewhat justified by the peculiar phraseology of the new law.

In a telegram to The Times the Attorney-General officially defines the law as follows:

"The Alien Poll Tax Law does not apply to tourists. It applies to inhabitants; that is, actual alien residents of the State.

"Whether the particular alien is in this State temporarily, having a permanent residence elsewhere, is to be ascertained by registration officer. The act does not prescribe the method by which the officer makes his determination, but leaves open to him the use of any means necessary to arrive at the facts."

ARGUMENTS LIKELY.

Apparently the law's vagueness as to the method for determining the status of an alien will invite considerable argument between registration officers and the natives of other countries, but on the whole it would seem that the tourist will have an advantage.

He can lay successful claim to being a tourist for several months, at least, and, if he be caught as a bona fide resident thereafter, he can aver that he has become a victim of the unexcelled climate and other attractions of Southern California.

LISTS FLORIST AND CAB BILLS.

Writer, Bankrupt, Declares Expensive Beaver Coat is Held for Hotel Bill.

The typical schedule of "a man about town" appears in the bankruptcy petition of Nathan Parker Stedman of this city, who bills himself as a writer, filed in the United States District Court yesterday. His debts amount to $23,522.80, of which $23,066.80 are unsecured. His assets are given as $3925, of which $1615 are listed as exempt. The Plaza Hotel of San Francisco is holding his beaver overcoat, valued at $500, for a bill of $410, and among his creditors appear the Ritz-Carlton, New York; the St. Francis and Plaza, San Francisco; numerous jewelry firms, cab companies and florists. Among his personal effects that he lists as exempt are valuable rings, Navajo rugs, silverware and a watch. At his home, 312 Fourth street, Aurora, Ind., he has $500 worth of oil paintings.

MUSICALE, THEATER PARTY FOR CHARITY.

Society and motion-picture folk will attend a musicale and theater party to be given Wednesday afternoon at the Ambassador by the Assistance League, for the benefit of the Children's Hospital and other charities. The program will begin at 2 o'clock with a motion picture presentation. Henri Van Praag, conductor of the Ambassador orchestra, will be in charge of the musicale following. Fred Brooks Cole, baritone, will be among those contributing selections. Following the matinee, a tea dansant will be held in the Cocoanut Grove.

WANT FREE SWIMMING.

The Los Angeles Central Labor Council has petitioned the city to eliminate the 10-cent and 15-cent fees required at the city's swimming pools in order to permit larger numbers of children to enjoy the pools.

CROSS SENT TO MOTHER OF AIR HERO.

Mrs. Knute Erickson Gets War Honor Bestowed on Son By Britain.

Mrs. Knute Erickson, mother of Lieut. Archie Buchanan Erickson, D.F.C., of the British Royal Air Force yesterday received a Distinguished Flying Cross that has just been struck by the British government. Her son was awarded the medal and also the Croix de Guerre with palms for distinguished service during the war.

In the citation that preceded the awarding of the medal Gen. Degouette of the French army praised Lieut. Erickson's valor in these words:

"On Sept. 29, 1918 he was attacked by fifteen Fokker planes and brought down one and perhaps two of his adversaries. On October 17 he was the first English airman to land at Ostend, Belgium, long before the arrival of the Allied troops."

Lieut. Erickson brought down eleven enemy planes before he was himself shot down just twelve days before the armistice. One wing of his plane was shot away and the bursting shell tore away part of his clothing, but he escaped with only minor injuries. He was taken prisoner by the Germans and was marched for several days without having his wounds attended to. Later he escaped and was hidden by a Belgian family near Liege, where he remained until the armistice.

Lieut. Erickson is now in business in New York. His mother recently came to Los Angeles to make her home.

WILL CONTEST SUIT TO COLLECT DAMAGES.

Gertrude G. Ruter and William J. Atkins will contest a suit for $20,250 damages filed against them yesterday by Stephen Da Costa, who says the defendants instituted an action against him in which he was maliciously charged without probable cause with threatening to kill. It was stated that Mr. Da Costa was released following a justice court hearing.

was consumed on both jobs. For the jailer's bond the victim of drink put up his Liberty Bonds.

The fees in these liquor cases are almost as high as in the Chinese and Japanese smuggling cases, which were the top notch in the Federal courts. A good murder defense is relatively cheap.

The other day we had among us John Murray Edgerton Glyn, a nephew of Mrs. Eleanor Glyn, who writes children's stories. Mr. Glyn, like his aunty, somewhat Puritanical, was shocked at the sights he saw since he arrived in New York two months ago.

"Your Pussyfoot Johnson had told us a very different story," he said. "We have heard volumes about the benefits entailed, the improved sobriety, efficiency, prosperity and all that sort of thing. Why, I have seen more drunkenness in this country in two months than I have ever seen in over five years in England."

Mr. Glyn, with the penetrating eyes of a stranger, observed drunkenness in all walks of life, not to say the runs and hops, skips and jumps. He says it is visible among "otherwise quite decent chaps, yes, and even some of the nicer women are, well, indiscreet, to say the least."

Mr. Exnicios doubtless will follow conventional lines in suppressing drunkenness among the lower and middle classes, but it is not clear how he is going to stop intoxication among the "otherwise quite decent chaps," and "the nicer women."

THIS IS NO SNAP.

County's Looking for Eligibles With Special Knowledge.

If you know a lot about water-tube boilers and the use of crude oil in furnaces, are up to date on modern direct-connected engines and generators, parallel operation and switchboard practice, vacuum cleaning systems, ammonia compressors, refrigeration and ice making, and think that $160 a month will keep the wolf from the door, you can take an examination for stationary steam engineer and get on Los Angeles county's eligible list. The Civil Service Commission announces that the tests will be made on August 5, and that full particulars can be obtained at room 1007, Hall of Records. The commission will also hold examinations on various days in August for firemen, male attendant at Juvenile Hall, matrons for Juvenile Hall and El Retiro, deputy district attorney, deputy probation officer, field visitor, county jailer and voucher clerk.

"COCKROACH" NO NAME FOR WIFE

She Objects to Husband's Addressing Her as "Fool," "Snake."

Two separations in less than a year and the citation of many asserted incidents of abuse and cruelty are the basis for a separate maintenance suit filed yesterday by Paula Psaches against Harry Psaches. She charges her husband with having called her "fool," "crab," "cockroach" and "snake;" accuses him of throwing the dishes about the table; threats to kill her brother; referring to a pretty vase which she bought as a "spittoon" and with having said, when she objected to his going to Russia to get his mother, "I can get eighteen wives if I want to, but a mother comes first." He is quoted as saying, "I will choke the baby and kill you."

"Joker" Enables Money Lenders to Extort High Charges

HOW USURERS FLOUT LAW.

Violations and Evasions Revealed by Investigation in This City.

when it came to giving definite figures.

MAKE USE OF "JOKER."

A visit to the place of business of a personal property broker making loans exclusively on furniture, revealed how this class of money-lender operates so as to take advantage of the "joker" in the usury law. The proprietor of this place, which is in one of the handsomest office buildings in Los Angeles, was extremely businesslike. He was perfectly willing to quote rates, and displayed none of the side-stepping characteristics of the pawn-broking fraternity.

A request was made for a loan of $100 to be secured by furniture valued at about $500. Questioned as to what charges would be made for this loan, the lender, apparently anxious to stress the fact that he is a law-abiding citizen, said the law provided for an interest rate of 12 per cent a year or 1 per cent a month. In addition there would be a brokerage charge of $5 and a fee for the examination, and proving of title to the furniture, amounting to $15. These fees, plus the first month's interest, made a total of $21, which was to be deducted in advance from the $100, so the borrower would receive only $79. If the loan was to run a year the total charges for its use, on the basis of these quotations, would be 32 per cent, or more than two and one-half times the 12 per cent maximum interest rate fixed by the 1918 usury law.

The provision of the law which makes possible these extra fees recites that not more than 5 per cent of the amount loaned can be exacted for such fees where the loan is less than $1000. There is an exception to this provision, however, which reads that it shall not govern in cases of "abstracts or certificates of title, charges made under the Torrens Land Act, or otherwise." Those last two innocent words are the peg on which the astute personal property broker hangs the fees that run his charges so far above the legal 12 per cent rate.

MAKE RESTITUTION.

Prosecutions of money-lenders who charge exorbitant rates take place occasionally, but it seems these cases seldom get beyond the complaint stage. When a borrower who has been held up by a money-lender appeals to the City Prosecutor, this official first of all causes a preliminary investigation to be made. This step is usually all that is necessary. The loan man, unwilling to face a trial which might put him in bad and result in the revocation of his license to do business, is generally more than anxious to make restitution of the amount he has overcharged the customer, and the case is settled on that basis, the prosecution being dropped. Most borrowers are interested only in getting back the amount of which they have been illegally deprived, and when this is forthcoming they are content to let the law violator go unpunished.

It happens sometimes, however, that a money-lender who has gone beyond all bounds in his extortions gets what is coming to him. Many readers will no doubt recall a case of this kind which took place some time ago. A loan shark was on the point of selling the home of a widow who had two sons in the service. This woman had been paying an exorbitant rate of interest for a long time, and when she could no longer meet the rapacious money-lender's demands, he advertised her house for sale at public auction. The Times printed the story, with the result that a crowd gathered on the date set for the sale of the property, and the loan man was threatened with lynching. Not only was he forced to relinquish his claim to the house, but he also had to restore the amount he had collected in excess of the legal rate of interest, besides losing his license.

"FULL OF GRIEF."

Persons familiar with the money-lending game from the pawnbroker's angle will tell you it's full of grief. Among other pestiferous things, these loan men are required to submit a daily report to the Police Department showing every item of merchandise they have taken in during the preceding twenty-four hours. These reports serve a double purpose. They keep the police informed of the daily doings of every pawnshop in town and are also of assistance to the department in its efforts to locate stolen property.

TRACE THIEVES' LOOT.

A thief who gets away with a stolen article usually goes to the nearest pawnbroker the first thing to dispose of the loot. When the perturbed owner reports the theft to the police, the pawnbrokers' reports are immediately consulted, and a great number of cases the property is located. The pawnbroker is compelled to restore the article to its rightful owner without reimbursement for the amount he has advanced on it to the thief, and he is therefore out of pocket. The same thing sometimes happens where people have bought a valuable article on the dollar-down-dollar-a-month plan. The purchaser may decide to pawn the article and vanish, leaving the pawnbroker to hold the bag when the installment man appears on the scene.

This investigation has also revealed that there is a remarkable lack of information on the part of the public as to the laws governing the subject of money-lenders. Very few people seem even to know that there is a usury law in this State. For example, a 1921 revision of a guide to Los Angeles purchased at a well known local book store contains the statement that the legal rate of interest in California is seven per cent with no limit and no penalty for usury.

By way of summing up the law, it may be said that while there is a question whether the 12 per cent provision of the 1918 usury statute applies to pawnbrokers, it is safe to say that any person who is compelled to pay one of these loan men more than 2 per cent a month has grounds for taking the matter up with the City Prosecutor. As for the personal property brokers, they are without question held down to 1 per cent a month. The charges they make for commission and title fees under cover of the "joker" might or might not stand in a case carried to the Supreme Court. It seems that this test has not as yet been applied.

MUST HAVE SUFFERED.

Complainants in cases of excess charges for loans should bear in mind, however, that they have no case unless there has been an overt act of collection of an excessive rate, coupled with an intent to exact such rate. According to the City Prosecutor's office, persons often come rushing in with a breathless tale of having been held up by a loan man when in fact they have merely been quoted a usurious rate but have not paid it. The complainant must have suffered actual loss before a violation can be established.

For the information of those who desire to familiarize themselves with the usury act, which was approved by the voters of California at the general election on November 5, 1918, a copy of the measure is appended, as follows:

Section 1. The rate of interest upon the loan or forbearance of any money, goods or things in action or on accounts after demand or judgments rendered in any court of this State, shall be $7 upon the $100 for one year and at that rate for a greater or less sum or for a longer or a shorter time; but it shall be competent for parties to contract for the payment and receipt of a rate of interest not exceeding $12 on the $100 for one year and not exceeding that rate for a greater or less su mor for a longer or shorter time, in which case such rate exceeding $7 on $100 shall be clearly expressed in writing.

Sec. 2. No person, company, association or corporatin shall derectly r indirectly take or receive money, goods or things in action, or in any other manner whatsoever, any greater sum or any greater value for the loan or forbearance of money, goods or things in action than at the rate of $12 upon $100 for one year; and in the computation of interest upon any bond, note, or other instrument or agreement, interest shall not be compounded, nor shall the interest thereon be construed to bear interest unless an agreement to that effect is clearly expressed in writing and signed by the party to be charged therewith. Any agreement or contract of any nature in conflict with the provisions of this section shall be null and void as to any agreement or stipulation therein contained to pay interest and no action at law to recover interest in any sum shall be maintained and the debt cannot be declared due until the full period of time it was contracted for has elapsed.

Sec. 3. Every person, company, association or corporation who for any loan or forbearance of money, goods, or things in action shall have paid or delivered any greater sum or value than is allowed to be received under the preceding sections, one and two, may either in person or his or its personal representative, recover in an action at law against the person, company, association or corporation who shall have taken or received the same, or his or its personal representative, treble the amount of the money so paid or value delivered in violation of said sections, providing such action shall be brought, within one year after such payment or delivery, and any person, company, association or corporation who shall ask, demand, receive, take, accept or charge more than 12 per cent per annum upon the sum of money actually loaned for the forbearance, use or loan thereof, when the repayment of the trust money loaned shall be secured by a mortgage, trust deed, bill of sale, assignment, pledge, receipt or other evidence of debt, except corporation bonds and municipal and other public bonds, upon property, real or personal, or by assignment of wages, or ask, demand, receive, take, accept or charge more than an amount equal to 5 per cent so actually loaned and secured in all sums of $1000 or less, and 3 per cent on all sums over $1000 in full for all examinations, views, fees, appraisals, commissions, renewals made within one year from date of loan and charges of any kind or description whatsoever, except abstracts or certificates of title charges made under the Torrens land law or otherwise, in the procuring, making and transacting of the business connected with such loans, or who shall ask, demand, receive, take, accept or charge any fee, bonus or commission whatsoever for the use or loan or the procuring of such loan of any sum of money for a shorter period than six months when said loan is not secured by a mortgage or pledge upon real estate, or shall violate the provisions of sections one and two of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished for the first offense by a fine of not less than $25 nor more than $300, or by imprisonment not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, and for each subsequent offense and conviction shall be punished by a fine not less than $100 nor more than $500, and by imprisonment not less than six months nor more than one year. The penalties herein provided for the violation of this section and said sections one and two shall apply and be imposed upon each member of any unincorporated company, association, or of any copartnership, and upon each officer and director of a corporation who shall violate either of said sections.

Sec. 4. Sections 1917, 1918, 1919 and 1920 of the Civil Code and all acts and parts of acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

Sec. 5. This act whenever cited, referred to, or amended may be designated simply as the "usury law."

TIME FOR THE WIND-UP.

They are arguing as to how the jazz band got its start, but we are more interested in seeing its finish.

SCENIC SPLENDORS.

This is a great climate. In addition to our regular bag of tricks we have been showing a few purple sunsets lately.

THE SINGER RETURNS.

Enrico Caruso promises to return to this country and sing for us next season—voice or no voice. Therefore the American music-lovers may go cheerfully ahead in laying up the price of admission.

SMOKES FOR WOMEN.

The Canadian Pacific Railroad is now providing passenger cars with a separate smoking section for women. If the Canadian dames run true to form they will all be fighting for seats in this section. In America the ladies all make their first rush for the smokers' seats in the street cars. They figure that if they occupy them the men will not smoke themselves into perdition. A smoking car for women would be a fine place for the Anti-Cigarette League to hold a mass meeting in.

THE DEADLY SUNBURN.

It seems that they have been dying of sunburn in some of the cities of the East. One of the experts of the public health department in Chicago says that a full and complete display of sunburn is fatal within seven hours. If it is only a half or two-thirds case the sufferer may last ten or twelve hours. They must have a nasty sun in Chicago. There are folks here who have been burned until their hides are of a rich mahogany tint and are so tough they cannot be killed with a pickax. If sunshine were fatal Southern California would be one vast mausoleum. If Chicago sunburn kills in seven hours we will only go there when it rains.

THE WORLD'S WONDERS.

In recent discussions and recapitulations of the natural wonders of the world California and the Southwest, of course, occupied the same place as the lions and elephants at the zoo. But in the works of man this section is also richly represented. It is not generally realized that in high-brow circles the observatory on Mt. Wilson is one of the nine wonders of the world. Equipped with the greatest and most massive astronomical lenses ever made, it is the admiration of scientists. Why the City of the Angels is so much like heaven is further explained that, by the aid of the giant telescope in Mt. Wilson observatory, heaven can be brought nearer to Los Angeles than any other great city on earth.

WOMEN AGAINST WOMEN.

Women of the Middle West are taking up cudgels on behalf of the real Mrs. Jacob Hamon, who is to be depicted as one of the characters in Clara Smith Hamon's forthcoming film romance. Mrs. Hamon has led a blameless life, but it had been announced that it was the purpose of Clara to present her on the screen in such a way as to leave with her the responsibility for wrecking the domestic happiness of the Hamon family. Club women in Chicago have voiced their protest and will lead a national movement against the production of the film. Clara seems to be a very efficient worker on behalf of the International Reform Bureau. She is doing more than her share in bringing about a close and complete censorship of pictures. Her determination to capitalize her notoriety on the screen is convincing a lot of fair and open-minded people that some moral supervision of the film industry may be necessary, after all. If Clara and her story were needed in the films there might be some excuse; but she herself has had no training or experience as an actress and her story is simply one of a thousand sordid tales of illicit love. Nothing that she and her associates can do will make the presentation worth while or even interesting.

TOWARD DEMOCRACY.

Is there a movement among the old leaders of Japan to precipitate a war with America before the people seize the reins of government? The question is asked because conditions in Nippon appear to be somewhat the same as they were in Germany before the fateful August of 1914. The Teuton military leaders are believed to have precipitated the conflict because they believed it offered the only way to maintain the rule of the "upper classes." In Japan today there is declared to be a strong movement toward democratic government which threatens the throne. On every side there is a demand for reforms, says one writer. "Force, imperialism and autocracy have ceased to be good form; peace, justice and democracy, for the time being, hold the stage." Some of the men now in power are said to hold the view that in order to distract the attention of the people from democracy a war should be waged. Whom with? There is only one answer, America. The "common people" of Japan, who are slowly but surely arising from an attitude of submission to the aristocrats, will surely not allow themselves to be led into a conflict which is being urged as much to down them as to get even with the United States. Those who favor war are blind. Cannot they see what happened to the German princes and the military party? The move toward democracy cannot be stayed in Japan any more than it could be squelched in Germany.

PEACE ON THE PACIFIC.

THE people do not want any more war, either on the Pacific or on the Atlantic or on the earth or on the moon. The soul of the people is sound enough and sensible enough to want peace. It is savagery or stupidity that starts a fight for the sake of the fight. It would seem that the silly superstition of a "super-man" has been exploded. No nation with a spoonful of brains would think of building a hope of supremacy on that childish and fanatical whim. "Every dog has his day." And especially the dog that attempts to monopolize all the bones in the yard is apt to find himself worsted in the dog world. That same disposition carried over into the human world will come up against the same consequences.

The heart of the universe is against oppression. One militarist, who had worked overtime, said in his banishment, "I find myself out of harmony with the purpose of the universe." We suppose that he had considered himself a "super-man," and came up against a surprise to find that the universe would not get out of the way for him and his cohorts to pass. Over in Doorn is another disillusioned would-be world bluffer who fooled a number of feeble-minded folk into the notion that he also was a "super-man." Awhile ago he was swaggering around boasting, "If the world is against us, then we are against the world." He also got backed up against the wall by the ever-rising sea swell of the world's soul.

On the sea of life there are great spiritual currents which are ever sweeping despots and despotisms overboard. The firm fingers of justice have been busy through the centuries uncrowning the despots. Selfish crowns and swords and thrones are swept out like the chaff from the wheat by the wonder-working winds of God. Let no man nor nation try to monopolize for selfish uses what the Creator has intended as a minister to mankind. If one island can be useful to several nations in common human interests, then woe betide that nation who tries to corner its market. Call the island Yap, or by any other name, tyranny's triumph there, as always and everywhere, would be but temporary. Any real statesman should see that truth blazoned on the skies of the nations.

II.

IS ANYBODY short-sighted enough to think seriously that the Pacific Ocean was made for Mexico or Italy or England or France or Japan or America, or for any other one nation? Like the sun in the sky the Pacific is a world asset. Climatically, piscatorially, socially, commercially and fraternally the Pacific Ocean belongs to the world. CLEAR THESE PLACID WAVES OF PUGILISTIC SHIPS as soon as it can be safely done! Let that be the slogan of the nations. The Pacific was not made for some bully's Paradise. Would a gentleman go to a banquet, grabbing at everything in sight, saying, "This and this and this is mine?" Certainly not. Neither will a gentleman statesman or a gentleman nation practice that policy on the Pacific. The good God of humanity has made it long enough and wide enough for the nations of earth to sail their friendly fleets side by side for centuries.

To swagger on this Pacific sea with a sword is silly. But we have had sword swaggerers in these recent years who, if they could, would have cornered the sky, Mars and the comets thrown in. But he is sadly belated who does not understand that the comity of nations is now the desire of all peoples. This new century's motto is service, and not slaughter. Uncle Sam is this moment calling the leaders of the world to meet in his parlor for the making of everlasting friendships which will bind the nations together in a permanent pact of peace.

If neighbors in a county can use the same lane which leads to the county seat without quarreling, then people and nations of fair mind can use peacefully the same lanes on the sea. There is no more reason for trouble on the sea than there is on the land. The will to bite belongs to beasts. The will to peace belongs to people. And peace problems are never worked out successfully, save by intelligence and integrity. Let the nations enter into a co-operative competition for the highest human goals which are only reached by intelligence and integrity. Any blunderer can embroil a community, but it takes skill intelligently directed to disentangle the trouble. A cow can kick over a lantern and set a great city on fire. One swaggering swordsman with no insight into the psychology of nations can, on the occasion of a hot-headed boy's blunder, set the world ablaze with war. It took neither intelligence nor integrity to initiate that disaster. But the highest intelligence and integrity are required to repair the damage done by that criminal stupidity.

III.

THAT NATION IS LACKING IN INTELLECT AND INTEGRITY WHICH SEEKS TO PICK A FIGHT ON THE PACIFIC. Service is the slogan of real citizenship. Strut and swagger and slaughter are the big words in militarism. As it is possible and practicable for men of all races to fish peacefully on the pier, so it is possible for ships of all nations to sail the Pacific in perpetual peace. The different men on the pier do not catch the same number of fish, but they do not quarrel over that. That is all peacefully adjusted by the practical principles of common sense. If the nations can live and work peaceably on the pier, they can do the same on the Pacific. As to comity of co-operation this pier illustration will apply to the international co-operation on the whole Pacific. Let the peoples of the nations suppress their exploiters and would-be war lords and we shall perpetuate a world peace on the Pacific.

"The sea is His and He made it." He made it for fishing and not for fighting. He made it for ships and not for swords. He made it to be a perpetual climatizer. He made it for the man in the moon to dip his fingers in and tumble its tides. He surely made it for human service and not for inhuman slaughter. He made it for traffic ships that do business in great waters. How wondrous is all of this. What infinite generosity! A power great enough to give a helping hand to all the people on the planet. He made the soul of this sea to bring the souls of the world together. If all nationalities can travel in peace on America's great national highways, so can the ships of all nations sail in peace the highways of the Pacific. It is all done by having a will to be friends instead of a will to be foes.

IV.

THE recall to peace is a voice that runs around the world and across all seas. Even the makers of war material and war weapons are favorable to a rational limitation of armament. When the armament business can be discommercialized we shall find our world on the high seas to human harmony. If for once in history the United States, Great Britain, France, Italy and Japan should invest as much to put on a real world-wide program of peace as a war preparation program, we should have such a revival of the world's useful industries as no man has ever seen. We make no plea for the utter non-policing of rightful national and international possessions. There are still some hyenas, tigers and cobras mixed up with the human race. We are not so foolish nor so Utopian as to think that all the fowls in the bird world are turtle doves. But, if anything is sure, it is sure that it is high time for the nations of a sane humanity to quit the national business of going gunning after men. Let the great international conference called to meet in Washington disinfect the nations of the war microbe.

What if the ten billions which are now being spent in the preparation of war weapons and war programs should be invested in national and interlnational schools of comity to show us all how to live decently in a decent world? What if we should invest this ten billions in hospital help for the sad and suffering victims which war has already wrecked? What if the five great nations should at once begin as grand a program to mobilize the friendships of the world? What if for once the professional politician and exploiter should see that there are more wisdom, economy and all-round human gumption in curing than in killing. THE WORLD MUST BE DISINFECTED OF THE PRUSSIAN SPIRIT OF MILITARISM. If Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan and the United States have any national and international duties at all it is to see to it that Germany shall NEVER HAVE A SUCCESSOR IN THE SCIENCE OF SLAUGHTER. Surely new seeing has come upon our national eyes and we now know that the big thing is service. The part of any really great people is construction and not destruction. Let the nations put on at once a program of rational rehabilitation. The worthwhile goals for all the nations lie along the pathways of peace. We must know no race rivalry. We are neighbors. We must be neighborly. No nation will monopolize the skies or the seas. Any peace breaker on the Pacific will be broken.

OBSTACLES TO PEACE.

The strongest opposition to plans for world disarmament come from the interests concerned with the making of munitions of war. If there is to be any nationalization of industry it might well be in the making of the tools of Mars. If war could not be made except by a vote of the people and if the implements of strife could only be made in plants operated by the government the disarmament program might easily be extended.

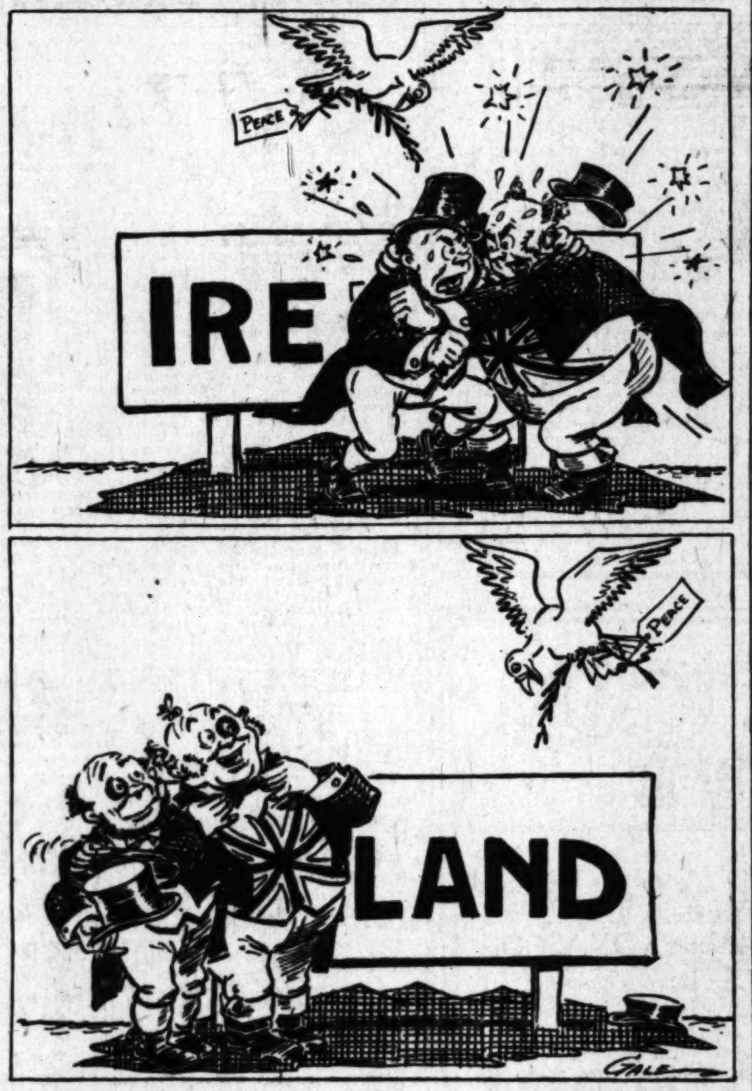
PLENTY OF SHOW.

Justice is certainly giving a man a chance when the courts are holding that a defendant is entitled to a new trial because the evidence in the first was found in his possession.

HARD TO CONVICT.

The only way to convict any of those German officers being tried in Germany for offense against humane warfare is to find that he has made fun of the Kaiser.

A Move in the Right Direction!



THE BLANKET BONUS BILL.

Considering the amount of political pressure brought to bear in favor of the blanket bonus bill The Times is constrained to compliment the forty-seven members of the Senate who voted Friday to indefinitely defer action on that measure. The bill had already passed the House of Representatives and, if the Senate had proved as acquiescent as the lower house, the country would have been faced by an added debt of $5,000,000,000 without any visible means of meeting the obligation.

Little of the lobbying for the blanket bonus bill was done by the ex-service men themselves. It originated with politicians who sought to curry favor with the returned soldiers by voting them extra compensation for the time they served in the war. The object was commendable and the country as a whole would have liked to pay this mark of extra consideration to its war heroes. But, in the face of the tremendous debt under which the nation is laboring, it was evident that to assume such an additional obligation at this time would be a serious hindrance to industry. Thousands of the service men themselves protested that they did not care to have the country's gratitude expressed in dollars. They are well aware that services once paid for are quickly forgotten. They said that any extra liberality should go to those who were injured in the service, not to the ones who passed through the ordeal unharmed.

President Harding did not hesitate to lead in person the opposition to the blanket bonus. Warned that it would be politically unpopular to oppose what the ex-service men wanted, he replied that he doubted if the majority of them would want the bonus when they once understood the sacrifice it would entail on the rest of the country. It is to be regretted that the issue should have been given so much prominence, that the demand for the bonus should have been carried so far. For it places many of the ex-service men themselves in a false position. The demand for the bonus did not originate with them, as we have said, and they took no official action in regard to the measure. Politicians seeking to win what is termed the "soldier vote" created embarrassment both for the valiant ex-service men and for patriotic citizens who are deeply grateful for the services rendered, but who know that the country is in no position at this time to take on so heavy an additional tax burden.

ELKS, GOOD FELLOWS.

Thousands of people in Los Angeles view with regret the departure of the herds of Elkdom that gave us for a week so many manifestions of their jolly good nature and their tolerant spirit that accepts the facts and conditions of life as they are and strives to make the best of them.

The Elks are good fellows in deed as well as in name. They are neither agitators nor crusaders. In the session of their Grand Lodge complete harmony reigned. They had no new theories of morals or government to inflict on the country; they did not seek to compose the disputes of races, classes or creeds. Their psychology teaches that "All's well with the world." If you are out of harmony with it, look within; the outside is all right.

Times are propitious for the propagation of that spirit. The world has grown weary of self-appointed uplifters, of crusaders, of disputants, of national, racial, religious and class animosities. "If you cannot speak well of a brother, hold your tongue." That is one of the laws from the code of Elkdom, and it is a good one. The Elks are not scandal-mongers; they are not libelers; they are not self-appointed guardians of the morals of their neighbors. The ethical code of the order is strict, but they insist on its acceptance only by their members. No association in the country is perhaps more free from the fault of intolerance.

While the Elks were here the whole city radiated with the sunshine of their smiling countenances. They found much to praise and naught to blame. They found our climate lovable, likewise our girls. They enjoyed the aroma of our roses and entered good-naturedly into the illusions of the fairyland of our movie studios. Their concerts and parades had the effect of setting the whole community to jazzing.

Three times Los Angeles has entertained the Grand Lodge of the Elks; and they have been three gala occasions that will live long in memory. We trust that their infusion of a spirit of tolerance will not be wholly lost after their departure. We are inclined at times, nearly all of us, to be too serious, too puritanical. We become overconcerned about the progress of the world. In place of adapting our idea to the age in which we live, we seek to make the community over in conformity to our ideas. A little of the tolerant spirit of Elkdom will lighten up the dark places and make the unavoidable burden of life less onerous.

RIPPLING RHYMES.

LOOKING AHEAD.

A man can't see an hour ahead; in one brief hour he may be dead, from all his labors gone; life's so uncertain none can say, "I'll see the finish of this day and greet another dawn." The citizen, in gorgeous health, goes forth to gather in some wealth, a buoyant, cheerful scout; he strides along the village street, an airship drops a sack of wheat and he is flattened out. Oh, all varieties of doom are round about us, dumping gloom upon the human race; our lives we're taking in our hand, wherever we may walk or stand or ride or dance or chase. And yet along our course we speed, as though our lives were guaranteed for eighty-seven years; next year we will insure our lives and save some money that our wives may eat, if death appears. Next year, or maybe five years hence, we'll show we have some good horse sense, and salt some coin away; next year we'll tread the thrifty track and lift the mortgage from the shack—we're out for fun today. Thus reason multitudes of jays who look ahead to countless days that they may never see; no man who on this planet rides can safely bet one hour divides him from eternity. Let us be prudent, then, and wise, meet obligations as they rise, and cancel every debt; if there are chores that should be done, oh, let us do them ere the sun of this bright day has set.

The following hybrid progeny of Einstein's theory of relativity and Edison's test of human intelligence came to me, down on the farm, as I scanned my collection of Babylonian cuneiform tablets:

Can a chimney-swallow smoke?
How often does the rain-crow?
What goods does the chicken-hawk?
Why do they whip-poor-will?
Can a bull-bat a fly?
What crops does the egg-plant?
How many times a day does the wood-tick?
What cattle does the butter-milk?
Why did the cow-slip?
How much time does the corn-fritter?
Who can bring the thistle-down?
How many cards did the hay stack?
What game-birds does the corn-stalk?

A MOSQUITO ARMISTICE.

The drought from which South Jersey has suffered so severely hits that region's far-famed mosquito hatcheries a body blow. The 1921 South Jersey mosquito crop is the smallest and most satisfactory in years. All along the coast from Cape May northward the soothing lullaby of these nocturnal warblers is missing. The long stretch of rainless days and nights dried up their breeding places. The fresh water puddles and pools wherein billions of the larvae were heretofore deposited, ultimately sending forth obscuring clouds of the melodious insects, became parched and baked earth. Even the larger swamps, pools and lakelets notably receded. Altogether it is a record bad year for Jersey canaries.—[New York Herald.

THE LANCER.

"S.R.O." in the Halifax Herald is against the reformers and blasts them through a leaded column of profundity.

"Our predecessors," says this writer, "did not spend their time in trying to adjust circumstances to themselves, they adjusted themselves to circumstances. After they took to flocking together for company, security and comfort they did not try to make their neighbors conform to their individual peculiarities, but conformed to the peculiarities of their neighbors."

Now few of us love the reformer, but this is mighty poor argument. Our predecessors, who pioneered, must have adjusted circumstances to themselves or we shouldn't have any civilization in America today. And they certainly did not conform to the peculiarities of their neighbors, but quite obviously made those original resident neighbors conform to theirs. And when they had done that an arbitary few made the rest of them conform to those ferocious Sabbatarian laws, and there were those pleasant little Scarlet Letter vogues and witchcraft persecutions and countless other measures always perpetrated with the loftiest possible reform motives.

Lieut. Louis A. Kloor, Jr., has lost his bride because she did not consider a lieutenant's pay good enough. He has won fame in aviation, he is conceded by the lady to be a desirable fellow in every other way. She loved him, but she could not consider him on a lieutenant's pay.

How delightfully practical the romantic young things are getting! What fine sacrificial patriots this sort of thing is likely to make of our men. And now will Congress kindly tax bachelors to make the thing complete?

Ah, yes, and a Mrs. Grace Kimball, divorcee, is making much more money than her husband, but still considers he should pay her $85 a month alimony. She shed him because he was intolerable, but doubtless a docile wifeliness still wishes to remain under pecuniary obligation to him. Such women would never be guilty of prideful independence—altogether too strong-minded, too feminist.

A local housemaid is suing her ex-employers for $10,000 damages because she was bitten by their pet monkey. The lady of the house was bitten by the monkey, too, but as it happened at the same time His Majesty of Greece suffered a like tribulation, she rather enjoyed the co-royal distinction. Unfortunately the maid is thoroughly plebeian and has no gratitude for being so gracefully included in the royal eclat. Some people are so ferociously democratic that they really can't enjoy a royal complaint when it comes their way.

A romantic young man is claiming to be engaged to Mary Miles Minter and Mary denies it. This is an ominous change of venue. Time was when it was the ladies who were precipitate in such little matters and the gentlemen under the embarrassing necessity of tactful denial. The ladies are much less tactful about it. If they are going to usurp the prerogatives of masculinity they ought to usurp the gallantry, too.

With all these inland towns going in for outdoor plunges and bathing girls, the bathing suit may reasonably become a recognized street costume. Pasadena and Alhambra have both installed these outdoor bathing pools and cities everywhere are taking up the vogue. Of course, there will be a little fuss at first and the bathing costume pioneers who do the family shopping thus garbed will doubtless suffer as all courageous pioneers must do. But we shall get used to it. We shop in our bathing suits at many of the beaches, anyway. The Chicago girls tried it in that metropolis and suffered the fate of pioneers, but it's coming. We became quite used to the slit skirt, and now the short skirts and the rolled stockings don't seem half as sinful as they did. And, after all, clothes are no end of a nuisance. And in some parts of Africa, where the natives still go naked, one gets used to it in a couple of days. I did myself. And, after all, the newcomer that indulges in shocks is regarded as rather indecent. Other times and climes, other manners.

William de Mille, writing in The Drama, describes himself as one of the "old masters" of the motion pictures. He wanted to be an "old master" and that was the only avenue left.

All the same, William, the "old masters" of art were not the pioneers. They came along when painting had achieved a very high standard of perfection, when unique pigments had been discovered and technique was pronouncedly fine. Just as the old masters in music exemplified a high mark of attained perfection. We hope you will live long enough to be an "old master," William, and the signs are promising. But there is a long row to hoe yet. You may be, but you are not yet.

A visiting Elk writes to ask me "what is a clean city"? He says before he came here he read that Los Angeles was, but that then again she wasn't. He wants to know if it is a city with the greatest number of reform-crazed spinsters with prurient minds.

No, stranger, it isn't a matter of spinsters. It is a delicate question between the incoming and outgoing Mayors and Chiefs of Police. The new tenant always discovers that the old one left the house in a disgraceful state. And starts right in cleaning up. And after that it will be very clean at the usual house-cleaning intervals. But there is a lot of smut in the air, you know how it is. Isn't it the same in your own home town?

STAR IS DIVORCED.

Follies Beauty Sent Spouse West to Get Rid of Him, He Says.

According to testimony before Judge Walton J. Wood yesterday, Vera M. Spingler, said to be known as Vera Michelena, musical comedy star with the Follies company in New York, persuaded her husband to come to California, but failed to keep her promise to join him here.

"It was only a ruse to get rid of me," he told the judge.

A deposition from a resident of New York was introduced by Mr. Spingler's attorney, Lewis Sherman Jones, in which Mrs. Spingler is quoted as saying that she was through with her husband and that if he tried to force reconciliation, she would go to Europe. Mr. Spingler was granted a divorce.

COUNTY FAIR TO BE HELD.

Through a resolution adopted by the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce during last week, the San Fernando Valley Fair, which is to be held September 13 to 18, will function as the official Los Angeles County Fair. Taking advantage of the disorganization of several associations which have been holding annual events in Southern California, the San Fernando Valley towns have succeeded in organizing every department of a tremendous county fair from a tractor demonstration to a baby show.

With their organization complete and a premium book published which offers cash awards otaling $22,000, besides hundreds of silver cups and other prizes, the valley towns sent a committee to the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce asking for its indorsement. The committee, consisting of Alfred Brant, M. H. Adamson, J. H. Fulcher, Alec Jeffries and E. R. Elkins, secured the unqualified indorsement of the local chamber. San Fernando, the oldest town in the valley, will be the scene of the first county fair given in Los Angeles county in twenty years.

The fair will have as special attractions a working tractor demonstration each day and a horse show each evening. Novel and magnificent lighting effects will be used.

All the different department managers of the fair are vying with each other to see who can produce the most educational, comprehensive and important department. One section of the fair will be devoted to a tremendous poultry exhibit. The fair management say that owing to the fact that this is to be the only official American Poultry Association show to be held in the State of California this year, it will be a splendid drawing card. Poultrymen from all parts of the State have signified their intention of taking advantage of this official event.

Three mammoth tents will house the power farming exhibit and the 700-acre Lopez ranch will afford ample ground for the demonstrations of the dozens of different tractors being entered by dealers.

REDONDO BEACH GEM CITY.

Builds for Beauty and Home Life Rather Than Jazz Features.

BY FRANK L. KERN,
Commercial Secretary Redondo Beach Chamber of Commerce.

In many of their aspects all beach resorts look alike, but Redondo Beach has certain distinctive and exclusive natural features as well as having been planned into a beautiful city.

As a place for interesting recreation and amusement which make lasting impressions and add much to the general knowledge of those who know how to appreciate them, Redondo is unique and her people have never cared to cater much to that vast throng which looks merely for jazz features of life.

The Carnation City, or Moonstone City, as it has been called, now boasts of being the "City of Happy Homes and Unexcelled Climate," and invites people from everywhere to live in it, or spend a vacation here.

FOR EVERY TASTE.

Living accommodations are afforded to suit every taste and purse, all the way from the pretentious residences with elegant furnishings, the modest bungalows, cottages, and apartments, to tents where one may live the gypsy-free life at practically no cost—providing he likes fish and cares to go out and get them.

He may stroll over the beautiful Palo Verde Hills among the ancient quarries where the natives once fashioned their flints, mortars and implements of every sort, or he may explore for relics in their half-buried cities of long ago. He may stroll along the beach and along the bluffs which tower hundreds of feet above where abides the "Hermit of Flotsam Castle," and there among the rocks and seaweeds, while the breakers boom and seabirds scream, gather and study the curious abalones, cockles, limpets, sea-urchins, starfish, crabs and myriad forms of sea life.

GOOD FISHING.

To those who like fishing, Redondo Beach offers the greatest opportunities, as more varieties of fine fish, large and small, are usually found here than at other places, owing to the excellent breeding and feeding grounds offered by the vast fields of kelp and seaweeds of every variety which grow close by.

Hundreds of families are now camping here for the summer and many remain the entire year in our apartments and homes where they can live more cheaply than in the larger cities. Almost the entire year is suited to the enjoyment of the fine bathing and other recreational privileges.

The great bath-house, with its mammoth plunge and salt tub-baths, the beautiful dance pavilion, the daily band concerts by one of the best bands in the State, the three up-to-date theaters, the hippodrome and racer, clean games and amusements under official direction and supervision, the delights and wonders of Moonstone Beach, where rare semiprecious gems are daily gathered and where those who bring their little ones can turn them loose in a children's playground, with a variety of swings, slides, teeter-totters, etc., all combine to lure visitors to make their homes here.

AUTO SCHOOL OUTING.

Announcing plans for its annual outing, the National Automotive School yesterday invited all graduates to join the students in a program of sports and a barbecue at Santa Monica on the 31st inst. Graduates and students will meet at 9 a.m. at 811 South Figueroa street on the day of the outing and will be taken to the beach in trucks.

GUS MANN'S Pot and Spigot Grill; 611 South Spring, is at your service every hour of the 24.

BOND BROKER, WAR HEROINE ARE MARRIED.

Marriage of Paul B. Hammond and Miss Harvie Wallis a Social Surprise.

The marriage yesterday morning of Miss Harvie Wallis, daughter of C. L. Wallis, 692 South Harvard Boulevard, to Paul B. Hammond, local bond broker and son of W. T. S. Hammond, vice-president and cashier of the First National Bank, came as one of the social surprises of the year.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Philip A. Easley of St. Stephen's Church, Hollywood, in the home of the bride's father. There were no attendants, and only the members of the immediate families of the contracting parties were present. The couple are now on their way to New York City, whence they will sail for Europe, where an extended tour of England and France by automobile will occupy them well into the autumn.

Miss Wallis, whose father is a wealthy oil producer, is one of the social leaders of Southern California and distinguished herself by her activities during the World War.

MILLIONS READ SOUTHLAND ADS.

All-Year Club Fires Opening Gun in Newspapers.

Come to California Now is Campaign's Keynote.

Many States Are Covered by Publicity Drive.

While the campaign of the All-Year Club of Southern California for a three-year annual fund of $300,000, with which to advertise the Southland, is still continuing with the goal believed only a comparatively short time away, the advertising program of the club is already in motion.

At the time that this is being read here millions of men and women in Nevada, Arizona, Utah, Colorado, New Mexico, Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Iowa, Arkansas, Tennessee and Louisiana are reading in their Sunday newspapers of the superlative summer charm, coolness and freshness of Southern California and that now is the time to come here.

Scores of newspapers are carrying this advertising message which covers about one-third of a page and is arranged so that it virtually dominates the page.

SUMMER WONDERLAND.

The advertisement states that Southern California is a wonderland of summer, with balminess, not heat, with most refreshing nights, with 4000 miles of paved automobile highways and 70,000 official guide signs showing the way to seashore resorts, mountain retreats, historic missions, canyons and scenic mountain roads. It brings out also the wonderful golf courses, the boating, surf bathing, camping, trout streams, mountain lakes and big-game fishing.

The first advertisment shows a beach scene, with the mountains as a background. The second has as its main subject the mountains. The third centers on golfing, the fourth on motoring, the fifth on children and oranges, the sixth on fishing, the seventh on camping and the eighth on children and surf bathing.

Unusually quick work for a campaign of this character has been necessary on the part of the committee in charge of it. This advertising committee is made up of G. Harold Powell, John J. Byrne, John B. Browne, Don Francisco, Sylvester Weaver, Morris Rathbun and C. G. Milham, executive secretary of the club.

ALL-YEAR RESIDENCE.

Their deliberations were influenced by the fact that they must make the world know Southern California as one of the most ideal summer resorts in America and as well an unexcelled all-year-round place of residence. There was the further thought that in a summer campaign chief emphasis at all times must be on "now"—that this summer is the time to make a "different" trip and to come quickly to a summer wonderland where a welcome and a wonderful climate await the sweltering easterners.

Under the general policy laid down by the executive committee, the special advertising body of the club worked out details with infinite care, selecting and rejecting so that the message might speak forceful appeal in every line.

No particular cities, resorts or beaches are featured or specifically mentioned in the advertising, the committee considering the benefit to all part of Southern California alike.

CITIES COVERED.

The complete list of cities in which this advertising is now under way and where it will continue three times a week until the middle of August, includes: Reno, Nev.; Phoenix, Globe, Tucson, Bisbee and Douglas, Ariz.; Salt Lake City, Utah; Denver and Colorado Springs, Colo.; Albuquerque, N. M.; El Paso, Amarillo, Fort Worth, Dallas, Waco, Austin, San Antonio, Houston and Galveston, Tex.; Oklahoma City and Tulsa, Okla.; Wichita and Topeka, Kan.; Kansas City, Joplin and St. Louis, Mo.; Omaha, Neb.; Sioux City, Des Moines and Cedar Rapids, Iowa; Little Rock, Ark.; Memphis, Tenn., and New Orleans.

This campaign is to "tie up" with the later campaign of the All-Year Club, in which $300,000 a year will be spent for the next three years and in which chief emphasis will be laid on the delightfulness of Southern California every month in the year.

AMAZING TIDE OF TRAVEL.

California's on Wheels and Streams of Auto Flood State Highways.

BY PAUL H. BLADES.

California is on wheels. Everybody is going somewhere. The tide of automobile travel is amazing. Nothing like it was ever seen in California before. A spirit of wanderlust has possessed the people. During all the years while men and women have been growing into an understanding of what the auto is coming to mean to them, no such spontaneous and universal outburst of travel-joy has ever been manifest as this vacation time.

And the grand fact about it is that it is absolutely wholesome. Not a thing is to be said against it. If there is a hyper-reformer, who would deprive us of various other joys of life, not a whisper of protest has he raised against the family wanderlust for the mountains of God.

From one end of the State to the other, people are swarming over the highways and through the byways and over the mountains and into hitherto unpenetrated recesses. Maw and paw and the kids and the pups are out for the time of their lives, and they are having it. I know—I have seen them having it. I have been in the thick of the north-flowing and south-flowing currents of the wanderlusters.

MIGHTY STREAMS.

There are four mightly streams of this human current; one originating in the south and flowing northward across the passes and through the beautiful, but narrow, Coast valleys toward the Oregon line, part of it breaking at San Francisco toward the east, and flowing back southward through the great Central San Joaquin Valley; another also having its beginning in the south and streaming northward through the Central San Joaquin, thence southward via the Coast. Two corresponding currents emanate in the north, flow to the south and thence homeward toward the Sacramento, Shasta and Coast mountain country. They are all made up of the same kind of folks. There are criss-crosses and side currents, but the four are the main ones, and they are intensely interesting in their picturesqueness, cheeriness, transparent joyousness and their consideration for people they meet and for machines in trouble. Everybody is going somewhere and having a darned good time doing it.

The auto travelers mostly camp by the wayside or in public camping parks. They avoid hotels. Who wants a stuffy, expensive hotel when he can sleep under the stars and feel the fragrant breath of the sweet breeze fan his face. Who wants a bill of fare when he can get beans and bacon flavored with pine needles and some choice roadside dust?

Hotel men confess it; camp life has put a crimp in their business, except, of course, in a few of the great resorts where the rich go.

The man with the flivver and the kids and the pups can't afford $5 per day per kid and per pup, and the man with the flivver, kids and pups is the man who makes up the swelling tide of automobile travel. There are oodles of swell cars, to be sure, but the democratic flivver loaded with bareheaded kids and small pups, and girls in real pants—they are the real wanderlusters.

The flivver man glides right by the country hotel, and camps in the shade of a pepper or an oak or in a mountain grove if night catches him between towns, and the overflow to him fills the public camp grounds in the towns. He is welcomed because he buys piles of beans and bread and things and gasoline and grease, which he thoughtfully spreads on his outing duds, and because he minds his own business.

PEOPLE ON THE GO.

It is worth a trip from Los Angeles to the Oregon line just to see the people on the go, even if your own system does not crave scenery and dust.

Not so very long ago, to tell a funny story about a Ford car, seemed to be the very perfection of humor, bpt the Ford joke seems to have spent what little force it had. The plain truth is that it is just as bad taste to jeer at a flivver as it would be to sneer a a four-room cottage. The cottage is the home of the masses and the little old flivver is their transportation system. And never was any instrumentality for the utility, joy and general well-being of a human being ever invented equal to the chuggy old flivver. It fills more kinds of needs for more kinds of people than anything else ever devised for human use. Get out on the open road and breast the current of joyous paws and maws and barking pups in squeaking but faithful flivvers and you will realize this fact if you never did before.

I'LL BRING IN A COUPLA B'AR.
OLD TIME ADVENTURER STARTING OUT IN EARLY TWENTIES.

Nobody begrudges the rich man the big car, but on the long hard mountain or sandy or muddy road, many a rich man in a big car has begrudged the efficiency of the obiquitous flivver of anatomical simplicity and authenticated parentage.

FUNNY LOADS.

It's just fine to see the mountains and all the other kinds of scenery up the Coast in among the redwoods and grand rivers of Humboldt county; but it is really wonderfully interesting to see the extraordinary, the unbelievable loads of folks and animals and baggage that get jammed into some of the autos. It is not at all uncommon to see six full-grown people and a dog in a car, and baggage in and tied all around and on top of it. Twice there came zipping along a little chugger having all the honorable scars of long and arduous service, toting six children in the "tuna," paw driving, maw beside him with a seventh kid on her lap—nine parcels of people, and baggage on top and tied to the sides. Complaints! Nary a complaint! That little chugger surely had a real Christian disposition. It went humming along on its Christian way, doing its duty under great difficulties in a world full of trouble.

HEY. GO BACK DOWN. THERE'S ONLY ROOM FOR ONE UP HERE!!

Tahoe and Yosemite are not the whole show. There are first-class ones further north. If you have the time you will find a perfectly wonderful trip about 100 miles along the Eel River in Mendocino and Humboldt counties; through awesome mountains and groves of redwood and gorgeous gorges about 1000 feet deep and only two feet from your outside wheels.

MODERN ADVENTURER STARTING OUT IN SNIPPER TWO.

It's a great country—that Northern California—but mostly grand mountains and bum roads, and small but beautiful valleys and smaller and unbeautiful towns. And you will hardly see a new house north of San Francisco Bay; but a world of fine orchards and grand wheat fields in the upper Sacramento Valley, and altogether you will be glad to make the trip, and it will be sure to make you more satisfied with Southern California.

SOME BUM ROADS.

Sam. Blythe and other clever writers are fond of the phrase "by and large." I don't know exactly what it means, but I will say that the State highways of California are, "by and large," a crumbling monument to the bad judgment, or the inexperience, or the gullibility, or the fallibility, or the stupidity, or the extravagance, or the inefficiency of the State Highway Commission.

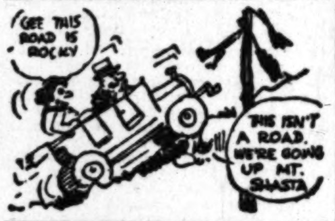
There is a lot of good road, yes, really there is, but there is also an awful stretch of positively rotten highway,—altogether too much for the enormous sums that have been spent. There are miles upon miles that will have to be rebuilt. Miles upon miles that are supposed to cost about $10,000 per mile will cost $20,000 per mile because the original must be rebuilt. Who is to blame for the failure and for the excess expense?

Heavens, you ought to travel some of that so-called State highway between San Francisco Bay and Eureka!

OCEANS OF WATER WASTED.

There are worlds of interesting sights and incidents to delight and engage the attention of the wanderluster on an auto camping trip up one side and down the other of California, but if there is one thing more than anything else, outside of the grandeur of the State, that impressed me it is the immeasurable waste of the vast volumes of water in a region gasping with thirst. Why is not use made of the millions of tons of clear, pure water that is gushing out of the Sierra Nevada Mountains and rushing down in great rivers to the one vast common receiving basin—the Bay of San Francisco?

The San Joaquin and the Sacramento valleys are really one and the same vast unbroken plain of fertile land extending from the north slope of the Tehachepi Mountains on the south to Red Bluff on the north—nearly 500 miles long and about fifty miles wide. There are no interrupting hills. This noble, level plain is nearly half as large as the State of Illinois. It is the largest and best watered body of land west of Kansas. It enjoys a wonderful supply of water, yet it is fairly panting with thirst. This splendid territory could sustain a population of 5,000,000 at least, yet the total is only a few hundred thousand, probably not over 250,000, including such cities as Fresno, Stockton and Sacramento. Millions of acres are not cultivated at all and never have been; hundreds of thousands produce only grain, and all because they are unwatered, while great rivers go rushing through these plains to the sea.



GEE THIS ROAD IS ROCKY
THIS ISN'T A ROAD. WE'RE GOING UP MT. SHASTA

Water! Rivers upon rivers of water! Why, we of Southern California do not know what water is!

Something is wrong. It is said that companies have a stranglehold on the waters of some of these abundant streams. There must be some way to break that hold and irrigate those wide, magnificent plains and build an empire! And what an empire it will be when that 500 miles of rich, level land is under irrigation.

And it will be done! It has paid Los Angeles many times over to vote $25,000,000 of bonds to bring water from Owens Valley. It will pay California many times over to vote $100,000,000 to turn the immense volumes of these rivers on to the great plains of Central California, and build an empire!

I say that the greatest issue before the people of California today is the utilization of the splendid rivers of Central California, corporations or no corporations!

GO, AND BE MADE NEW.

But when all is said and done—there is just one thing to do this glorious summer—get out the "mobe," no matter what kind of a "mobe" it is, and go, just go, and then go some more. If it is a big expensive machine, with all the contraptions that wealth can provide, all well and good—go! If it is a modest car, half auto and half flivver, all well and good, rig it up, and go. If it's just a flivver, whether new or old, no matter whether it is one of the brass-collar and give-the-crank-another-turn vintage, battle scarred, time-tried and road-battered, paintless and topless, just so long as it drinks gas and has wheels, chuck in the kids and the grub and things, and go, just go. Go anywhere—to the white sands by the placid blue sea, or to the majestic mountains, and sequestered canyons.

Go. Go into the solemn temples of the redwoods and the pines. Let the night winds blow across your face. Let the mighty trees talk to you about the goodness of God, who made them grow, that they might pour into your soul, the story of the religion of nature, and the intimacies of the Creator with His creation. Bathe your spirit in the sublimity that everywhere surrounds you in the open, and you will come back to the routines of every-day life, a better man, with a cleansed spirit, a sweetened disposition, and something more of a sense of the presence of God in the universe than you ever had before.

FINGERS TELL STORY OF WOE.

Deaf Mute Wife's Nimble Digits Spell Out Her Griefs to Judge.

Giving her testimony through an interpreter by means of finger signs, Mrs. Fern A. Hackenberg, 20 years old, who has been a deaf mute since she was a babe of 18 months, told a pathetic story to Judge Walton J. Wood in her plea for divorce yesterday.

She related that two brothers, both deaf mutes, married deaf mutes. She herself is the wife of Guy F. Hackenberg and said that she "saw" the husbands discussing a proposal to trade wives and that this was followed by an attempt of her brother-in-law to make love to her. It was further represented that Hackenberg threatened his wife's life with a razor.

Judge Wood granted her a divorce and permitted her to resume her maiden name of Fern Burfield.

DAMAGE SUIT DROPPED.

Judge McCormick yesterday dismissed the $6000 damage suit against the Pacific Electric brought by Mrs. Belle Adams Tannerhill and her husband, James Tannerhill. It is understood that a settlement was effected out of court. Mrs. Tannerhill, according to the complaint, was caught by an arm and an ankle in the exit door of a street car in Pasadena, just as the car started.

BLOW AT "BLUE LAW" APPROVED

Pomona Case Ruling Subject of Much Comment.

Ordinance to Close Theaters Called Discriminatory.

Injunction is Called Signal Victory for Filmland.

The decision of Judge Burnell that the Pomona "blue law," designed to close motion-picture theaters on Sunday is "unconstitutional because discriminatory" has created widespread comment and is said to have met with popular approval.

The West Coast Theaters, Inc., operating two theaters in the mid-valley city, which contested the ordinance, has been deluged with congratulatory telegrams from all over the United States. It is held that the decision will be far-reaching in its effect and that it represents a signal victory for the cinema interests in this State.

Judge Burnell's opinion cites numerous authorities and cases and was reached by what may be termed a process of elimination. He points out that while so-called Sunday laws have been upheld, the decisions were made "not because of any power in the State or the municipality to legislate along religious lines, but because the States in the exercise of their police power and cities in the exercise of the same power, may so legislate as to suppress whatever is hurtful to the general good and so as to protect whatever will tend to promote the peace, health and safety of society." Saloons and pool-halls in many places have been held to be in a class by themselves, owing to conditions which threatened the general good of a community, but theaters cannot be included. He calls attention to the fact that the legal version of the need of a Sunday is in the light of a holiday, to provide a day of rest on the conclusion that men will do better work on the other six days because of the respite.

The main body of his opinion follows:

"Section 1 of the ordinance prohibits keeping open during any portion of any Sunday of certain enumerated places of amusement, including moving-picture theaters, and this applies alike to all of such occupations, whether conducted for profit or not, and irrespective of whether or not an admission fee or other fee is charged. Section 3, however, provides that section one shall not apply or be construed to apply 'to programs, concerts or entertainments given by religious, benevolent, fraternal, patriotic or charitable societies, or other societies of like character, and for admission to which said programs, concerts or entertainments no admission fee is charged.'

"Therefore, such a concert, program or entertainment is prohibited in Pomona on Sunday if an admission fee is charged. It is not, however, prohibited if, instead of charging an admission fee, a collection is taken up. An entertainment consisting of a display of motion pictures may be given on Sunday, provided it is given, not by an individual or a corporation, but by a 'society' of the kind enumerated in section 3. Thus, the identical entertainment, in the identical place, conducted for profit by the proprietor thereof on six days of the week, may be repeated on the seventh provided no admission fee is charged, and it is given by one of the enumerated kinds of societies.

"On the other hand, one of such societies might lawfully, within the terms of the ordinance conduct its entertainment every day in the week. Bearing in mind the theory upon which Sunday laws have been upheld in this State, it seems to me that this ordinance is open to the charge of discrimination. It may be that those who conduct the occupations mentioned in Section 1 require one day of rest in seven, but an ordinance which prohibits their engaging in their respective occupations on one day of the week, provided the business is conducted by an individual or a corporation or a partnership, but allows the same work to be done on seven days of the week if the business is conducted by a benevolent, fraternal, religious or patriotic society, attempts to make a classification, not based upon any intrinsic, natural or constitutional distinction. If those engaged in the occupations, or if the public in general will suffer a detriment if the business is conducted on all seven days of the week, that detriment would, of necessity, be as great whether the business is conducted by an individual, a firm, a corporation, or a society, and cannot be altered or lessened because of the motive by reason of which the business is kept open, or because of the object for which it is conducted. In other words, I fail to see any distinction upon which a separate classification can be made, whereby the same entertainment or performance may lawfully be given on all seven days of the week, by a religious, benevolent, fraternal, patriotic or charitable society, but may be given on only six days of the week by any one else."

DECISION QUOTED.

He quotes from a decision in a similar case, as follows:

"'It is not in the power of the legislative department to deprive any of the people of the enjoyment of equal privileges under the law. Nor can any city be permitted to exercise tyrannical powers. The ordinance is unreasonable because it prohibits what, in general, is perfectly lawful; it reaches and passes the limits of the city's police powers.'"

Judge Burnell has issued an injunction, restraining the city of Pomona from enforcing the ordinance pending the determination of the action in this court. The bond required by the injunction was placed at $1000.

TURNS TABLES ON JOKESTER

Mrs. W. S. James has the Last Laugh About the Famous "Los Angeles Bull."

Mrs. W. S. James, well-known philanthropist and psychopathic worker of 521 Shatto Place, was approached the other day at Ojai, where she is resting for a few days, by a fatuous jokester who sprang on her the hoary wheeze about the two animals for which California is famous—the Oakland mole and the Los Angeles bull.

"Surely," retorted Mrs. James instantly. "That saying started on the Stock Exchange where 'bull' means going up all the time."

"TIMES" EDITORIAL PRAISED BY JUDGE.

FEDERAL JURIST USES THE OPINION IN INSTRUCTING JURY ON DRY LAW.

U. S. District Judge Sawtelle of Arizona, in impaneling a term trial jury in Judge Trippet's department last week, took occasion to praise the opinion expressed in an editorial in The Times of June 30. Under the title "Evils of Nullification" the editorial declared it the duty of courts and juries to enforce the Eighteenth Amendment whether or not individuals might approve of prohibition, the point taken being that the law had been duly authorized and that the only way in which good citizenship could avoid enforcement was by repealing the law.

Judge Sawtelle was giving the new jury advice on the question of enforcement of all laws when he declared that his opinion coincided exactly with that expressed in The Times editorial. He said there was no power so potent to create a healthy public sentiment on any subject as the press, and he praised the sense of good citizenship evidenced by the editorial.

The judge indulged the hope that the jury would not forget that the liquor laws are to be enforced with the same zeal as the inquiry into any violation of the law.

WANTS JUSTICE, NOT REVENGE, SHE SAYS.

SCREEN STAR AND HUSBAND SPURNED HER IN PUBLIC, WIFE DECLARES.

"I am not seeking revenge but, justice," declared Mrs. J. Warde Cohen, 463 Hartford avenue, in reply to statements recently given out by Mr. Cohen, E. D. Horkheimer and Mrs. Horkheimer, whose stage name is Jackie Saunders, charging her with malice in connection with her $50,000 heart-balm suit against the actress.

"In the first place," she said, "I brought the separate-maintenance suit and the damage suit only after my husband and Mrs. Horkheimer had refused even to recognize me in a local department store, and after I had been repeatedly and studiously insulted. As to the truth or falsity of the charges I have made, I await with the confidence the result when the cases are settled in court."

"KICK" AT EVERY CORNER.

Each Act Means Some "High Sign" Now That Booze is Legally Banned.

the order and, gee whizz! was I really pretending I did not know?

Now I ask you, what is a poor girl to do? I seem to have an unconquerable instinct for giving mystic signs that any thirsty old toper would sacrifice his gizzard for. At one place I innocently shook out a clean handkerchief before using it to dust my patrician nose. Once I leaned down to tie a shoe lace, remarking that it never would keep tied. Once I sat with a thumb crooked in the air because I had cut it peeling apples that morning. Once I wore a purple hat and white tie. And every one of those things is a precious mystic sign at some cafe or another that brings an obsequious waiter with a knowing grin to confer should-be-banished nectar upon the sinful.

GROCERS "WISE."

But it isn't only the mystic signs that bring these delicate little embarrassments. I can't go into a grocer's and order three pounds of seedless raisins, ten pounds of sugar, two cans of apricots, five pounds of corn-meal and a couple cakes of yeast—even combined with a pound of bacon, a can of lard and a dozen cakes of soap—without being treated to an intimate, confidential grin by the salesman. It is most disconcerting. Once I fatuously started to explain that I made English boiled puddings with the stuff, but the creature seemed to think that the best joke ever. He hoped I did not put the bacon, lard and soap in, too.

And as for purchasing a big crock jar to keep the cake in—you know how fresh a crock keeps cake—it simply can't be done without arousing the knowing risibilities of some grinning salesman who says fatuously, "Sure, we are selling 'em for that right along."

I shan't play. It isn't a nice game at all. Here am I, a comparatively ladylike person whose parents did their noble best by her, exposed to all sorts of most disconcerting experiences, just because I possess an alarming natural instinct for mystic signs which I would not dream of using for such nefarious purposes. Why, Dick Ferris even whispered a mystic room number in my ear on a very first introduction—and I decline to believe that I used any sign at all, that time.

TRAFFIC IS DELAYED.

Detour to and From Harbor Caused by Drawbridge Accident.

All traffic to and from Los Angeles harbor over the Southern Pacific and the Pacific Electric railroads, will be delayed by detour today and perhaps part of tomorrow because of an accident to the drawbridge over the West Basin yesterday afternoon.

The accident happened when the steam schooner Carlos was being taken from the Los Angeles shipyards to the outer harbor. Just as the ship, in command of Capt. John Malmgren, was about to clear the narrow passage, some misunderstanding of signals caused the wheel man to turn the boat into the side of the bridge. The impact damaged the machinery of the bridge to such an extent that the big iron pile remains suspended in the air. The ship was damaged but slightly and was taken into the outer harbor.

The boat has been tied up at Los Angeles harbor for some time owing to the seamen's strike and has not had a full crew. She is the property of the Donovan Lumber Company of Aberdeen, Wash., and is making ready to re-enter service between this and northern ports, carrying cargoes of lumber.

MAYNE WILL APPEAR BEFORE COURT SOON.

Fred Mayne, who was granted a new trial by the District Court of Appeals, after having been convicted of grand larceny and attempted grand larceny, will be brought to trial again soon, it was indicated yesterday by Dist.-Atty. Woolwine. An application for a rehearing of the appeal was denied on Friday by the District Court, upholding that body's previous decision in granting the new trial. The new trial was granted, the court stated, because the search warrant used to obtain articles offered in evidence, from Mayne's apartments, was not entirely valid in that it did not sufficiently identify the articles which might be connected with the offense of which the defendant was accused.

DAMAGES ARE SOUGHT.

Accused of Infringing Patent and Business Hurt, Is Charge.

Suit for $39,000 was filed yesterday by H. M. Green and Emil Goldman against C. H. Allison, who is purported to have written letters accusing the plaintiffs of infringing on a patent Mr. Allison asserts he owns. It is complained that these letters, sent to their customers, have injured the business of the plaintiffs to the amount of the damages asked.

DIVORCE TANGLE SETTLED.

The divorce tangle of D. D. Sallee and Florence V. Sallee was settled yesterday by Judge Summerfield, who granted the husband a decree on the ground of desertion. Several weeks ago Mrs. Sallee stubbornly contested the action in court. She was granted the custody of a minor child, and he was ordered to pay $50 a month for its support. Mr. Sallee is a practicing attorney.

BLACK EYE BRINGS DECREE.

Grace Curtis was granted a divorce from Lincoln Curtis by Judge Walton J. Wood yesterday. Her complaint was that her husband borrowed some money from her father and that, in an argument with her regarding the matter, he hit her and blackened her eye by the blow. Her sister corroborated testimony charging the husband with verbal cruelty.

GAS COMPANY TO EXPAND.

To increase its plant to meet the enormous demand for gas next winter, the Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corporation has notified the city of the corporation's plans to reconstruct and enlarge its plant on Macy street. Large quantities of new machinery are to be installed at once, and additional land has been purchased to provide for the new equipment.

A SUBTLE STUDY OF VICTORIA.

Lytton Strachey's Brilliant Biography of Queen Victoria Presents with Humor and Piquancy a New Interpretation of that Much Honored Sovereign.

QUEEN VICTORIA. By Lytton Strachey. Harcourt, Brace & Co., New York.

The unveiling of a leading character of history by a biographer who approaches his subject in a spirit of investigation, desiring to penetrate beneath externals and ascertain the truth, rather than either eulogize or condemn, always promises interesting reading. For the most difficult thing to fathom is character. To probe into the motives and conduct, the temperamental bias, the hidden springs of action, the reasons for the strength and the weaknesses of frail humanity is one of the most absorbing as it is one of the most complex tasks of life.

It is this that Lytton Strachey has attempted to do in his book on Queen Victoria. Biography it cannot strictly be called. It has neither the method nor aim of formal biography, making no attempt at a complete and chronological account of the life of its subject and omitting as it does many facts and events that history deems of utmost importance.

Not the political events of the long period during which Victoria wore the crown of England, nor its wars and its problems, its reforms and its retrogressions, not its social and industrial movements, as they affected the crown, but the character of the reigning sovereign is the subject of study.

Other prominent people there are in the book, scrutinised with keenness and developed with brilliant strokes, but these are of importance only as they influenced the central figure of the drama unfolded. For the life of Victoria is a drama as handled by this writer, a comedy of some dignity in which always Victoria is herself the central figure, not because of any inherent greatness but because of the accident of birth.

We see her antecedents, the stolid, ill-tempered, stubborn, stupid and gross Hanovers, brought over from Germany in the person of George I, remaining German, even unto the third and fourth generation, with a deep love for the fatherland, its strong food and its strong drink, its uncouth manners and its dear traditions. Even Victoria's father, the self-satisfied and self-indulgent Duke of Kent, spent most of his time in Germany, spoke German in his home and felt ill at ease in England. Because there seemed a remote chance that he or his progeny might succeed to the throne, this good man gave up his mistress, who satisfied him perfectly, and married with ring and book Victoria Mary Louisea, daughter of a German princeling and sister of Prince Leopold, who later became King of the Belgians. This widow of thirty-two, "short, stout, with brown eyes and rosy cheeks, cheerful and voluble and gorgeously attired in rustling silks and bright velvets," was the mother of two children by her first marriage.

The Duke of Kent, who, according to Wellington, was popularly referred to in English society as "Joseph Surface," struggled along with his debts and his wife in Germany, until shortly before Victoria's birth. Then he determined to go to England so that the child might be born there. Lack of funds necessitated making as much of the journey as possible by private carriage, the Duke himself acting as coachman. "Bad roads, cheap inns, were nothing to the rigorous Duke and the equable, abundant Duchess. The Channel was crossed. London was reached in safety. The authorities provided a set of rooms in Kensington Palace, and there, on May 24, 1819, a female infant was born."

At first there seemed little likelihood of her succession to the throne, but a kind Providence removed one after another of those that stood between her and the crown, including her own father, so that at 18, upon the death of her uncle, William IV, which, thank heaven, Mr. Strachey does not refer to as the bluff sailor, Victoria became Queen of England.

Her first command was to have her bed removed from the room of her too domineering mother, under whose sway she had suffered long and patiently. Victoria as a child wanted "to be good." She was brought up in the strictest rules of propriety by her German mother and her German governess. Virtue, obedience, politeness, industry, along with a proper horror of the sins of society, were carefully instilled into her. Her governess, Fraulein Lehzen, later made Baroness, early won her affection and her confidence and so was able to bend her as she wished.

Mr. Strachey conceives of Victoria as from her earliest years under the complete domination of some one personality. First there was her mother, whose "good, plain, thrifty German mind recoiled with horror and amazement from the shameless junketings of Carleton House" and who never allowed the small Victoria to forget for a moment the virtues of simplicity, regularity, propriety and devotion.

But the mother's implacable temper overawed the child and she turned to the more diplomatic Lehzen, under whose influence she remained until after her marriage.

Upon ascending the throne it was Lord Melbourne, Prime Minister, in whom she placed her trust. "After a remarkable career, with old age upon him, he became, in the twinkling of an eye, the intimate adviser and the daily companion of a girl who had stepped all at once from a nursery to a throne." Mr. Strachey declares that she found him perfect, and perfect in her sight he remained. He continues: "Her absolute and unconcealed adoration was very natural; what innocent young creature could have resisted, in any circumstances, the charm and the devotion of such a man? But, in her situation, there was a special influence which gave a peculiar glow to all she felt. After years of emptiness and dullness and suppression, she had come suddenly, in the heyday of youth, into freedom and power. She was mistress of herself, of great domains and palaces; she was Queen of England. Responsibilities and difficulties she might have, no doubt, and in heavy measure; but one feeling dominated all others—the feeling of joy. Everything pleased her. She was in high spirits from morning till night."

It is to her diary that Mr. Strachey goes to ascertain the state of mind of the young Queen. In its "rosy radiance" he finds the figure of Lord Melbourne emerging, glorified and supreme. "If she is the heroine of the story," he remarks, "he is the hero . . . Her paradise was peopled by two persons and surely that was enough. One sees them together still, a curious couple, strangely united in those artless pages, under the magical illumination of that dawn of eighty years ago; the polished high fine gentleman with the whitening hair and whiskers and the thick dark eyebrows and the mobile lips and the big expressive eyes; and beside him the tiny Queen—fair, slim, elegant, active, in her plain girl's dress and little tippet, looking up at him earnestly, adoringly, with eyes blue and projecting and half-open mouth. So they appear upon every page of the Journal . . ."

Even when Prince Albert came to woo her as per directions and quite captured her susceptible heart Victoria still clung to her Melbourne. And for some time after her marriage the Prince remained a cipher politically. "Lord Melbourne was not only Prime Minister, he was in effect the private secretary of the Queen, and thus controlled the whole of the political existence of the sovereign."

With Lord Melbourne to lean upon in state affairs and the Baroness Letzen in absolute control of all domestic arrangements, the poor good young man who had married the Queen found no need for his abundant talent, no room for his dawning ambition. "In short," as Mr. Strachey remarks, "Albert very soon perceived that he was not master in his own house." That "his" house happened to be the Queen of England's and that there is no divine decree in regard to male mastership in the house does not occur even to the brilliant author of this remarkable book.

However, to the downtrodden Prince came Baron Stockmar, who is made the Col. House of the drama. For years this practical philosopher had been the confidential adviser of "Uncle" Leopold and it was this uncle that sent him to Albert in his hour of need. "Left to himself, Albert," says Mr. Strachey, "would almost certainly have subsided into a high-minded nonentity, an aimless dilettante busy over culture, a palace appendage without influence or power. But he was not left to himself. Stockmar saw to that. Forever at his pupil's elbow, the hidden baron pushed him forward, with tireless pressure, along the path which had been trodden by Leopold so many years ago."

Political change brought about the removal of Lord Melbourne. Shortly after this event Albert, who had at last arrived at the happy stage where "every word, every velleity of his had only to be expressed to be at once Victoria's" spoke, and Letzen vanished forever. "Victoria had surrendered her whole soul to her husband."

So she remained until the day of his death, the adoring handmaiden, the obsequious admirer, the subject queen—at least so she reveals herself in her journal and so our author pictures her.

Albert, on his part, labored incessantly. From early dawn to late night he worked over state papers, taking notes and mastering their contents and then with patient indulgence explaining to the rapt Victoria what she should think about the questions involved. At his polite suggestion she invariably signed on the dotted line, delighted to be instructed by such a paragon.

Mr. Strachey sees under Albert's assiduous efforts the strength and influence of the crown increased and extended. What might have been the results had he lived to a ripe old age instead of dying at 42 it is hard to determine. As it was, Victoria was submerged by a desolating grief at his loss. She determined to continue, "absolutely unchanged, and for the rest of her life on earth, her reverence, her obedience, her idolatry." She told her uncle that Albert's plans, his wishes about everything were to be her laws, adding, "No human power will swerve me from what he decided and wished."

"But there was nobody to tell her what was right and what was wrong," remarks Mr. Strachey, with transparent seriousness. What, under these circumstances, was a distracted queen to do?

After a few years of incessant effort, which Mr. Strachey records so conscientiously and so derides between the lines, a new Moses was raised up in the person of Disraeli, arch flatterer. He was astute enough to convince Victoria almost at his first interview that he alone among public men had divined her feelings at Albert's death. All his audiences took the form of reverential eulogies of the departed. To her, who still kept Albert's apartments as they had been at his death, who slept with his death masque over her pillow, and had his clothes laid out and his bath prepared every morning for years after his death, Disraeli's methods were altogether successful.

The wily minister remarked that Victoria wanted flattery laid on with a trowel, and he proceeded to so lay it on. When his ministry was wavering before the onslaughts of Gladstone, the perturbed Queen thought that "Really there never was such conduct as that of the Opposition," and when the ministry fell, she wrote that she was "really shocked at the way in which the House of Commons go on; they really bring discredit on constitutional government."

After five years of enduring Gladstone's ministry, Disraeli was returned to office. "There followed," says Strachey, "six years of excitement, of enchantment, of glory, of romance. The amazing being, who now at last, at the age of 70, after a lifetime of extraordinary struggles, had turned into reality the absurdest of his boyhood's dreams, knew well enough how to make his own, with absolute completeness, the heart of the Sovereign Lady whose servant, and whose master, he had miraculously become."

Disraeli was the last of her alter egos in state affairs. To be sure there was John Brown, who helped to make her private life happy. Him Mr. Strachey refrains from discussing at great length.

Disraeli died in 1880 and three years later John Brown passed on. The Queen turned from middle to old age, settling down as the respected and respectable widow of Windsor, much occupied with her worldly possessions and her large and ever increasing posterity.

In the latter phase of her life, "with no Albert to guide her, with no Beaconsfield to inflame her, she was willing enough to abandon the dangerous questions of diplomacy to the wisdom of Lord Salisbury."

A remarkable book, a fascinating one, in which the subtle humor of the author, subdued and so all the more delightful, lights up every page. If at times the tinge of irony becomes too marked, there is no real unkindness of purpose, and so no bitterness. Hyperbole there is at times, but when we read from the Queen's diary we feel that, after all, perhaps Mr. Strachey does not much exaggerate her egotism, her devotion to those chosen few upon whom she depended, her shallowness of intellect, and her total lack of any grasp of politics and statesmanship.

It is not only the humor and the brilliant style that make the book such delightful reading. It is the implication, half-revealed and half-concealed, that add to its picquancy and its charm. It is these qualities that hold the reader throughout the 424 pages of this book and punctuate its perusal with frequent chuckles of appreciation at the many sly digs Mr. Strachey distributes with such apparent innocence.

THE ISOLATION PLAN.

We have already had books on the League of Nations by diplomats, by politicians, by novelists, by newspapermen, by officials of the Army and Navy, by financiers and by military strategists, and now the international lawyer enters the lists with the announcement of the publication of "The Isolation Plan," by the Cornhill Publishing Company. William H. Blymyer, the author of the book, which is said to be a comprehensive and practical scheme for maintaining peace in the world, is an expert in international law, and his writings have for some time been much discussed in diplomatic circles.

JESUIT'S VIEW OF EVOLUTION.

EVOLUTION AND SOCIAL PROGRESS. By Joseph Husslein, S.J., Ph.D. P. J. Kennedy & Sons, New York.

This book is worth the consideration of the thinking reader, as the utterance of a member of the Society of Jesuits, the accredited teaching order of his church, who is also an editor and the writer of several sociological works. It is thus a reliable authority regarding the attitude toward its subjects of the religious body for whom its author speaks.

Farther Husselein opens his thesis with the sweeping statement that the root of all our social errors is to be found in what he refers to as "the dogma" of material evolution. For material evolution logically negatives the existence of God and the immortality of man. Therefore with the fear of God and of eternal punishment removed, "everything is permitted." It also makes freedom of the will impossible since under mechanistic law men act as they must. Men therefore are deprived of the hope of hereafter being rewarded for their virtues, and also freed from the fear of being punished for their sins.

Father Husslein next refers to "scientific evolution," which he tells us "can be accepted by the church just as far as its application is supported by actual proof." These, he says, are the only restrictions which the church would place upon science, namely, that it keep within the bounds of known fact. The author quotes from Father Hull as to the applied limits of this kind of evolution. The quotation is too long to be given in full, but may be summarized as follows:

(1.) That even if the whole formation of the physical world was achieved by a process of evolution, the elements were created by God.

(2.) That all the laws of evolution were imprinted on these elements by God.

(3.) That even plant life belongs to a higher order than that of matter, and could not be produced from matter; therefore there must have been a direct act of plant creation.

(4.) That as animals belong to a superior order than plant life the necessity again arises for direct creative action.

(5.) That as the rational soul of man is of an essentially higher order than animal life, this again required a special act of creation on the part of God to bring the soul of the first man into existence and the same direct act of creation must be performed to produce the soul of each human being while the body is being produced by natural germination."

In a much later chapter of his book entitled "Catholics and Evolution," Father Husslein returns to this subject and at this time gives us an outline of St. Augustine's theory of evolution, which is much simpler, and is given at some length in the Catholic Encyclopedia, by Father Knabenbauer. Indeed, most of the subjects taken up in the later part of this work are treated exactly as in the encyclopedia abovementioned. The aim of the author is to recapitulate these, in order to effectively combat "materialistic evolution," which he believes to be running amuck in all our institutions of learning and that all secular teachings are based upon it as a dogma. He also goes out of his way to make a number of other charges against university professors, all based upon the assertions of a certain magazine writer named Bolce and once published in that highly reliable, and conspicuously pure and noble magazine known as the Cosmopolitan.

Only those who have been students at our American universities are qualified to testify as to their teaching, and those know that evolution has already been presented as a mode, never as a cause, and put forward not as a dogma but as a theory which fits more ascertained facts than any other. It is held that physics and metaphysics have each their own realm and therefore discussions of or speculations regarding the Causeless Cause are not held in the laboratory, but as surely taken for granted as is the existence of our planet. It is true that in a modern university all mundane habits, customs and institutions are summoned to its sociological classroom as with a trumpet and held for judgment. Free expression of opinion is of course encouraged for the sake of teaching students to think and to discriminate. But it may truly be declared that the basic formation of adherence to truth and justice, as it is given men to know these virtues, is well and truly laid in every secular American classroom. It is also a fact that as a class the teachers in our institutions of learning, who are accused of so depraving the minds of our youth, will compare favorably in character, conduct and ideals with any other class of citizens, priests and parsons not excepted. It is to be regretted that such scathing denunciations of this class, who truly "scorn delights and live laborious days" in order to fit their charges for life to the best of their ability, should have been uttered on such flimsy evidence.

Probably the most valuable, as it is assuredly the most interesting, chapter in this volume is the one entitled "The Decline of Men and Races." Father Husslein here calls attention to the fact that there are many proofs of human devolution as well as evolution. He finds unimpeachable authority for the statement that most, if not all the savage races of today are degenerates from a superior state of culture. Such lapses cannot always be scientifically explained and Father Husslein has reason on his side in arguing that the fall of these races in all probability is due to their unrestrained selfish and sensual indulgences. No one who has watched the effects of such vices upon individuals can consistently negative the author's conclusions upon this subject. For at the ends of ends all thinking men must agree that "righteousness exalteth a nation."

TWO NEW DUTTON BOOKS.

Two books of literary interest and value from the publishing house of E. P. Dutton & Co. are "Shelley and Calderon and Other Essays on English and Spanish Poetry," by Salvador de Madariaga and "The Tale of Terror: A Study of the Gothic Romance," by Edith Birkhead. The former contains four essays that discuss and compare Spanish and British poets and their work. The latter gives an informative account of the growth of supernatural fiction in English literature, beginning with the vogue of the Gothic romance and tales of terror toward the end of the eighteenth century and continuing the study to modern times. One of the chapters is devoted to the development of this form of fiction in the United States and takes up the work of Irving, Hawthorne and Poe.

FROM HUMOR TO DRAMA.

Clarence Budington Kelland, whose character creation "Scattergood Baines" in a book of that name has been called the new David Harum, is spending the summer at work. At his Long Island home he goes to his desk on the stroke of nine every morning as promptly as if he were compelled to punch a time clock. The result is that Kelland is now completing a new novel. It will differ from "Scattergood Baines," which is the revelation of a character through a shrewd sort of humor, for the new story is dramatic in treatment and has a more serious view of modern life.

BOOK ON RUSSIA.

In a book entitled "Russia as Seen from the American Embassy," the United States Ambassador to Russia, first under the Czar, then under Kernesky, and finally under Trotzky and Lenin, for the first time tells the full story of those momentous days. David R. Francis, the author of this book, which is scheduled for publication by Charles Scribner's Sons during the summer, has not felt that it was proper to speak sooner of the situation in Russia and of his experience there.

RECENT FICTION.

THE PROFITEERS. By E. Phillips Oppenheim. Little, Brown & Co., Boston.

This is the story of a struggle between two speculators of the usual unscrupulous type. One, an American named Wingate, goes to England and there locks horns with Phipps, an expatriate, who, with a group of British grain speculators, has succeeded in cornering the supply of wheat and boosting the price to a point where the workman's loaf of bread is more than doubled in cost.

While Wingate is actuated to some extent by motive of decency, since he deplores speculating in foodstuffs, with the raising of the price which works a hardship on the masses, his primary purpose is to break Phipps, between whom and himself there is a long-standing feud. Phipps may be said to be unscrupulous in both method and purpose, while Wingate's purpose is at least tinged with the color of decency. But when it comes to methods both men are utterly devoid of any sense of morality, each quite the modern outlaw.

The plot is an ancient one with a simple device added to give it the aspect of originality. There is a queer triangle, which is developed in the usual way by removing the stumbling block to the hero's aims and desires.

The book has none of the verve and go of "The Great Impersonation," by the same author. The methods employed are the stereotyped ones used by big business in its battles for supremacy, according to the usual formulae worked out by fiction writers of the Oppenheim school, of whom there is no dearth.

The rather lax relationship of the sexes now so prevalent in British fiction is evident here. Taken on the whole the book is just a commonplace piece of work that will add nothing to the author's reputation as a writer of lively stories for tired people, who read not for stimulation, but for relaxation.

THE HOUSE IN QUEEN ANNE SQUARE. By W. D. Lyell. G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York.

Whether it was James or Christopher Langworthy that survived the railroad wreck at Elspeth Junction is the question that harasses the reader of this book as it did many of the characters in this complex tale of mystery, murder and impersonation. Christopher Langworthy was a respected member of society who had amassed a fortune in India, while his twin brother James was a rascal and confidence man as skillful as he was unscrupulous.

After the accident the survivor, who purported to be Christopher, was nursed back to health in the house in Queen Anne Square, where he was attended by his man Parker and by his secretary, Christine O'Mara. His lovely daughter Maria, much concerned over her father's health, puzzled not a little over the change in his disposition and manner that had followed the accident.

To while away the time the sprightly Maria entered into an amateur performance of a comic opera, written by a gifted young man who had long been her friend. The rehearsals were jolly larks in which the high-spirited company gave vent to all their enthusiasm. These are described with so much spirit as to make delightful reading.

But gradually an atmosphere of doubt, of suspicion, of suspense creeps in. Mr. Pennifeather, one of the amateur actors, proves to be a quasi-detective in disguise, and it is he who puts forth the suggestion that the man posing as Maria's father is in fact the scamp, James Langworthy. Christine O'Mara is another cause of apprehension. She does queer things, makes cryptical remarks, creates a feeling of distrust and dread. Parker, too, is not the commonplace valet he first appeared. He evidently has some hold on Mr. Langworthy, and to cap the climax, concealed lifts, unsuspected anterooms and strange exotic flowers with an overpowering perfume attract and mystify.

Then comes the sudden death of the author of the comic opera, with Maria acting in a strange way. In the end the kinks are all unraveled, though the author teasingly throws up some new doubts in the end.

The book has many cleverly handled situations, handled with a lightness of touch that is unusual in a story of this nature. Notable is the description of a murder trial in the Edinburgh courts, where acute lawyers clash with a determined and domineering judge.

THE FIRE BRINGERS. By Francis Lynde. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.

Imagine, if you can, a young man, son of one of the nation's greatest capitalists, who, much to his busy father's disgust, has drifted about the world racing fast motor boats and automobiles, suddenly being transformed into a keen, enthusiastic executive, with the faculty of getting the very maximum of business results from the most ordinary human material.

Of course there is a woman at the bottom of this, that woman being Marion Pettus, daughter of Col. Pettus, a high-minded, dignified son of the old South. Just how Frederick Corydel meets Marion, how her few words of stinging rebuke aroused in him all facilities inherited from his shrewd old father but lying dormant because of lack of incentive, started this scion of wealth upon his way; how he revived the rapidly dying Mussel Bar project, outgeneraled his father's agent on the spot, who was bent on wrecking the project, and then taking it over for the Universal Electric, otherwise known as the Electric Trust, is all told with a wealth of detail that is so well done as to give this impossible yarn a very considerable amount of verisimilitude.

A good story, written in the best Saturday Evening Post style, which means that it is one that is easy to read and easy to forget.

Zona Gale Lectures on "The Novel."

Zona Gale had as her subject, "The Novel" when she lectured at one of a series of conferences that are being given at Columbia University on the general topic of "Literature in America." Recognition of Miss Gale's play-writing was made at Columbia by the $1000 Pulitzer Prize award this year to her play, "Miss Lulu Bett," as the best American play of the year, and now Columbia is hearing the ideas of the author of the novel, "Miss Lulu Bett," on her craft as a fictionist.

HOW POE WROTE "THE RAVEN"

How Edgar Allan Poe stood in the rain under a Broadway street lamp and wrote at least a few lines of "The Raven" and read part of his immortal poem to his friend, the late Dr. Cornelius Mathews, journalist and lawyer, is told in the New York University Alumnus. The story as he told it was set down by his niece, Frances Aymar Mathews, and a copy of it sent recently to Chancellor Brown of New York University for preservation. It is as follows:

"It was a drizzly night in the winter of 1844-45. With a play of my own which I was trying to get produced, I went to the famous old Park Theater, then on Park Row. When seated I found myself beside Poe, whom I had known for a number of years.

"He spoke a little of his wife, after my inquiries; of her not being able to come out on a night like this; of his mother-in-law, of Willis, of Lowell, Mrs. Browning, and, drifting homeward, of ourselves.

"He was one of the most courteous and attentive listeners I ever encountered, and, with a delicacy and interest unbounded, he inquired as to the play I was so intent upon. It was 'Witchcraft' and as briefly as I could I outlined the plot to him. As I came to the close of the fourth act, depicting the anguish and horror of my hero, Gideon, on being convinced that his mother is in truth a witch, beholding as he does the signs in the elements and in the sky, Poe, his gaze fixed before him, said in his low, melodious voice, 'Mr. Mathews, why do you not at this point have a raven, that bird of ill-omen, flit across the stage over the witch's head?'

"I told him that while the picturesqueness of the bird would be undeniable, the unity of the atmosphere would be disturbed by its introduction, that a raven in Salem town would never do.

"'Do you know,' Poe replied, his eyes still immovably riveted on the glowing space before him, his voice so low it could not disturb even his nearest neighbor, 'that that bird, that imp-bird pursues me mentally, perpetually; I [illegible] its presence; as I [illegible] to hear the [illegible] as I used to [illegible] days at school [illegible] I seem to [illegible] wings in my [illegible]

by Edgar Rice Burroughs

ADVENTURE upon adventure—each more exciting than the last—follow fast as Tarzan in the search for his lost wife travels through Pal-ul-don—an unknown corner of Darkest Africa.

It was barred from the rest of the world by stupendous mountains and vast morasses in whose slimy depths lurked monstrous reptiles. In Pal-ul-don time had stood still for centuries. In its forests lived two-footed men and beasts such as existed in pre-historic times when the world was young.

"Tarzan the Terrible" is a thrilling book and Tarzan's admirers will revel in its pages.

MUSICAL.

McCORMACK COMING.

SECURED BY PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA TO SING IN APRIL.

Caroline E. Smith, secretary-treasurer for the Philharmonic Orchestra of Los Angeles, while in New York signed contracts for two appearances of the world-famous tenor, John McCormack, to sing with the orchestra next April.

This news will cause unusual joy to all symphony subscribers and serve greatly to increase the season ticket sale, which has already more than doubled that of last season at this time.

Mrs. Smith is to be congratulated on being able to secure the signature of McCormack to an agreement to sing with the orchestra, as he is in such great demand for concerts that it is very rarely that he can be induced to make an orchestral appearance. It is claimed that this will be his only appearance with an orchestra during his entire coast-to-coast tour next season.

Mrs. Smith wires that she has several other agreeable surprises in store for patrons of both the orchestra and the Philharmonic Auditorium for the coming season. Among these may be mentioned the most significant of all stage productions, "Aphrodite," Morris Guest's spectacular play, with over 300 people in the cast; the San Carlo Grand Opera for a two weeks' engagement in February, and the Greenwich Village Follies, which created such a splendid impression last season.

Gloria Mayne Home Again.

Gloria Mayne has returned for the summer, and at present is with her sister, Mrs. Philip Shanahan, 3024 Seventh avenue.

Mrs. Mayne spent the season of 1920 in the Middle States, and the tour closed in Western Canada. After the summer season, during which this singer was soloist with Harry Barnhart's magnificent band at Central Park, New York, Mrs. Mayne left for the South, filling engagements through Tennessee, Georgia and Florida in the theaters and women's clubs.

After two months on tour in Florida, Mrs. Mayne returned by boat to New York, and thence went to Boston, where several dates were filled in April and May. The Southern tour was under the direction of B. F. Nixon of Augusta, Ga.

Out of Town.

Miss Ethel Abbott, director of the Abbott Dancing School, and small daughter, Verna Mae, are spending the month of July at Lake Tahoe.

Art Center Program.

The Los Angeles Art Center, supported by many of the well-known artists of the city, will hold another of its social affairs today at 8 p.m.

Gertrude Ross will be the guest of honor. Edmund Russell will act as host, and Mrs. Howard Verbeck as hostess.

At this meeting plans will be formulated for the second benefit performance, the proceeds of which will be used for scholarships.

A very interesting program will be given by the following artists: Gertrude Ross, Mrs. May Levengood, Miss Esther Rhoades, George Walker, Christian Sprotte and Carrol de Souchet.

Actively engaged in the Art Center are Mme. Anna Sprotte, director of the opera; Frank Keenan, director of drama; William Tyroler, director of the orchestra; George Smart, director of the ballet.

Donahue's Parisian Success.

Lester Donahue, Los Angeles pianist, is winning laurels and honors abroad. He made his debut recently at Salle des Agriculteurs, on which occasion the critic in Le Figaro wrote of him:

"The young pianist is a pupil of Rudolph Ganz and possesses the main qualities of his great master's musical intelligence and clear virtuosity. His interpretations of Brahms were very poetical. We liked the way in which he rendered the Debussy and Dohnanyi pieces. To acknowledge the ovations he received from his admiring audience, the young pianist had to give several encores, which were greatly appreciated."

Concert Program.

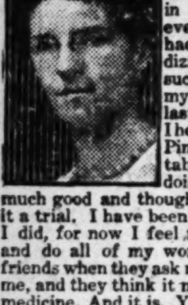
Following is the concert to be given by the Los Angeles municipal band of sixty-five pieces at the Hollywood Bowl this afternoon at 5 o'clock:

1—Choral, "Lead Kindly Light."
2—Overture, "Orpheus" .... Offenbach
3—Selection, "Fortune Teller" .... Herbert
4—Duett for Oboe and Harp, "Ava Maria" .... Bach-Gounod
Oboe, Mr. Memoli; Harp, Mr. Graf.
5—Master Melodies of Grand Opera .... Sarli
6—(a) "Humoresque" .... Dvorak
"Musical Oldities" .... Cronshaw
7—Vocal Solo, selected.
Miss Helen Tappe.
8—Grand American Fantasy .... Herbert

SYMPTOMS WOMEN DREAD

Mrs. Wilson's Letter Should Be Read by All Women

Clearfield, Pa.—"After my last child was born last September I was unable to do all of my own work. I had severe pains in my left side every month and had fever and sick dizzy spells and such pains during my periods, which lasted two weeks. I heard of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound doing others so much good and thought I would give it a trial. I have been very glad that I did, for now I feel much stronger and do all of my work. I tell my friends when they ask me what helped me, and they think it must be a grand medicine. And it is. You can use this letter for a testimonial if you wish."—Mrs. HARRY A. WILSON, R. F. D. 5, Clearfield, Pa.



The experience and testimony of such women as Mrs. Wilson prove that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will correct such troubles by removing the cause and restoring the system to a normal condition. When such symptoms develop as backache, bearing-down pains, displacements, nervousness and "the blues" a woman cannot act too promptly in trying Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

CELEBRATION PLANS BY CUMNOCK SCHOOL.

The close of summer school at Cumnock School of Expression, 200 South Vermont avenue, will be marked on Wednesday, July 27, by a studio tea of special interest to graduates of high schools of Los Angeles, as well as to students of Cumnock. Miss Jane E. Farley, instructor in vocal interpretation of literature, will read, and Miss Holly Lash, a student, will sing several numbers.

Plans are now being formed to celebrate the opening of the fall sessions with an appropriate program, commemorating the work of the founders. Miss Helen A. Brooks, director of the school, will act as hostess on this occasion.

Twelve Red Cross medals were won by students of Cumnock, according to an announcement yesterday, and the school is now entitled to a charter for a young ladies' life-saving corps. Swimming tests were conducted at Bimini under official auspices and in connection with the school's regular program of physical education. Basketball, tennis and other outdoor games also are provided for in the physical curriculum.

Ambassador Concert.

The Ambassador Artist Ensemble, Henri J. Van Praag, director, will hold their usual Sunday evening concert in the Ambassador lobby.

Senorita Lucia Hernandez will sing the aria from "Cavaleria Rusticana," by Mascagni, and "Clavelitos," by Valverde.

Following is the program:

1—Overture, "Zampa" .... Herold
2—Aria from "Cavalleria Rusticana" .... Mascagni
Senorita Lucia Hernandez.
3—"In Dahomey"—A Negro Musical Comedy .... Marion Cook
4—"Clavelitos" .... Valverde
5—"Mlle. Modiste" .... Victor Herbert

PIERRE KEY'S Music Article

BY PIERRE V. R. KEY

NEW YORK, July 16.—The matter of Americanism in music is decidedly pertinent. Once every so often it is brought up for consideration . . . usually by some person who feels that American musicians are not getting a fair chance. The old bugaboo of the imported article being commonly regarded as superior to the home-grown brand still continues in many sections of the country, but by no means to the extent it once did. There was a time when an American signer or instrumentalist had literally to fight his or her way to a stage and metaphorically threaten the auditors to keep their seats until the end. And in those days, which are gone, never to return, it was thought that any young man who took up music seriously was a bit weak in his mind.

A good many people who continue to rail about the lack of opportunity afforded our musically young seem to overlook the progress we have made in the last dozen years. They are inclined to speak in general terms rather than specifically. They forget, I find (when arguments occur,) to look up a few statistics before they start debating what is steadily interesting a larger number of people in this country than it ever did before, because—the American public is now definitely and forever pledged to music.

On every hand we have evidence enough to convince the person who cares to look more than casually that music, with us, has become secondary in importance only to the food required to sustain us, the shelter to protect us against the weather, and the clothing which police regulations demand we must wear. As we scrutinize this evidence it is astonishing to discover how widely represented America is in the various branches of music. I'll admit that the composers are having none too easy a time of it, yet those who turn out compositions of reasonable merit appear to find a market for them . . . . right in this country. The big symphony orchestra conductors are performing a representative number of American works every season, and each year records progress in the consideration given the creative musician born and brought up in the these United States of ours.

ABILITY THE MAIN THING.

While merit does not always obtain immediate recognition, it is not so difficult a matter nowadays for the undeniably superior American musician to get a hearing. So many native singers, pianists and violinists have made places for themselves that the nationality element is beginning to fade before such opposition as will always appear before the person who seeks to get somewhere.

Excepting those few great foreign artists who dominate the concert field, we find upon checking up that the Americans rather monopolize it. In the Metropolitan and the Chicago opera companies there are more Americans than singers of any other one nationality. In the teaching field there are many times more Americans than foreigners. In the light of these facts it is difficult to understand the persistent attitude of some people with respect to the downtrodden American in music.

It is perfectly true that thousands of young men and women find each year that the struggle is too much for them—a thing that is known to happen in every line of business and in the other professions. But those who fail in their efforts to succeed are generally those who never should have undertaken to take up music professionally.

I have heard, in the past few months, a great many young folk sing and play in auditions. These auditions were contests, and were supposed to bring forward the best material from all parts of the country. Frankly, I heard little that impressed me as worth developing for professional purposes. There were plenty of good voices, and plenty of moderate talent; what was lacking was the exceptional gifts which are required to carry anyone to success in music, and also the development of the gifts apparent to a point which justified serious consideration.

Our boys and girls want to give some thought to these matters. Average musical ability may be enough to start with, if there be coupled to it rare intelligence, industry and personality. But we should no more expect to get to the peak of music success with fair resources than, given moderate legal qualifications, we held the Supreme Court to be a probable goal.

Nothing is the matter with Americans in music. They are coming to the top steadily, and strong. And the American audiences are gradually extending recognition where it is deserved . . . regardless of whether the candidate is of this country.

WISE GERALDINE FARRAR.

Ambitious American girls may follow with profit to themselves the methods of Miss Geraldine Farrar, who has succeeded largely because of her thoroughness in preparing for her public appearances. Miss Farrar is to sing in Massenet's one-act opera, "La Navarraise" at the Metropolitan next season. She heard and saw Mme. Calve in the leading soprano role many years ago, yet the importance of the task prompted Miss Farrar to run out to Chicago a few days ago, where, at Ravinia Park, this work was being performed for the first time.

"I learned more through that one performance," declared the prima donna to me during a chat we had after her return, "than I could have discovered in ten rehearsals. The impossibility of making my voice stand out against portions of the overwhelming orchestration was clearly disclosed during the Ravinia Park presentation. As a consequence I will begin my work to appear in 'La Navarraise,' fortified and enlightened as I never could have been without having gone to Chicago."

The quality of opera given in the metropolis of the west is coming more and more to be appreciated. Many of the Metropolitan's best artists are members of that organization, among them Miss Marie Sundelius, Mario Chamlee, Charles Hackett, Frances Peralta and Morgan Kingston. The first four, incidentally, are Americans, and other American members of that organizations are Misses Florence Macbeth, Anna Fitziu and Alice Gentle, all of whom have gained from the public and press much praise for their accomplishments.

Go down to Cincinnati, if you will, and look over the roster of the municipal opera company which is appearing there; you will find American names appearing on it . . . and also on the roster of the company which is giving performances of light opera at St. Louis's Forest Park. As I observed before, a little search for evidence of the American progress in music brings plenty of it to light. Only last week Reinald Werrenrath returned from London, where his recent recitals were indorsed by the music critics and the people so forcibly that only the most popular English singers would appear to have a chance with this American baritone.

THE MUSIC UNIONS AGAIN.

With the starting of the current season of Stadium concerts, up on Washington Heights, we found a different orchestra in personnel from that which played there last year. Until ten days ago its was thought that New York instrumentalists would make up this organization, as they have in the past. But the Musical Mutual Protective Union has its back up, it appears, over an alleged claim due from the former National Symphony Orchestra. And, although this organization (while formerly having used the National players in its concerts) had no connection with the National, the local union refused to permit any member to accept a contract.

There were plenty of Philadelphia Symphony men to be had though; and enough from other places enabled an orchestra to be secured which is quite as excellent in quality as that New York could have furnished. So ten weeks of work slipped through the fingers of eighty or more men . . . which will amount to nearly $50,000.

The local union is standing pat in its demands on the permanent symphony orchestra for the coming season, and also for the men who are to play in the Metropolitan Operahouse. The members have voted to make no concessions, and the outcome is one to be watched with grave concern. The men who are backing these big organizations have yielded, season after season, to the demands of the union orchestra players. But they have reached, now, the breaking point. We shall know, in the course of a few weeks, what the attitude is to be. For the moment the situation, to say the least, is indeed serious.

COMMUNISM REPUDIATED.

Morris Hillquit, author of "Socialism on Trial" (Huebsch) and chairman of the Socialist convention at Detroit, has taken occasion in several speeches delivered to the convention, to denounce the attempts of the soviet government of Russia to dominate the Socialist party of this country. "The American Socialist Party," Mr. Hillquit said, "has no international aims."

MANUSCRIPTS ARE SOUGHT.

World-Wide Search Made for Precious Scripts.

One Lost Book, 500 Years Old, Collector's Mania.

Bibliophiles Here May Receive Treasures.

BY HAYDEN CHURCH.

[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

LONDON, July 16.—What astonishing hobbies some people have and what a lot of time and money they are ready to spend in the process of riding them! Imagine ransacking the whole world for a lost book more than five centuries old and scouring Europe to discover at which of half a dozen medieval abbeys other ancient volumes, dating back to 1230, were originally produced! How he did these things and a lot of other surprising ones, involving the expenditure of endless money and time, much of the latter spent in world-wide travel, was described to me this week by Henry Yates Thompson, the British bibliophile, whose unique collection of illuminated manuscripts is the most famous in the world.

This collection originally consisted of 100 vellum scripts, embellished with many illuminations of devout art by medieval monks who worshiped in blue, in purple and in gold, and illustrated ancient legends and romances with the color of splendor.

SALES ARE HELD.

Two sales of portions of the collection have already been held, and at these fifty-two of the Yates Thompson manuscripts realized the huge sum of 130,325 pounds sterling, or, roughly, $551,625. These sales were held in 1919 and 1920, and during the first of them one manuscript—the "Hours of Jeanne II of Navarre"—brought $9000.

Since then Mr. Thompson has sold two manuscripts privately and given four away. Now, at the end of this month, fifteen more of these precious and romantic pieces of illuminated vellum are to be auctioned in London and are expected to make record prices. The probability is that representatives of wealthy American collectors will outbid their British rivals, as usual, and that the choicest items will soon afterwards make the Atlantic crossing. It is prophesied here that when the whole collection has been sold over a quarter of a million sterling, or something like $1,250,000, will have been realized.

MARVEL MANUSCRIPTS.

Some of these manuscripts now to be sold have extraordinary histories. One of these consists of but four pages, one of them bearing a picture of the Battle of Cannae, from a lost manuscript history of the Punic Wars attributed to the famous Jean Foucquet of Tours. It was in a vain effort to find the remainder of this volume that Mr. Yates Thompson searched the world.

A barrister by profession, and a former proprietor of the Pall Mall Gazette, which was afterwards owned by the late Baron Astor, this famous collector is a graduate of Harrow and Cambridge, a J. P., and an officer of the Legion of Honor. He talked of his world-wide quest of ancient

THE VALUE OF OUTDOOR BOOKS.

Former Editor of "Field and Stream" Advises Sportsmen to Collect Library.

BY WARREN H. MILLER.

No outdoor book has excuse for being if it does not tell, sincerely and truthfully, the author's own experience in the great game of outdoors. We who read have a right to demand that much of our author. We may adopt his practice, or not. If it was what he found good, it may be good for us. We reserve the right to be the best judge of that. But if the book is true and the writer shows that he knows what he is talking about, there is a record which is reliable and can be followed with confidence, or, if not agreed with, we pass on to something more in accord with our own views, respecting, however, the author's work as it stands.

The great game of the outdoors is as technical as engineering. It must be studied beforehand before going into it. Reading an outdoor book gives the experience of those who have tried it, no matter whether it be big game hunting, or wing-shooting, or dog training, or salt water or fresh water fishing, or canoeing. We learn from books what outfit the other fellow bought or made, how he hunted or fished, where he went for his sport. All this is a guide that will save us money and time and disappointment, if we read and heed. If we strike out blindly, going ahead on preconceived theories and misconceptions, we are pretty sure to come to grief. If I professed to be a sportsman, I would not be without a well-stocked library on my subject, any more than would an engineer. I would figure that the money they would save me in buying things that I don't want would be far more than the cost of the books. A tackle salesman, a sporting goods dealer, or a gun-store clerk can sell a tyro the whole shop, without convincing him that there is not still something more that he ought to have. But the well-read man, even if a greenhorn, is no such easy mark. And it was the outdoor book that made him so. He will need the rounding off of actual experience, but he is much better prepared for it if he has read up and read over his books until he knows them, than if he hadn't. Wherefore, if a sportsman, collect you an out-door library.

Through appointment from the Governor of Arkansas, Mrs. Blanche O. Butler of Malvern has become the first woman justice of the peace in her State.

HISTORY OF BELGIUM.

In striking fashion Emile Cammaerts's colorful style has succeeded in making coherent not only such phrases as "the cross-roads of Europe" and "the cockpit of Europe," as applied to his native Belgium, but also the days of astonishing opulence which the land has witnessed. The picture of Belgium as Europe's battleground is so firmly fixed that there is a tendency to forget the fact that the ups, as well as the downs in Belgium's history have been surprising. In M. Cammaerts's "History of Belguim," just published by the Appletons, readers are finding for the first time in English the complete story of Belgium and its people. The reviewers, both here and in England, are expressing the greatest interest in his picture of the whirlwind changes in Belgium's fortunes, which are expressed so happily in his words: "Belgium has lived under a 'troubled sky, where heavy showers succeed bright sunshine, while the towers of Ypres, Ghent, Bruges, Antwerp, Louvain and Brussels appear and disappear on the horizon."

"GOSSIP SHOP" ON NICHOLSON.

The other day we met Meredith Nicholson again. He's the same genial, sane, normal American, with firm, broad and liberal ideas. Just now he's planning to publish a new book of essays and later a novel that will deal seriously with some of the problems of American life. We drifted away from a discussion of books, for Mr. Nicholson is not the type who likes to discuss himself and his work ad lib., and found ourselves wondering about the marriage conditions for modern young people. There seems to be no question but that this problem is what is at the root of much of the unrest in the younger generation. Perhaps it is that the very independent young man, and the increasingly independent young woman, haven't yet found a meeting ground on which to battle out their independence; perhaps the high cost of marriage has something to do with it. There are at least six novels to be written on the subject. Perhaps Mr. Nicholson will write one of them.

HOW AMERICA WENT TO WAR.

The new and authentic series on "How America Went to War," written by Benedict Crowell, the assistant Secretary of War and Director of Munitions, 1917-1920, and Robert Forrest Wilson, formerly captain United States Chemical Warfare Service, is now being published by the Yale University Press. It is significant that this series, which is of permanent historical value, as well as of absorbing present-day interest and which is being published during the change in administration of Yale University, should be brought out "in commemoration of the work of the 8000 Yale men who took part in the World War, 1914-1918." The series is to be published in six volumes, 500 sets of which will comprise the limited edition, printed on specially made rag paper and bound in vellum cloth and French marbled paper.

"FOUR PILGRIMS."

These are quaint tales, redolent of the long ago, but still fresh with the personalities of the men who lived them, that William Boulting has brought together in "Four Pilgrims," a fascinating book just brought out by E. P. Dutton & Co. The author has taken all his material from old records, quoting some of it directly and retelling the rest, and has furnished also introductory chapters for each tale that provide a sufficient historical background to relate it to the world of its own time. In the preface he says that they were "shrewd, fearless, observant men who overcame surpassing obstacles and met with adventure unparalleled." Then he describes them and their quests: "The first of my bundle of four was a Chinaman, a Buddhist monk of the early seventh century, who started alone on an almost impossible quest. My second was an Englishman of the earliest years of the twelfth century, who gives us some notion of what the ordinary palmer was like, who went to Jerusalem. My third was a Mohammedan who, in the first half of the fourteenth century, made several pilgrimages to Mecca and ran over the world from Tangier to Peking and from Turkestan to Timbuktu. My fourth was an Italian, a very son of the glowing age of Julius II, the first European Christian on record to reach Mecca." The book will afford much enjoyment to those who like to summon up the pageants of the past and who take pleasure in tales of strange and adventurous wanderings, narrated with gusto and sympathy.

LOP-EARED HIGHBROWS.

Gilbert Frankau, the dynamic young English writer, whose second novel, "The Seeds of Enchantment," has recently been published in this country by Doubleday, Page & Co., holds no brief for the "intellectuals." Jambouree novelists and asylum poets, he characterizes them.

"Your modern intellectual is like a certain breed of rabbit (only, thank heaven, not so prolific;) he is a 'lop'—one ear cocked to the highbrow attitude, the other dropped to the ground in hope of hearing his own name. These intellectual lops produce with equal facility asylum poetry, Colney Hatch pictures, Broadmoor plays, dancing dervish music, and jambouree novels.

If the atrocities were committed in secret, lops for lops only, there might be some excuse for them. But the languid young gentlemen in squashy black hats and the sloppy young girls in bobbed hair do not believe in secrecy. For them the brass band of the log rolling fraternity, the communal book. To them intellect without publicity is a sterile thing."

MODERN STUDENTS' LIBRARY.

Charles Scribner's Sons announce for early August publication three new volumes in the Modern Student's Library: Carlyle's "Sartor Resartus," edited by Prof. Ashley Thorndike of Columbia University; Historical Essays by Lord Macaulay, selected and edited by Prof. Charles D. Hazen of Columbia University, and Selections from the Federalist selected and edited by Prof. John Spencer Bassett of Smith College.

rupted. He admitted he had anticipated the invitation to supper and had slipped away to avoid it.

"I thank you very much," he said, "but I could not have eaten or drunk or slept or gone a step further than this, or waited a moment longer than now.

"Poe had been on his way home (he lived in Amity street, only a few blocks distant) when the impulse to set down a line of the poem then possessing his mind became so strong that he dared not wait even the short time before he could gain shelter.

"It is 'The Raven,'" said Poe in a hushed, strained voice. "Let me read you a stanza or two, here and now, will you?"

"Swayed by the poet's mood and forgetting the hour, the storm and cold, I bade him read. Poe began in a low monotone the now famous lines:

"'Once upon a midnight dreary, while I pondered weak and weary
Over many a quaint and curious volume of forgotten lore—
While I nodded, nearly napping, suddenly there came a tapping
As of some one gently rapping, rapping at my chamber door—
Only this, and nothing more.

"'Ah, distinctly I remember, it was in the bleak December—'

"At this point he paused and stood gazing into the black night above. I implored him to go on, and Poe resumed:

"'Ah, distinctly I remember, it was in the bleak December,
And each separate, dying ember wrought its ghost upon the floor.
Eagerly I wished the morrow; vainly I had sought to borrow
From my books surcease of sorrow—sorrow for the lost Lenore—
For the rare and radiant maiden whom the angels name Lenore—
Nameless here for evermore.'

"I have heard Poe himself recite that poem later on at Miss Lynch's; I have heard distinguished actors read it, but never have I heard such an effect produced by the human voice as when the author stood there in the sweep of the storm and uttered it—I presume for the first time in mortal hearing.

"Poe read on till a tremor of cold, more pronounced than the others that had shaken his frail and lightly clad body, caused me to interrupt and insist that Poe go home, offering to give him the shelter of my umbrella the rest of the way.

"We reached the steps of his residence and then he turned and thanked me with the peculiar grace and charm of manner which in my acquaintance with him always distinguished Edgar Allan Poe, saying:

"'Will you come in?'

"'No,' I replied, 'surely not. Some other time; meantime, if I can serve you in any way let me know, and be sure to finish this raven poem.'"

"With a melancholy sigh Poe replied:

"'I shall have to—it will not let me rest; it will not let me sleep until it is completed. Perhaps if I have once put it on paper the ill-omened fowl will leave me in peace.'

"A light shone above, and against the film of the curtain I saw the slender, girlish figure I knew to be his wife's.

"Not many weeks after I bought the very copy of 'The Raven' I still have, and soon it was the most admired, wondered over and written about of the productions of the day."

ND-SHAKING TIRES WALES.

Democratic, but Now kes Ceremony.

Apparent Also Eats Very Sparingly at Banquets.

in Evening Clothes He Resembles Dapper Doll.

BY LADY MARY.
FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

June 20.—The Prince my personal knowledge, au revoir to the retir- Ambassador in London than seven banquets space of two months. The heir apparent likes America very heartily and it mightily when he hears or diplomatic "misunder- between this country and republic.

one of the only women priv- look on at the dinner Pilgrims' Club the other the Hotel Victoria, when of Wales was one of the but not "The Guest." Since Highness returned from tour he has become very dreading "the clutching that is so enthusiastically upon his when attending so- functions.

very democratic and un- youth, but he frankly he is getting "fed up" handshaking. Before the announced for the Pilgrims' a special messenger arrived from St. James Palace with a note from the Prince's secretary, which requested that Lord Desborough (the president of the club) would ask all the guests to take their places in the dining-room before the Prince arrived. This was done and the ordeal by hand-shaking thus avoided, for the Prince walked into the banqueting room with Mr. Davis and Lord Desborough, while everybody stood up; he bowed and shook hands with a few of his personal friends, then he sat down and everyone followed his example.

GOES SLOW AT BANQUETS.

Probably because he is a wise youth, the Prince's food at these big banquets is very simple. He does not eat either hors d'oeuvres, oysters or soup. He likes to commence with the fish, which he prefers grilled, and he is specially partial to salmon or turbot.

Then he likes roast chicken with a salad to follow, and when I watched him at the Victoria the other night, I noticed that a quail en cocotte seemed to afford him much satisfaction.

He drinks very sparingly and prefers whisky and soda (a Scotch highball) to champagne. Sweets apparently do not interest him, but he takes a glass of port wine with his cheese, while after his demi-tasse he consumed no fewer than four liqueur glasses of kummel! So qur young man is no pussyfoot!

CHEWS CIGAR.

The Prince smokes a cigar, I noticed, in the real American fashion. He chews the end and twists it round in his mouth in a way that suggests nervousness, but which possibly is only a habit like his other mannerisms of fingering his necktie and collar.

It is only when you see the Prince of Wales among a big assemblage of men, all in evening clothes, that one realizes how short he is in stature. I saw Sir Owen Phillips, K. C. V. O., standing beside him the other night for instance. Sir Owen measures six feet three inches, and is broad in proportion, and across his shirt front stretched the brilliantly colored ribbon of his order.

LIKE A DOLL.

The King's son in his perfectly cut evening clothes with the dark blue ribbon of the Garter cutting across the whiteness of his shirtfront, looked like a dapper little doll beside him. His fair hair and blue eyes and charming smile gave him a child-like effect in contrast to the burly, huge shipping magnate who was his vis-a-vis. In addition to his ribbon of the Garter, the Prince wore a wide row of miniature medals that made a brilliant showing against the sombre background of his coat.

PARIS MAY AID STUDENTS.

The creation of a "Universal City" is being projected in Paris. The municipal council has adopted the scheme and recommends that for this purpose nine hectares (22 1-4 acres) of land, which will be set free by the demolition of fortifications near the Parc de Montsourts, be transferred to the University of Paris.

The price to be paid for the land is three and one-half million francs (normally about $2,700,00.) It is proposed to construct in the center of tree-shaded playing fields buildings in which students of the Quartier Latin can be comfortably housed at reasonable charges.

The buildings will contain a restaurant, library and recreation room, with a garden attached. It is expected that accommodations will be provided for more than 2000 students—[London Times.

Moves With the Tides.

The historic Tower of London, it has been announced, moves four times daily as the tides in the Thames River ebb and flow. The movement is most pronounced in the part nearest the river. The movement is due to the fact that many tons of water penetrate under the foundations with the rising tide, which movement has the effect of moving upward the whole mass of the tower. — [London Correspondence Washington Star.

LONDON BOWING TO DARK IDOLS.

African Art Has the Attention of All Society.

Works Are Most Wonderful, Critics Say.

Study of Girl and Bust is Shown by Magazine.

BY CROSSLEY DAVIES.
[SPECIAL FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

LONDON, July 2.—London society is bowing to African idols. Its genuflections are not the result of any superstitions seeking after strange gods, but are a tribute to negro art. Cubism, Futurism, Vorticism, Daddaism have passed. In their place stand the crude, grotesque carvings of primeval black men.

These works, we are solemnly informed, show wonderful art. Roger Fry, one of the best known British art critics, writing in that serious, high-brow weekly The New Statesman, becomes almost lyrical in its praise. "I have been taken to task by friends as well as adversaries," he declares, "for my enthusiastic praise of negro sculpture. I may have generalised too rashly from a few specimens, but before such work as this negro head I do not feel inclined to unsay any word of praise. If any piece of English sculpture of any age or period approaches this in the essential qualities of plastic feeling, I have not had the good fortune to come across it."

The head to which he refers forms part of an exhibition of fetishes which has drawn many society women and some artists to the Goupil galleries in Regent street. It is a quaint conception in brass, copper and wood, a sort of ancient Mona Lisa with a leer instead of a smile. To the ordinary western eye it is ugly, rough, grotesque and reminds one of the devil masks of West and Central Africa. To some of the English critics it is a thing of beauty, and their women disciples, drawn from that section of society which is ever seeking a new sensation, have flocked into this new shrine of advanced art to admire without understanding and to praise without perception.

It is, of course, no matter for surprise that lovers of the primitive like the American-born sculptor, Jacob Epstein, should be enthusiastic. Epstein has bought one of these esthetic idols for $750. Not long ago missionaries brought some of them home as curios and they had little or no value. Today the collector has stepped in and prices are decidedly steep. As Birmingham is popularly credited with the manufacture of fetishes for negro worship, it may at least be said for the new craze that it helps a British industry.

A well-known illustrated weekly devotes its front page this week to a sketch of a society girl standing in awe before a roughly carved model of an African woman—a tribal goddess, whose entire absence of clothing reveals the cruel tribal skin marks which in the jungle make up for full dress. The contrast, as presented by the artist, is decidedly piquant. A visit to the collection is certainly amusing. The collection comes from France and consists of some forty specimens, of considerable human, if not of artistic, interest. Some of the exhibits were lent by artists, including Charles Shannon, R. A. Two only of the whole collection seem akin to western art—so much like it indeed that one is inclined to suspect their origin.

USEFUL INVENTIONS.

Photography is eighty-two years old, the secret of the first pictures, those of Daguerre, having been disclosed in 1839.

In all the world there were only 778 telephones in use forty-three years ago, it is said. There were 12,000,000 in the United States alone in 1919.

Esperanto, the only one of all the many so-called universal languages that shows any signs of survival, was invented by Dr. Zamenhof during fifteen years' captivity in a Polish prison.

The Japanese are credited with having discovered a way of making artificial pearls that will stand every test, and it is said that many of them have been bought by London dealers who believed them to be genuine.

The work of bridge painting has been greatly simplified and cheapened by the use of a paint spraying outfit mounted on a trailer car which is moved along from place to place as the work proceeds.

A piano lamp has been devised by which an electric lamp is attached to the head of the person playing, rather than to the piano, or used in the form of a floor lamp. The light is operated by a battery, which with the wires connecting it to the light, is worn in a bandeau around the head of the player. The light projects from the bandeau in front of the forehead.

A French scientist, chief of the bureau of radiography for the Paris hospitals, has demonstrated that an X-ray apparatus can photograph subjects through a stone wall more than twenty-five feet distant from the source of the rays. He has obtained clear photographs of metallic objects, the rays filtering through the marble plate more than an inch thick, twelve inches of oak, four inches of plaster and a sheet of lead one-eighth of an inch thick.

A western game warden is said to have devised an electrical apparatus to keep fish from entering irrigation canals. A double row of steel piles is set in a frame and driven into the intake of the canal. The piles are wired and a current of electricity is passed through them. This charges a curtain of water the width of the canal and about twelve feet long, and it is said that the fish will not voluntarily enter this zone. Myriads of young fish are lost through irrigation ditches annually, and a number of these devices will be set up and operated in the hope that they will prevent the loss.

The "no smoking allowed" sign often catches the smoker unawares, and he invariably seeks a handy ledge or window sill on which to hide the "smoke" that just begins to taste good. Here the cigar is exposed to dirt and germs, making subsequent indulgence hazardous, or at least distasteful. In order to preserve the last pleasurable puffs in a sanitary manner, he may now inclose his lighted cigar in a case made for the purpose. This case has two compartments, one for the lighted cigar and a second for a supply of fresh smokes. The first compartment is insulated for protection against fire and heat radiation, and is separated from the second compartment by abutting inner fittings.—[Poular Mechanics Magazine.

Searchlights require movements of rotation about a vertical and a horizontal axis. At one time the control about the horizontal axis was limited to a depression of about 30 deg., and the elevation of about 60 deg. In later models the light beam could be raised to a completely vertical direction. Originally this was done by a system of link motions, says Popular Mechanics Magazine, but this has now been superseded by a method of transmitting the motions electrically. In this apparatus, the projector itself does not move, but the beam of light is reflected into any direction by means of a plane mirror. On a ship the projector may be mounted at the foot of a hollow mast, with the beam of light projected to a mirror at the masthead capable of rotation about its horizontal and vertical axes, by means of electrical control operated at any desired location.

STORY OF THE NAMING OF OLD CAPE COD.

It is said that the great Francis Drake was the first Englishman to set foot in New England, and that he landed on Cape Cod. French, Dutch, Spanish, English—all had names for the cape; but in 1602 Gosnold, examining the coast of New England with a view to colonizing gave it the predestined name—Cape Cod. "Making across Massachusetts Bay with a fresh gale of wind," writes his chronicler, "in the morning we found ourselves embayed with a mighty headland, with a white sand and very bolde shore." After landing they returned to their ship and sailed on to Cuttyhunk, "amongst many fair islands." "But the significant point for us," says Miss Mary Rogers Bangs in Old Cape Cod, "is that the Indians pestered their ship so frequently with codfish that they threw numbers of them overboard and thereupon named the land Cape Cod."

Henry Hudson, too, spent a night off the cape and had difficulty with shoals and tides and mists; but he testified that the land was "very sweet." In 1614 Capt. John Smith set sail for those shores to look for whales and for gold mines. With eight men in an open boat, he explored and charted the coast and dedicated his map to Prince Charles, afterwards Charles I, with a request that he change the barbarous names thereon, "so that the posterite might say Prince Charles was their godfather." New England, the river Charles and Plymouth retain the royal names, but the Prince's "Stuart Bay" and "Cape James" are still Cape Cod Bay and Cape Cod.—[Youth's Companion.

Maybe 'Twas Tom Mix.

"The leading man will have to make a lot of gun-play in our productions," explained the movie director.

"Then what you want is a shooting star," commented the applicant, who might have been Bill Hart, but wasn't.—[Boston Transcript.

The People and Their Daily Troubles

DOROTHY DIX TALKS

Sending Maud Geraldine to College.

BY DOROTHY DIX.

I have recently received a great many letters from mothers asking me whether they should send their daughters to college or not.

To this I would reply that it depended altogether on what was inside and outside of the girl's head, and also, more particularly, on the state of the family pocketbook.

If it had pleased heaven to bestow upon my daughter a peaches-and-cream complexion and hair with a natural wave in it, and a lissome figure, and a straight nose and dreamy eyes, and made her otherwise easy to contemplate, I should not bother about superimposing a college education upon her other charms unless I had money to burn.

For I should know that matrimony was daughter's predestined career and that, while being able to write "M.A." after her name, might possibly help her to be a better Ma it wouldn't help her to become one. No honest observer will deny that being a college graduate is a handicap rather than a come-on in securing a husband.

This is the case because the man is yet to be born who doesn't yearn to know more than his wife does, and to be able to pose before her as an oracle, and this is difficult to do with a lady who is a Ph.D. Likewise it is the case because the college-bred girl spends in academic halls the years when she is most alluring to the masculine taste. And furthermore, the college girl, having passed through the impressionable years when she could love anything in trousers that danced well, is pretty hard to please and choosey about husbands.

And—oh, well, you know how it it about men. After all, women have to wait until they are asked to get married, and it doesn't always pay to look a gift horse too closely in the mouth.

Therefore sending a pretty girl to college belongs to the superfluous luxury class of things. Indulge in it if you can, have the price, and desire it, and she begs to go because the other girls are going. What she learns won't do her any harm, and in later years when she comes running to you to know how to make cake that won't fall, and weeping over the way the butcher's bill won't tally with her budget, you can, at least, wonder what would have happened if you hadn't given her all the blessings of a higher education for women.

If, however, daughter is one of those who wasn't around when Nature handed out to the girl babies born her day the prize packages of pulchritude; if daughter has a complexion like a saleratus biscuit, and a pug nose and stringy hair, and is flat-footed and slab-sided, send her to college if you have to mortgage the house to do it.

She will always have to be her own meal ticket and you owe it to her to fit her to earn not only bread and butter, but jam and pie. In all human probability she will never have the happiness of having husband and children, and you must give her the best substitute for them you can by filling her life with the absorbing interest of some profession or trade by which she can not only make money, but in which she can find a never-ending source of pleasure.

The miserable, sour, disgruntled old maids are those with nothing to do, nothing to think about but what they have missed, no homes of their own, no money except the grudging dole of those on whom they are depending. On the contrary there are no more contented, happier, or chippier women than the successful bachelor girls with their good jobs, and their pretty little bachelor establishments.

So in trying to decide whether to send Maud Geraldine off to college or not, take Nature's tip. Give her the once over with an appraising eye, not a mother eye, and see whether she is likely to have to make her own living, or have some man make it for her. Also observe the degree to which she is a riot or not among the boys. If, by the time she is eighteen, the place is not littered up with youngsters, you had better get her ready for one of our famous institutions of learning.

So much for Maud! Now for the pocket book! Don't send her to college unless you can afford it. The State gives every girl a chance at a good education in the public schools. If she wants to add to that the whole realm of knowledge is opened up before her in the same books she would read and study at college. School teachers have no magic that imparts a secret culture not to be had outside of their sacred walls.

Some of the best educated women I have ever known have been self-educated. You can no more keep an individual who thirsts and hungers for knowledge away from it than you can keep a starving person from grabbing at the food within reach.

We make a fetich of colleges. Especially mothers do, and there is no more pathetic thought than that of the thousands upon thousands of women who are literally killing themselves and starving the balance of the family to send some girl off to school who has no love of learning, no settled purpose in going except to belong to the right sorority, and be able to talk college patter when she comes home.

And for this mother wears her old clothes, and trims her hat over another time, and dismisses the cook and cuts down on the butter and the meat, and goes through nerve exhausting, pinching, grinding economies that wear her to skin and bone, and take all of the brightness and comfort out of the home. What Maud Geraldine gets isn't worth the price. Figure it out for yourself.

Therefore I say that unless a girl needs to follow a profession, unless she has given unmistakable evidences of peculiar mentality and talent, and unless you can afford to send her to college without making too many sacrifices, don't do it!

After all, education is of many kinds. It doesn't all come put up in school book packages, with a college stamp on it.

LETTERS TO "THE TIMES."

Belle Made Good.

LOS ANGELES, July 15.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Far be it from me to argue with an editor about goats. Neverthless, your recent editorial on the subject of goats, ranging from tomato-can eaters to thousand-dollar Saanen nannies, goes to show how much—or how little—any of us know about goats, editors included.

During the war a certain shipyard welfare worker in a near-by State was advised to feed his young twin babies on goat milk. Ten cents a drop or three for a quarter proved too costly for the Saanen milk, so other arrangements had to be made. One of the City Dads owned a herd of high-priced goats, guaranteed to produce triple-plated pasteurized milk in copious quantities. Negotiations between the welfare man and the City Dad for one of these goats were soon consummated, including guarantee. In time the goat was transferred to the suburban home of the welfare man. Her name was Belle and she amused herself walking over the new dwelling under construction, viewing the scenery and furnishing milk according to schedule. As time went on the milk began to diminish to an alarming degree, which confirmed suspicions that high-priced goats were false alarms and that somebody had paid a large price for a blank in the goat lottery. Mr. Welfare telephoned the City Dad, who was specialzing in goats as a side issue, to come out and see what ailed Belle, as the babies were getting scarcely any milk. The Dad came and looked at Belle and says: "Well, I don't see anything wrong with her. She looks fine and it is certainly mysterous that she should stop giving milk all of a sudden. I have raised many goats, but this case sure puzzles me." Producing his guarantee, the welfare man says: "Well, it's up to you." "But what seems to the trouble?" asked the City Dad. "Nothing,' replied the welfare man. "She is merely long on blat and short on milk, and the twin babies want more milk and less blat." So it was decided to bring a goat doctor down in a few days to X-ray Belle. But, be it known that while waiting for the veterinarian Belle had a pair of twins of her own. After administering this knockout blow to the conceit of the City Dad, who raised goats on highly scientific lines, Belle proceeded to live up to her guarantee and everybody had milk—to drink. Thereafter Mr. Welfare not only had enough for the twins but sold large quantities at 10 cents per drop or three for a quarter and lived happy ever after.

ARTHUR COLLINS.

National Education.

LOS ANGELES, July 12.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Your editorial in yesterday morning's Times entitled "Fighting Illiteracy," directed the attention of your readers very effectively to the consideration of a vital and pressing problem. I must, however, express my profound regret that you saw fit in the last paragraph to oppose the movement for the creation of a Federal Department of Education. It does not seem to me that your objections are well taken. Your recent editorial indorsing the Smith-Towner education bill, now known as the Towner-Sterling bill, is much more convincing.

You state "If the Federal government takes charge of education the State government will do less." The Towner-Sterling bill provides that each State accepting the provisions of the bill must appropriate from its own revenues a sum equal to the amount apportioned by Congress.

You state "There would be a duplication which is always fatal to efficiency." There could be no duplication of activities because the Towner-Sterling bill expressly provides that the Federal department must not invade or override the rights of the State to handle its own educational matters; and distinctly states that "the State and local educational authorities shall determine the courses of study, plans and methods for carrying out the purposes" of the act. Very carefully the bill protects the right of the State to control its own education affairs, and very specifically does it place the responsibility upon the State.

The appalling problem of illiteracy to which your editorials have directed our attention is not being effectively tackled by the various States. In literacy the United States ranks ninth among the nations, and considering our resources, this is a national disgrace. Illiteracy is a national problem and can be met successfully only through a Federal approach. Labor, agriculture and the conservation of natural resources are all national questions, and departments have been created to care for these interests. If it is important to properly conserve cattle and crops, oils and minerals, how much more important it is to conserve human interests.

A co-ordinated program of national education is part of the national defense. Ignorance and inefficiency make a nation weak. Illiteracy in Mississippi or Massachusetts imperils free government in Southern California. Education is an affair of national importance.

During recent years many sources of taxation have been taken away from the States by Federal legislation, while the expenses of State government have increased. Education has suffered as a result. By the appropriation of Federal revenues for education an opportunity is given whereby the individual States may equalize somewhat these unjust conditions.

Your news columns this morning carry the information that Japanese statesmen are planning a campaign to promote the education of their people. Shall we fall behind the Japanese in the effort to eliminate illiteracy, develop intelligence and promote patriotism?

PERRY W. WEIDNER.

Germany Not Yet.

LOS ANGELES, July 14—[To the Editor of The Times:] Mr. Wildhack's letter on German-made films published in The Times July 7, interested me very much; but, while I agree with him in part, I must voice a note of protest.

Anyone capable of judging realizes that European films artistically and along literary lines, are superior to American. This is especially true of the French, and the reason is not difficult to discover.

French films, like French art, and French clothes, are individual creations. Each story suggests its own handling, and the result is something different each time, usually both realistic and artistic.

In this country film production is a money-making business machine. Stage setting, plot making and acting are poured into molds and reproduced interminably; resulting in a wearisome procession of studio-made productions with just enough new material to get them across.

To quote from a well-known producer: "The mental development of the public is that of a 12-year-old child." Such a premise as this will naturally result in "12-year-old" films.

But, it is not necessary to study the art of the vandals who destroyed Louvain. We can improve the quality of our films by studying both French and Italian methods, and it seems a bit indecent to flaunt German productions before a people still suffering from unhealed wounds.

We may accept Germany as a teacher in time, but that time is not yet.

ELIZABETH B. JOHNSON.

Strong for Sims.

RIVERSIDE, June 27.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I cannot repress the admiring approval that no doubt thousands of others besides myself felt for your splendid editorial "Concerning Admiral Sims" in Sunday's Times. I had just finished reading the editorial comments of many eastern editors concerning the Sims-Sinn Fein controversy as gathered together by the Literary Digest last week, but in none of them did I find the question so tersely, so altogether patly expressive of the decent American opinion. You have said all there is to be said on the foreign squabble that has been foisted upon us by a small minority of aliens, whether citizens or not, who alternately shout of Americanism and pro-British propaganda, to cover their own sinister plans.

I think that the vast majority of Americans would like to see this Sinn Fein question brought to an issue by getting a vote out by coupons through the newspapers so that our representatives in Congress might be assured that it was not necessary for them to truckle to this Sinn Fein minority in order to hold their jobs.

In passing I would just like to ask just why these Sinn Feiners believe themselves entitled to a greater measure of "freedom" or self-government than Canada or Australia, or of the State of California? California as a state has home rule, but we accept the sovereignty of our Federal government in national and international affairs as a desirable protection. As I understand it, Ireland has been offered such freedom, but the Sinn Feiners insist on tyrannizing over the Northern Irish (Ulterites) just as they claim England is despotically dominating them. And in attempting to force these Northern Irish and England into establishing or recognizing an Irish Republic they are using the most cowardly and damnable methods of fighting. If these Sinn Feiners think they are gaining sympathy in America they will soon find that they are rapidly losing what sympathy they have heretofore succeeded in arousing. And people arrive at these conclusions too after reading both sides of the question, including the Nation's Report of One Hundred. And they are also thinking entirely from an American point of view. Shouting pro-British is simply stupid.

But as for Admiral Sims, he has been honored by his reprimand.

Question: How can the age of a pickerel or pike be told? D. R. C.

Answer: The Bureau of Fisheries says that the way to determine the age of a pickerel or pike, is by counting the rings on the scales. This is the common way in which the age of any fish is determined.

A.: The Bureau of Standards says it is not considered advisable to use a copper gasoline tank on a motor boat. The water causes corrosion. It is suggested that a galvanized iron tank be substituted for the copper tank.

Q.: What is Rudyard Kipling's address? D. M. C.

A.: A recent letter from Rudyard Kipling gave his address, as Bateman's Burwash, Sussex, Eng.

Q.: Please give me a recipe for chicken a la king? T. B. M.

A.: Melt 1 tablespoon of chicken fat, add 1 tablespoon of flour, and stir until smooth. Add gradually 1 cup chicken stock, ½ cup milk, ½ cup cream. When this boils, add ½ teaspoon salt, 2 tablespoons butter, 1 cup cold boiled fowl cut in cubes, 1-3 cup salted mushrooms, 1-3 cup pimientos. Let it come to the boiling point and add 2 egg yolks which have been beaten slightly. Serve on toast.

Q.: In using the French word "nee" is it permissible to use the woman's first name? S. C. T.

A.: "Nee" means born, and one says Mrs. John Smith, nee Jones—not Mary Jones, since she was born Jones, the name Mary being given

Q.: What is the principle of the spiral gas lighter which uses neither friction nor matches? I. F. M.

A.: The Bureau of Standards says that there is a small mass of black material at the center of the spiral which appears to contain a little finely divided platinum. BITS OF VERSE.

"Just Over the Road."

Just over the road is a garden
At the end of a mystic way;
Where roses are ever blooming,
Where 'tis ever delectable day.

The birds sing soft in that garden,
Sweet blossoms nod in the breeze;
There is rest and peace in the garden
In the shade of its ever-green trees.
O, thin is the wall before it,
And yet in sorrow we seek
For the key to its fragrant meadows,
For the distant flash of some peak.

We strain our eyes in longing
For the play of its fountains rare;
But alas! for our earthbound vision
Holds naught but a vacant chair.

And yet I have heard a dear father,
At the close of earth's little day,
Whisper soft of the emerald pastures
Lying—"just over the way."

He roamed those pastures in fancy
As he spoke of a wonderful truth;
I knew by his smile and its glory
He had found the lost pathway of youth.

'Tis only a step to the garden,
And Love is the highroad so straight;
Sure Faith is the key to the meadows
Which opens the lock in the gate.
—[Edward V. Riis in Brooklyn Eagle.

A Bypath.

It leads, beneath green, overarching boughs,
Down to a merry, rippling little brook,
That runs, half hidden, through a woodsy nook
Where lazy birds amid the stillness drowse,
And golden-coated bumbles drone and browse
Upon the petals of a wilding rose,
While, hung from tree to tree, luxuriant grows
Wild grape, that no intruding sun allows.
It beckons, this alluring, mossy way,
That in such quietude and fragrance waits,
With promise of the dreams of yesterday,
As if Arcadia opened wide her gates
Just for a space, to let some mortal scan
Old romance, haunted by the pipes of Pan.
—[Charlotte Becker in New York Herald.

Night Comes to Her City.

When the duck glides through the streets,
Through the ways all gray and mean,
Then the city flowers wake,
For the darkness is their queen,
And, as buds that swell and break
When the Sun god comes, the streets
Bloom at dusk with flaming flowers.

Thus the town her sovereign greets;
All her streets
Golden, poppy-red and blue,
Tender hyacinthine hue,
Yellow as the primrose crown,
Single bloom and massed in bowers,
Green as sunlight through the leaves,
White as daisies, tint of rose
That upon the wild hedge blows!

Some there be that blink and glimmer,
Steady some with light serene,
Others flitting moth like hither,
Thither, yon and everywhither,
Anywhither!
And the streets
Mirror all their shifting shimmer.

Warp and woof of light, a gown
(Flowered silk with silken sheen)
What a wonder fabric weaves
For the night the wakened town!
—[Chariton Lawrence Edholm in Edison Monthly.

To a Lady Troubled by Insomnia.

Let the waves of slumber billow
Gently, softly o'er thy pillow;
Let the darkness wrap thee round
Till in slumber thou art drowned;
Let my tenderest lullabies
Guard the closing of thine eyes;
If these fail to make thee weary,
Then I cannot help thee, dearie.
—[F. P. A. in the Bookman.

BOYS AND GIRLS ARE ACTIVE IN CLUB WORK.

Boys' agricultural clubs in the South reported growing products in 1920 valued at $561,609. This result was shown by 8525 members actually reporting, but the enrollment was nearly four times as large. Boys engaged in corn growing reported 284,752 bushels for 4900 members, worth at market quotations about $292,939. The cotton clubs, with 975 members reporting, grew cotton worth $83,062, and 191 boys growing wheat produced 24,730 bushels, worth at that time $48,900.

There were 10,006 boys actually reporting in the clubs given over to pigs, sheep, beef cattle and calves, dairy cattle, poultry and miscellaneous items, and the annual report credits them with producing $757,279 worth of products.

Negro boys reported their work more regularly than the whites, and made a very creditable record for the year. Their agricultural products were worth $296,041 for 3847 members, and 2172 boys produced pigs, sheep, beef animals, dairy cattle, poultry and miscellaneous items worth $153,405.

There were 5278 girls' clubs, with an attendance at meetings of 282,600. Scholarships at normal or agricultural schools or colleges were won by 360 girls, and 1734 girls paid all or part of their school expenses for the year with money earned in club work. The annual report shows that 15,885 girls engaged in tenth-acre gardening and canning, and produced more than 9,000,000 pounds of food. They sold 4,750,132 pounds of fresh fruit and vegetables, and the value of this fresh stuff sold or used in their homes was placed at $238,647 at current market prices. RELIGIOUS WAVE SWEEPS RUSSIA.

Orthodox Church Hopes for Power Restoration.

At Odds With Soviets, Who Rob and Dictate.

Spies Watch Priests and Arrest When Possible.

BY GEORGE SELDES.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

BERLIN, July 16.—Bishop Tykhon, brother of Patriarch Tykhon, chief of the synod of the Russian orthodox church, gave here today an account of the new religious fervor now sweeping over Russia and the attendant optimism inspiring the Russian church to hope for the restoration of its old grandeur and power.

REDS ROB CHURCH.

"The Russian church," said Bishop Tykhon, "does not mix up in the political affairs of the state, nothwithstanding the fact that the soviet government did not hesitate to rob the church and made every attempt to kill its activity. Decrees were issued depriving the church of all its property. Religious processions of all kinds were forbidden and, since the beginning of the revolution, thirty bishops and nearly 1000 priests have been shot. Only when the soviet government realized that the religious spirit of the Russian masses was too strong to permit these decrees from being carried out without danger to its own security did they repeal these stringent measures. Religious services were again legalized and orders to mobilize all priests for military service were never carried out.

"These mass measures never terrified us. Any reports that we accepted the Communist government with approval, or that because of anxiety for our own safety we hesitated to denounce their crimes, you may brand as false. As early as 1918, our Arch-Patriarch Tykhon issued a holy anathema against the soviets that was signed by all the members of the church synod, printed and illegally circulated over the whole of Russia.

ONE OF MANY.

"The latest great religious procession in Petrograd is only one of many that are being held in every city throughout the country. The enthusiasm and popular approval are only symptomatic of the great religious revival that is sweeping the country. Don't think for one moment that this movement is restricted to the peasants and the ignorant classes. Many Communists are also attending our services, and this feature of our strength is most seriously worrying the Russian government.

CLOSE WATCH.

"Our work is being carried on under the closest watch of the extraordinary commission. Our priests are being spied upon and frequently arrested. The Archpatriarch Tykhon himself is living under house arrest in Moscow. He does not know why and receives no explanation. He may not participate in meetings or conferences of the church synod, although the Communists' fear of universal discontent has secured for him the right to hold religious services.

"These annoyances are, however, only petty hindrances in our work, for the moral renaissance that is now arising in Russia will be the solid foundation to a stronger and invincible church that will surely and inevitably sweep out the Communists, whose success was only made possible by the moral degradation into which the Russian people had temporarily fallen."

Taking an Interest.

Farmer T.: So your boy's got home from college. Does he take any interest in the farm?

Farmer B.: He's beginning to. He's been showin' me where we could have a dandy golf course an' how easy 'twould be to turn the barn into a garage.—[Boston Transcript.

Harmless Means of Reducing Fat

A news item from Paris informs us that the American method of producing a slim, trim figure is meeting with astonishing success. This system, which has made such a wonderful impression over there, must be the Marmola Prescription Tablet method of reducing fat. It is safe to say that we have nothing better for this purpose in this country. Anything that will reduce the excess flesh a pound a day during hot weather without injury to the stomach or heart, the causing of wrinkles, the help of exercising or dieting, or interference with one's meals is a mighty important and useful addition to civilization's necessities. Just such a catalogue of good results, however, follow the use of these pleasant, harmless and economical little fat reducers. We say economical, because Marmola Prescription Tablets (made in accordance with the famous prescription) can be obtained of any druggist or the makers, the Marmola Co., 4612 Woodward Ave., Detroit, Mich., for one dollar for a full sized box, which is a decidedly economical price considering the number of tablets each box contains.—[Advertisement.

Miss Sue Barnwell, chairman of citizenship, reported the recognition service of new citizens which was held at the suggestion of the federation in Exposition Park the 4th inst. She made suggestions for the coming celebration. As citizenship is to be the keynote of all club work in the State she suggests that each club at the beginning of the season begin to make a list of young men and women who will vote at the next election; also for foreigners in the community of each club, the lists to be used for "New Voters' Day."

It is planned to complete the California nationality map, to repeat the art and crafts exhibition which was so successful this spring, to enlist the aid of national leaders in the work of citizenship and to promote recognition in a definite way of those foreign-born men and women who have done definite, patriotic work for America, especially California. By recognizing and knowing what has been accomplished Mrs. Urquhart says that new ideas may be gained for the work of the future.

The civic guard movement, sponsored by the Ruskin Art Club of Los Angeles, which will teach children of California the Athenian idea of passing the city of their birth down to posterity more beautiful than they received it, will be included in the program of each club of the district.

Unified action of the fine arts committee, drama, literature and music was outlined. All three will be exemplified in a community play, possibly with the arts and crafts exhibit as a background.

Mrs. Urquhart urges that all the clubs in the district leave several open dates on their programs so that the fine things that are available later in the year will not be crowded out.

Mrs. Chase has already outlined a community play which will be called "Citizenship." Throughout citizenship will be shown in life and action with human and patriotic interest and not mere theories.

The next meeting of the board is called for the first Thursday in August in the French room of the Broadway Department Store.

Mrs. Caroline B. Eager returned from her trip around the world last Wednesday and for some time will be the guest of Miss Ella P. True at the Burlington Apartments. Her many friends in club circles in Southern California will be glad to welcome her. The Matinee Musical Club, of which she was an officer for several years, is planning a function in her honor before the summer is over.

"I am beaten. A good woman receives no sympathy and no support. I can do nothing against that woman. I only know that if that picture is shown, it will kill me." These words of the widow of Mrs. Jake L. Hamon, shot and killed by his mistress, Clara Smith Hamon, refer to the showing of the motion picture which in melodramatic form makes Clara the heroine and herself the foil to the heroine. Naturally she rebels. Club women are all in sympathy with her. It was expressed here in convention immediately after Clara Hamon was released at the end of her trial. Now Mrs. James H. Keely of the Illinois Women's Athletic Club has launched a nation-wide campaign to prevent the film being shown.

Miss Alcyos Robinson reported on the world peace conference, recently held in Geneva, Switzerland, at the meeting of the women's Shelley Club last Wednesday, and Martha Salyer read a paper on "The Labor Conditions Among Ancient Peoples and Early Christian Socialism."

The pupils of Miss Clara Della Weaver competed for a silver medal at the picnic of the Los Angeles W.C.T.U. at South Park Wednesday. At noon there was a basket lunch under the trees and the contest formed the program for the afternoon.

Mrs. Leafie Sloan-Orcutt, who has been in Paso Robles taking the baths, has returned to her home in Los Angeles. While she was on her vacation she became greatly interested in a new line of work, the welfare of children in Poland. Having met Mme. Paderewski, the wife of the noted pianist and former Polish Premier, in the central part of the State, she was inspired by the Polish gentlewoman to labor in behalf of the thousands of starving children of that war-ravished country.

UNIQUE REGULATION ON "KUSHEQUA ROUTE."

One of the most unique timetables issued by any railroad in the United States has just come from the printers and is now in effect. The table was issued by the "Kushequa Route," the little mountain railroad in Pennsylvania, belonging to Elisha K. Kane, prohibitionist and philosopher.

The "Kushequa Route" railroad is the only connection the town of Smethport, county seat of McKean county, has with the outside world. Smethport is a town of probably 5000 inhabitants way back "no where," about thirty-five miles from Bradford.

But to go back to that time-table. It has all the dignity of one of those issued by full-grown railroads. It has the usual announcements. It has one unusual one. Across the top is the wording: "Time-table No. 41. Fire season, 1921."

Then in bolder type:

"No trains east of Kushequa on dry days."

Although the owner of the railroad is what might be characterized as a strong dry advocate, the reference to "dry days," in the timetable of his railroad, has nothing to do with the Volstead Act.

The "Kushequa Route" passes through a large stretch of woods from one end of the line to the other. Every year up in the mountains there are many forest fires, some dangerous and costly.

The equipment of the "Kushequa Route" local is not modern and it has not been equipped with spark arresters. On the contrary, the little train toiling up the mountainside gives quite a correct imitation of a Mississippi River steamboat in a hot race or a Pittsburg blast furnace in full eruption. Naturally the sparks fly high, wide and wild. Therefore, no person along the "Kushequa Route" criticises the railroad company's endeavor to prevent forest fires, but the suspension of train service out of fear of starting these forest fires is a brand new one, even to the natives of that locality, and the action of the railroad has attracted much attention.—[Columbus Dispatch.

IS THIS THE REASON AMERICA'S SO DRY?

"Do you use more salt than sugar or more sugar than salt?"

Confronted by this question, the average citizen probably would say, "Sugar, of course!"

Yet it appears from recent reports that there were used last year 130 pounds of salt for every inhabitant in the United States as against 108 pounds of sugar.

There were 5,207,776 tons of sugar in the national sugar bowl and 6,217,473 tons of salt in the national salt cellar.

The apparent mystery deepens when the industrial uses of sugar and salt are compared. According to the Federal trade information service salt, in addition to its culinary uses, plays a part in packing meat, curing fish, dairying, refrigerating, preserving, glazing, enameling, curing hides, making pickles, salting live stock and in chemical processes such as preparing soda ash and caustic soda.

The uses of sugar are more multifarious. Sugar, aside from its obvious table uses, is employed in preserving, canning, cooking, pastry, syrup, ice cream, chocolate, fermentation (in the form of molasses), soft drinks, condensed milk, crackers, bread, tobacco, chewing gum, proprietary medicines, soap and silvering mirrors.

Yet, despite the diversity of uses of sugar, the tonnage of salt consumed is greater. If we think of salt not as the white substance which we shake over roast beef but as sodium chloride, we may find the answer.

Salt is a general chemical and it is used in tremendous quantities in large scale chemical operations. Sugar also is a chemical—but it is used in few purely chemical processes.

The savor of salt usually is absent from the finished products in the operations which involve salt, but the sweetness of sugar almost always is retained. In most confectionery there is about 47 per cent of pure sugar.

The actual sugar content may range up to 95 per cent because many of the other ingredients, such as chocolate, fruits, molasses contain substantial percentages of sugar.—[American Sugar Bulletin.

MODELS CLUB PLANNED FOR LOS ANGELES.

Unique Organization to be Formed Here by Peggy Hamilton, Designer.

A Models' Club, said to be the first of its kind in the world, will be organized in Los Angeles by Peggy Hamilton, well-known designer, who has charge of the rotogravure supplement fashion page of The Times.

The first meeting of the club, which will be limited to a membership of eighty, is scheduled for next Wednesday at 7 p.m., in the Walker Theater Building.

"One of the greatest advantages to be gained from such an organization," Miss Hamilton says, "is that girl models will be able to obtain employment under desirable conditions and solely upon merit, and, on the other hand, stores and manufacturers will be enabled to secure the services of experienced models for fashion reviews and general modeling."

An experienced ballet dance instructor, Miss Hamilton said, is to be employed to teach the club members grace and poise. The eighty charter members of the club will consist of forty girls, twenty men and twenty children. Miss Hamilton plans eventually to organize various sections for the study of art, drama, dancing and music.

One feature of the club is to be the election by the club members themselves of twelve girls to be known as "The Dozen American Beauties."

PROBLEM OF ONE-MAN CAR BEFORE WOMEN.

"Shall the One Man Cars be Abolished?" is the subject of discussion at the meeting of the Woman's City Club tomorrow at 1 p.m. in Lincoln Hall, Walker Auditorium Building.

George Baker Anderson of the Los Angeles Railway Company will speak for the company and Morris Ferguson, attorney, will speak from the viewpoint of the public.

Mrs. Elizabeth Hughes, Assemblywoman, has been invited to be the guest of honor on this occasion, and will give a short talk to the club.

The membership campaign will close the 25th inst. The beautiful silver basket which has been on display for the last two weeks at the club will be awarded to the member having brought in the largest number of new members since June 13. Applications for membership may be obtained at the club office 33 Walker Auditorium Building, and when filled out, should be mailed with check to that address.

Tomorrow nonmembers may obtain guest tickets at the door.

The club is a nonpartisan body of women citizens. The aim is to produce in women alertness of mind and sanity of judgment. Held together by a common interest in public questions, in a thoroughly democratic spirit, the great object is instruction in citizenship and knowledge of public questions, which is essential to intelligent voting. The club does not indorse the sentiment of the speakers. They desire simply the different points of view, and each member reserves judgment.

Efficient Housekeeping

By Laura A. Kirkman

The blackberry and gooseberry seem to be favorites with the housekeeper at preserving time. Some of the following recipes will show her how to combine these fruits with other berries:

Blackberry-loganberry jam: Wash and stem equal quantities of ripe blackberries and ripe loganberries, mix and crush them, and let stand in this way overnight. In the morning heat them to the boiling point, and let cook for thirty minutes; then add as many cups of granulated sugar as there were berries (the berries should have been measured before cooking,) and about two tablespoons of lemon juice to each quart of the jam (or add the lemon juice according to taste) and let the mixture boil for thirty minutes more. Then turn the jam into hot, sterilized small glasses, and cover when cold with paraffine.

Gooseberry-red current jam: "Top and tail" three pounds of ripe, red gooseberries and put them into a saucepan with one pound of stemmed red currants and three pounds of sugar; let this mixture stand for five hours, then beat it gradually and boil for thirty minutes, stirring often to keep from catching at bottom. Then turn into hot, sterilized glasses and cover with melted paraffine when cool.

Grandma's blackberry jelly (contributer by "Constant Reader:") Place well-washed blackberries in a double boiler and heat until the juice flows freely, then strain through double cheesecloth, measure it, and put this strained juice into the preserving kettle, let it boil five minutes, then add three-quarters of a cup of granulated sugar for every cup of juice there was when it was measured. Let boil until it "sheets off" when tested, then turn into hot, sterilized glasses and cover when cold with paraffine.

Blueberry jelly: Wash the berries in cold water and place them in the top of a double boiler; cook until the juice runs freely, then strain through double cheesecloth. Measure this juice and for each cup of it set aside a cup of granulated sugar. Put the measured juice into the preserving kettle and bring to boiling point, after which let boil for five minutes before adding the measured sugar; then continue boiling until it reaches the jelly stage (that is, when two drops will form at once on the edge of a spoon.) Pour into hot, sterilized glasses and cover with melted paraffine when cold.

To can blackberries or blueberries by the cold pack method: Wash the berries and put them into hot, sterilized glass jars, then pour over them a hot, medium-thin syrup made by boiling three quarts of sugar and two quarts of water together for five minutes; partially seal (that is, put the top wire over the glass cap, but do not press down the side wire) and sterilize the jar on a rack in your wash boiler, having the boiling water come over the top of the jar, for sixteen minutes. Now completely seal (that is, press down side wire) and invert to test for leaks. As will be seen, no blanching is necessary with these soft berries.

To can gooseberries by the cold-pack method: "Top and tail" the berries and put them into a piece of cheesecloth; dip this blanching cloth into a pot of boiling water, letting it remain one minute in the water, then "cold dip" (that is, hold under running cold water for a second, or dip into a pan of cold water.) Pack them in hot, sterilized jars and proceed exactly as above directed for blackberries and blueberries.

Tomorrow—Doing over your hardwood floors.

All inquiries addressed to Miss Kirkman in care of the "Efficiency Housekeeping" department will be answered in these columns in their turn. This requires considerable time, however, owing to the great number received. So if a personal or quicker reply is desired, a stamped and self-addressed envelope must be inclosed with the question.—[The Editor.

THE HIGH COST OF JOCKO.

Nothing seems exempt from cost ascendancy, and the old-time faithful attendant to the hand-organ man has joined the list. Before the war these simian dancers from South America cost $6 or $7. Now a monkey that can dance even to the doleful "Miserere" costs at least $30.

This is only one of three reasons, however, why the old-fashioned hurdy-gurdy is slowly passing off the face of the earth. High license fees in the big cities forced the hand-organ fraternity into the country. There another blow fell in the shape of horse-drawn street pianos, which, naturally, could travel better over the country roads.

So Jocko is losing his trade. His little cap and bells are rarely seen these days, and the best he can hope for, if he comes to this country, is an admiring throng outside the iron bars of his roomy cage. No longer may he be the clown of the hastily improvised miniature circus on a sunny street corner, with a crowd of children, and a few shamefaced elders tossing bright pennies for him to catch.—[Chicago Journal of Commerce.

LONDON SOCIETY IS DEMOCRATIC.

Visiting Cards Out of Date in Best Circles.

Even Court Has Grown Less Conventional.

Few Old Rules, However, Are Unalterable.

BY LADY MARY.

[SPECIAL FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

LONDON, June 15.—The bloodless revolution in London society continues its course and is sweeping all before it. In the "old days" the English court ranked third in matters of social ceremony and extreme correctness of etiquette. The Austrian and then the Russian courts stood in first and second place in exclusiveness and iron-bound etiquette. But now London, like most of the other great cities of the world, shrugs her shoulders at unnecessary conventions.

King George stands aside so that Queen Mary and Princess Mary may precede him when getting into a carriage or entering a room, while "paying calls" is no longer considered a necessity or even a duty in the most exalted circles. Consequently visiting cards are quite out of date and if you want to continue your acquaintance with a pleasant hostess or an agreeable fellow-guest, you just say: "Look me up in the telephone book; give me a ring between 11 and 12 o'clock one morning soon and we can manage a lunch or dinner." The periodical "card-leaving" that was at one time a fetish in polite London society is a thing of the past.

COURT LESS CONVENTIONAL.

Even the court has become much less conventional of recent times. The King has had a good deal to do with this. He always has had something of the "sailor-man" about him, and it is a well-known fact that he dislikes an excess of ceremony and that the "king business" bores him considerably. For instance, in the days of good, old Queen Victoria and even during the Edwardian epoch, when anyone was presented to the monarch he or she bowed or curtsied deeply and kissed the outstretched hand of the King or Queen. Nowadays, however, King George and Queen Mary do not expect this act of homage. They either simply bow and smile, or else stretch out a hand and give you a cordial shake.

It is still the custom, however, at ceremonial banquets at Buckingham Palace, that the King should be served first at table. So a few of the old-fashioned rules and regulations are still preserved, even in this revolutionary age.

MUST NOT TURN BACK.

For instance, you must never turn your back upon the King or Queen or any of the royal family, should you be in the same apartment with them.

Also, you must never sit down in the presence of the monarch unless you receive special permission to do so.

Queen Mary, to the despair of most of her acquaintances, likes standing and will do so for an hour or more without fatigue. Her ladies-in-waiting find this habit most distressing, for they cannot sit until she does.

Another rule apparently is unalterable. No young man can invite a princess to dance with him. A princess intimates that it is her wish that so-and-so should dance with her. Also, if the King or the or the Prince, who then indicate present at a ball, no dancing is commenced, until one or the other arrives and then a list of names of the guests is submitted to the King or the Prince, who then indicates to the hostess with whom they will have the pleasure of dancing and what dances they wish reserved.

The selected buds are then informed of the honor that is about to be conferred upon them and they await the fateful moment in a state of high nervous tension.

STORY BY LAUDER.

Theatrical matters do not often appeal to me as subjects for my weekly chatter to you, but I was highly entertained the other evening by Sir Harry Lauder, at the Palace Theater, who gave his usual brilliant Scottish program of song and story, while in one box sat Sir Alfred Butt, the knightly lessee and manager of the theater in question; in another box was Sir Thomas Lipton, of tea and "Shamrock" fame, while another member of the audience was Lord Dewar, who used to be Sir Thomas of that ilk, and who made his millions out of whisky.

Certainly these were representatives of the commercial aristocracy of the world, and three of them, Lauder, Lipton and Dewar are Scotsmen of quite humble origin.

The music hall knight told from the stage a story about the whisky baron that is really worth recounting. He, Sir Harry, went to visit Lord Dewar at his beautiful country place near London. Among the sights that he was shown were some fine pigeons and Lord Dewar presented Lauder with half a dozen of them and asked him if they should be sent to his home address or would he prefer taking them himself.

"Ye never know," said Harry, "so I took them. Then Tammy Dewar wrote me a letter and said he hoped that I liked them and told me their pedigree—but God bless ye—the bir-r-ds were home again before I got the letter! Ay—a Scotsman is Tammy Dewar! Ye see, he gave me homing pigeons."

All lovers of beautiful furniture and of designs marking a certain period, prick up their ears when "Chippendale" is mentioned. Like the names "Sheraton," "Hepplewhite" and "Adam" people have come to associate "Chippendale" with delicately graceful chairs and tables and not with actual persons, so that I am highly interested to note that a beautiful old early Georgian mansion about twenty miles out of London which was at one time the residence of members of the Chippendale family has recently come into the market.

The Chippendales were a Worcestershire family of some eminence, and it is said that Thomas Chippendale, a younger branch of the original stock, enjoyed sufficient prosperity to design and build this house in five acres of ground as his country residence.

The place where Chippendale first commenced his trade as a cabinet-maker can still be seen in a little court of St. Martin's Lane, Charing Cross, but it was in his days of comparative affluence that he erected and furnished after his own liking the dwelling place that has now come into the hands of the dealers.

And speaking of Chippendale designs switches my mind off to another quarter. Lady Victor Paget, who divorced her husband (he is a younger brother of the Marquis of Anglesey) the other day, was before her marriage Miss Olive May of the Gaiety Theater. She was a charmingly dainty and attractive looking girl who danced most engagingly. Her slim legs, which she always encased in long black silk stockings, were quite celebrated and she was known to fame as "the girl with the Chippendale legs."

London has always had a habit of fastening some sort of nickname to its celebrities, and I was reminded of this fact the other day when walking along Piccadilly. I passed that famous Portuguese nobleman and courtier the Marquis de Soveral who has for many years been known in society circles as "Blue Monkey."

When Portugal was a monarchy De Soveral was its Ambassador to the Court of St. James and so devoted is he to London that he has never left it and holds a sort of unofficial position as guide, philosopher and friend to the dethroned King Manuel.

HAS AIR OF BEAU.

A very ugly man, De Soveral has always been renowned for the perfection of his clothes, and although he is old he still has the air of a beau of the past regime. He earned the sobriquet of "Blue Monkey" presumably because of his "blue" shaven chin and his undeniable resemblance to our Darwinian ancestors.

It is said that in his younger days he was a terrific lady killer and many romantic stories are told of him and his love affairs. Probably some one will publish his memoirs one day, and there will be a fearful rustling in the dovecots of Mayfair. King Edward was one of De Soveral's closest friends and I am told that, in spite of his royal rank, the merry monarch was on more than one occasion exceedingly jealous of the success of "Blue Monkey" in affairs of the heart.

AMERICAN GIRL CAPTURES PRIZE.

Chicago Belle to Wed Noted British Inventor.

Capt. Bruce Bairnsfather Marries London Woman.

Wellington Koo Takes Bride at Brussels.

[SPECIAL FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

LONDON, June 15.—The matchmaking mammas of Mayfair and Belgravia are gnashing their teeth and wringing their hands over the capture of yet another great prize in the matrimonial market by the all-conquering, all-alluring American girl.

The prize in this instance is Lieut.-Commander Charles Dennistoun Burney, only son of Admiral Sir Cecil Burney, whose engagement to Miss Gladys High, the younger daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Henry High, of Lakeshore Drive, Chicago, has just been announced.

Lieut.-Commander Burney is the inventor of the paravane, the anti-mine device, which, affixed to either side of a ship, prevented the loss of lives innumerable during the war. He received $1,325,000 as royalties for his invention from a great firm of shipbuilders, and was made a commander of the Order of St. Michael and St. George by the government. He thus became a "catch" well worth the landing. Egged on by their worldly-wise mammas, Britain's most bewitching buds became bent on bagging Burney. As there are not very many American beauties abroad just now, their chances appeared good.

BELLES LOST OUT.

But along unexpectedly came beauteous Gladys High, and lo, the belles of Belgravia promptly lost out. This Chicago girl was visiting London from America to be a bridesmaid at the recent Osulton wedding. She was far from thinking that she would presently be needing bridesmaids herself, but she met Lieut.-Commander Burney, and busy little Cupid did the rest.

Miss High's now plutocratic fiance is 33 years of age, good-looking, clean-shaven and, among other things, a good shot. Almost as good as Cupid. His father, Sir Cecil Burney, was Lord Jellicoe's second in command and afterward became Second Sea Lord. The happy pair are now visiting at the admiral's country place, Preston House, near Basingstroke. As yet no date for the marriage has been given out.

TWO OTHER WEDDINGS.

Meanwhile, London has been greatly thrilled by announcements of the recent weddings of two celebrities, both of whom only lately arrived in England from the United States. One of them is Capt. Bruce Bairnsfather, the famous cartoonist and creator of "Old Bill;" the other, Dr. Wellington Koo, who until recently was Chinese Minister at Washington and now has exchanged posts with Mr. Sze, who was official representative of the Flowery Kingdom here, but has gone to Washington.

Capt. Bairnsfather, it seems, was secretly married some time ago to the Hon. Mrs. Scott, a charming society woman, who, during the war, nursed in a hospital in Grosvenor Square. Capt. Bairnsfather's secret has been well kept, and so, too, was that of Dr. Koo, whose bride it now proves is no other than Countess Hoey Stoker, a Chinese beauty who for some years has been a member of the smartest set in London society.

DAUGHTER OF SUGAR KING.

Mrs. Wellington Koo is the daughter of Count Oei Tyong Han, a Java sugar king, who is one of the richest men in the East and has often been called its Rockefeller. She was once lady-in-waiting to the late Dowager Empress of China. The new chatelaine of the Chinese Legation is western to her finger tips and always dresses in the latest Parisian gowns in which she looks if anything more charming than in her gorgeous native robes. No dances or other social functions are complete without her and her popular sister, Countess Kana. Mrs Koo's wonderful complexion is well set off by dark eyes and jet-black hair. She has an alluring personality and is a great art collector and ardent theater goer. Her marriage to Dr. Kellington Koo took place recently in Brussels. Dr. Wellington Koo had been attending the League of Nations conference at Brussels. He left for a few days to meet and marry his bride, whom he took back with him to Geneva. It was not until they returned to London that the news of their marriage was "released."

Had a Job in Mind.

"My dear," said the banker to his only daughter, "I have noticed a young man attired in a dress suit in the drawing-room on two or three evenings every week of late. What is his occupation?"

The little miss blushed prettily, and her dark eyes flashed mischievously, but there was keen pride and joy in her voice as she answered:

"He is at present unemployed, father, but he is thinking seriously of accepting a position as life companion to a young lady of means."—[London Answers.

Whole Psychology of Peasants Has Changed.

[A. P. FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

PRAGUE, June 15.—Seventeen different governments have been upset and supplanted with entire changes of authority in the Ukraine since 1917, says the Vollia Rossii, a Russian daily paper published here by Socialist-Revolutionists. The revolutions, it is said, have been due to the struggles of the peasantry against the successive rule of the Germans, the Cossack hetman, the land barons and, finally, the Bolsheviki.

After telling about the revolts of the Little Russians against "authority imposed upon them without their consent," the article says:

Story Deals With Danton and the Revolution.

Union Hampers Working of Hundreds of Theaters.

BY HARRY CARR.
[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NEW YORK, July 16.—Real nuggets are usually found in most unexpected places. Two colored song writers yearned for the 40 per cent that comes to song writers whose music has been played in comic opera. For a straight song they get only 5 per cent, wherefor they hit upon a wily scheme. They fussed up a little story around a bunch of their songs, hired some lusty colored singers and put on a little musical show which they called "Shuffle Along." They planned to keep the thing running for a week or two. The show has turned out to be one of the most popular song shows in New York. Every member of the cast is negro. Some of the music is very catchy but the chief reason of its popularity is the vim that the colored actors put into their work; New York is fed up on languid and haughty co-respondents who amble in a superior manner around the stage and do not conceal their utter boredom.

Speaking of New York hits, "Lightnin'" is at last to be taken off in New York and sent on the road. When it closes in the first week in August it will have made a run of 1001 nights on Broadway, knocking all previous records to flinders. The next run was Charles Hoyt's "A Trip to Chinatown," which ran over 600 nights many years ago.

Another German picture on the French Revolutionary period has arrived in New York and is being cut for the First National. In Germany it was called "Danton," after its chief character, but it will be renamed for the American trade. The picture shows Danton at the height of his career at the moment when his soul had just begun to revolt from so much bloodshed and horror. The entire action of the picture takes place in a period of a few days, the climax takes place at Danton's trial before the assembly. His power over the people is so great that it looks as though his trial would result in the failure of Robespierre's conspiracy against him when a messenger comes in to announce that free food is being distributed in one of the public squares. Danton's friends all rush out leaving him to his fate. Those who have seen the picture say it is one of the strongest that has come from Europe. Emil Jannings, who was Henry VIII in "Deception" and the King in "Passion," takes the part of Danton. Robespierre is played by the actor who took the part of Dr. Caligari.

Tommy Meighan, in the "Conquest of Canaan," is at the Rivoli this week. The play is worthy and has been popular. Will Rogers, in "An Unruly Hero," has been delightful at the Capital. The "Golden Snare," a typical James Oliver Curwood story of the Canadian Northwest, with Lew Stone, is at the Strand. It is not especially out of the ordinary, but is good entertainment.

"The Spirit of '76," which shows our revered British ancestors as sticking bayonets around in the gizzards of babies, and old King George being mean to B. Franklin, has been resurrected, and is shown at the Town Hall. This was the picture for which Robert Goldstein of Los Angeles went to jail during the war. Goldstein was a costumer who consented to take stock in the Griffith picture, "The Birth of a Nation," in settlement of a bill for $3000. He made $126,000 out of his investment, and heard the call of art. The Federal courts decided that Robert wasn't acting nice toward our allies by showing this picture during the war and sentenced him to a couple of million years in jail. His sentence was commuted by the President. The explanation of the resurrection of the play lies in the fact that the Attractive Story by Peter Kyne With Strong Cast.

Peter B. Kyne's popular story, "The Ten-Dollar Raise," made for Frothingham under the direction of Edward Sloman, is the feature attraction which opens at the California today, following its successful engagement at the Capitol Theater in New York.

This photoplay was chosen because it is a drama wherein 90,000,000 people of this country can see themselves, for it is a story of every-day life with every-day situations brought out in a way that is promised will make you imagine you are one of the characters upon the screen.

It is the story of an elderly bookkeeper who existed upon a small salary for twenty years and lived on the hopes of a $10 weekly raise, which a miserly employer promised annually but always put off until the following Christmas. For years he waited for the raise that he might be financially able to propose to the head stenographer in the same office. It never materialized, but after a series of big situations that range from deep pathetic notes to high comedy levels the lowly bookkeeper gains the upper hand and his just reward.

Throughout the story there is a strong and romantic love theme. There is the love of a couple grown old in service, and then there is the romantic story of the love of two youngsters with the world before them.

William V. Mong, Marguerite De la Motte, Helen Jerome Eddy, Pat O'Malley and Hal Cooley are the leading players in the story.

The California orchestra will offer one of Mr. Elinor's brilliant scores, and for the overture he has chosen "Excerpts from Tales of Hoffman."

KATHERINE MacDONALD SURROUNDED BY STARS.

Katherine MacDonald has remodeled the famous old dressing-room in the studio at Pico and Georgia streets, where so many of the present-day stars of the screen began their careers.

B. P. Eineman recently made and presented to Miss MacDonald a collection of paintings of the famous stars who once used the dressing-rooms which the charming Miss MacDonald now occupies.

Miss MacDonald's gallery now consists of paintings of Mary Pickford, who appeared in the First National releases, "Heart o' the Hills," "The Hoodlum" and "Daddy Long Legs;" Miriam Cooper, who is soon to begin work in R. A. Walsh's dramatization of Peter B. Kyne's story, "Kindred of the Dust;" Lillian Gish, Dorothy Gish, Mae Marsh and Blanche Sweet.

A portrait of Lionel Barrymore, who has completed for First National release "Jim, the Penman," "The Great Adventure," "The Devil's Garden" and "The Master Mind" also hang on Miss MacDonald's dressing-room wall.

Charles Ray, who is now releasing his pictures through First National, also once occupied the old studio dressing-room and has sent Miss MacDonald a portrait of himself in the costume worn in one of his first pictures.

Portraits of the late Robert Harron, Henry Walthall, Harry Carey, Dorothy Dalton, Owen Moore and R. A. Walsh also adorn Miss MacDonald's "den," as she calls it.

The MacDonald studio is the oldest in Los Angeles, the first really big studio built in the city. It retains many of the homelike features which D. W. Griffith incorporated in it when he built it.

"I like it because of its traditions and because it is the only studio in the city which really seems like home to me," says Miss MacDonald.

"TOO WISE WIVES."

One of Lois Weber's most dramatically and domestically interesting productions, "Too Wise Wives," will start showing today at the De Luxe Theater. It discusses without fear some vital problems in connection with modern marriages. Its lesson is brought out with startling power. Claire Windsor and Mona Lisa are the "wives" of the story.

TRUE FRONTIER LIFE ON SCREEN.

Authority on Indians Praises "Bob Hampton of Placer."

Says Film Accurately Shows Old-Time Characters.

Views of Custer's Last Stand Taken from Dirigible.

BY JAMES WILLARD SCHULTZ,
Author of "My Life as an Indian."

Yesterday at the Kinema Theater, where it is to be shown during the week, I saw on the screen the first absolutely accurate presentation of old-time frontier life that has ever been filmed. I refer to Marshall Neilan's seven-reel production "Bob Hampton of Placer," an adaptation of Randall Parish's classic story of that name.

Its main characters are faithfully portrayed by James Kirkwood as Bob Hampton, Marjorie Daw as the Kid, and Dwight Crittenden as Gen. Custer. Nor must I omit mention of Noah Beery, who, as the proprietor of a gambling joint, is the exact double, clothes, whiskers and all, of a gambler I knew in Fort Benton, Mont., away back in 1870.

The story centers on the outbreak of the Sioux Indians because of the repudiation by our government of a certain treaty it had made with the tribe, and its climax is Gen. Custer's last stand on the Little Big Horn on that never-to-be-forgotten day of June 1876.

The Blackfeet Indians represent the Sioux, and my old friend, Chief White Calf, he whose stern profile is on the obverse side of the popular buffalo nickel, plays the part of Sitting Bull. Other friends whom I recognized on the screen are Bear Head, Bird Rattle, Running Crane and Bull Turns Around.

SAVED FROM STARVATION.

The Blackfeet, it will be remembered, is the tribe that would have starved last winter, had it not been for donations of money and clothing sent to them by their friends throughout the country. Not the least of these are 600 Los Angeles boys, members of the Woodcraft League of America, who sent some hundreds of dollars for their relief.

All but the last scenes of this production were filmed in Glacier National Park, the ancient home and hunting ground of the Blackfeet. The particular locations for the scenes were selected by Joseph Culbertson, of Poplar, Mont., who was one of Custer's scouts, and was detailed by him to accompany Maj. Reno on the day of the massacre. Mr. Culbertson, by the way, is half Blackfeet. His father, Alexander Culbertson, was the factor of the American Fur Company who built its westernmost trading post, Fort Benton, in 1845.

In the opening of the story, the Indians are shown camping and hunting, rich and contented prior to the invasion of their country by the immigrant whites. We see Puhtomuksikimi, The Lake Inside—St. Mary's Lake—in its setting of mountains climbing to the sun. And then appears beautiful Two Medicine Lake, its sparkling waters lapping the foot of Rising Wolf Mountain, Mahkwiyipoats. We named it after our old friend, Hugh Monroe, who became a member of the Blackfeet tribe in 1816, and was the first white man to see the foot of the Rockies country lying between the Saskatchewan and the Missouri.

CHASE, KILL BUFFALO.

We see, too, a large herd of buffalo fleeing from the Indian hunters. At great expense Mr. Neilan purchased one of the buffalo, a huge but worn-out old bull, and it was pursued and killed by my old friend Bear Head. The swift chase, the killing, the unique Indian method of butchering the animal all became a part of the first reel, but after it was shown several times in the East the management was obliged to cut it out, owing to the protests of certain women's clubs. Would that it could be put in again! Why should not the present generation be allowed to see just how we obtained our food, our clothing, our shelter, in other words, the buffalo, in those days of the long ago?

About 2000 persons took part in this production. Some of the scenes were filmed from a dirigible balloon, controlled by semaphore experts both in the air and on the ground; in no other way could the great battle scene have been portrayed.

As I viewed this production yesterday I felt from the very beginning of it to the end of the last scene, that, in a preincarnation Mr. Neilan must have been a frontiersman, for he has reproduced the frontier as it was, even to the smallest details. An instance of this is his quest all over the State of Montana for the Army wagons of the period of 1870, that he obtained. His soldiers wear the uniforms and carry the weapons of that time, and his civilians, both men and women, are clothed exactly as I knew them in those days.

And I am very, very proud of my Blackfeet Indians; as actors they have proved that they are in no way inferior to the whites.

"TO HAROLD."

Comedian With the Specs Inspires a Reel Poet.

Harold Lloyd has inspired the muse of a Seattle poet, who writes to Harold the following three verses, which appeared recently in an eastern magazine:

he said:

> I'm not a singer with guitar,
> I've never even carolled;
> But here are lines I pen to you,
> The "Lamps-of-Laughter" Harold.
> I like you with your tortoise specs,
> I like your sunny smile,
> I like you with your troubled looks,
> I like you all the while.
> But listen to me, Harold Lloyd,
> I wish that I were you,
> When you are making love sometimes—
> For Mildred I would woo!

When Lloyd was shown the above, he said:

"Diplomatic chap, that. But why didn't he say 'to Mildred?' for no horn-rimmed specs could make me see that it's 'to Harold.'"

The Dining Room

—The Heart of Hospitality

MORE often perhaps than any part of the house does the dining-room reflect the spirit of hospitality. For the ceremony of breaking bread is older than history itself and the entertainment of the guest at the dining board has ever been a sacred institution.

The appointments of the dining-room assume an important place among the household gods. The dining-room is viewed by the guest as the heart of the home and by it the household is judged.

Here individuality should find expression, the arts be cultivated and an atmosphere of quiet dignity prevail. Dining-room pieces that possess these requisites may be found in unusual variety at the California Furniture Company. The charm of distinctiveness, the triumph of art and the restfulness of dignified luxury are embodied in these truly unusual pieces of dining-room furniture.

And each piece of furniture to be found here has been selected with a care prompted by the knowledge that it is destined to represent the integrity and the exclusive character of the California Furniture Company in some home.

An invitation is extended to view this unusually distinctive display of dining-room furniture. No obligation to purchase is implied in the warm welcome we offer you. And a comparison of values will convince you that no premium is placed upon the distinctive designs and unusual features of home furnishings here shown.

THE NEW.

IN STORES AND HOMES.

NOVELTIES, IDEAS AND PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS.

By Olive Gray.
Per E. B.

Up-to-Datest:

A midsummer frock of black canton crepe, cut along straight lines, with both upper and lower portion laid in fine plaits. It has the favored elliptical neck line and flowing full-length sleeves. The high light is given by a broad girdle sumptuously beaded in red beads so brilliant as to just escape being barbaric. Short panels of the beading extends, effectively, over either hip.

An almond set of silver, gold lined. A tall-footed compote and six small dishes copying the shape of the large one, comprise this exquisite product of the silversmith's art. The whole spells bridal giving in letters large.

The use of broad, circular bands of white or ivory Georgette as inserts in frocks of navy or black printed taffeta. The style is one which the willowy figure may adopt with impunity, but which is distinctly unkind to avordupois.

Now is the Time to Buy:

The extra hat of taffeta, felt or hair braid matching the between-season gown and completing a costume which "fills in" for a thousand occasions and returns, in satisfaction and service, 100 per cent on the investment. Hats of a particularly enticing quality and style are among the best buys offered the discriminating shopper, along Seventh street this week.

Beach parasols in all the colors of the rainbow. Mammoth sunshades spelling, in the gayety of their tinting, August vacationing on friendly sands, and in the grateful shadows of which long, loungy, restful hours may be spent with the blue Pacific in the foreground of one's vision.

White wear for the man of the family. White madras shirts—than which nothing in shirtdom is "rankier," in a style sense, this season—of superfine quality and infinitesimal price, measured by former scales. And white flannels in coat-and-trouser suits to match the shirts and make the outfit for the summer man an entire one.

The Trail of the Brilliant Bead.

Beads, these glittery days, require an entire chapter to themselves if one attempts to cover adequately the wide and constantly enlarging field in the realm of clothes, over which the eye-catching embellishments of frocks and hats, of bags and shoes and of any and every surface whatsoever upon which they may find lodgment, have a way of decoratively spreading themselves. The fact is patent that, in the matter of bead adornment, we are all good Indians.

It occurs, however, recalling dim pages in the green-bound history of infant school days, that our European foremothers must have started the bead craze among their copper skinned sisters of the American forests when the former came colonizing, along with the Pilgrim fathers, to the free New World.

One remembers various and sundry records of land transactions between the voyageurs and the peoples discovered by Columbus, the results of which balanced heavily against the side of the buying Plymouth linen drapers and gentlemen farmers from the English midshires, where the medium of exchange was the bead. The sentiment of the women of the family who gave up their bead chains and bracelets and hair ornaments for the purchase of rocky acres along the Massachusetts coast or the rich black loam of Chesapeake Bay lands, from the original owners, is not of record, but, unless feminine dispositions have altered more than we think in the 300 years, it is a safe bet they did it grudgingly and only under the firm pressure which pater familias of that unemancipated era of women had a way of exerting.

Beads to Glitter More Brightly.

The progress of time has marched us to a point where we no longer exchange beads for lands. In fact we don't exchange them at all. To the contrary, we spend hours and gold increasing the size of our individual collections. We shall need our beads, too, every one, to keep up with the glint of the procession, if we heed the forecast shadows of autumn styles, for Paris has it that the day of the bead is yet in its forenoon. The air is full of rumors that, on dresses and wraps, two beads will grow where one grew last season and that, in addition, we shall revive the fashion of beading our stockings and our gauntleted gloves.

In neck chains we are, it seems, to rival, in richness, the dancing maidens of Babylon and the Nautch girls of the temple. The most sated bead collector would exclaim over the stunning necklace of white onyx and topaz I was shown, the other day, by a leading jeweler, designed to be the final and utterly effective touch to a sports outfit in black and white. It is waist-long in its doubled loveliness, and consists of oval-shaped beads of pellucid onyx, exquisitely cut, strung between rondlets of topaz.

Equally to be coveted was a shorter chain of lapis lazuli, of round-shaped beads, separated by tiny flat discs of crystal. One fancied its rich indigo depths in juxtaposition to a sweater of one of the fashionable orange or rust shades!

The New Blue.

Mention of the azureness of the necklace of lapis lazuli brings us to the new blue of autumn. There is one, vouched for by the same unimpeachable authority that has previously sponsored the browns and the grays. In its naming, Presidential notabilities which have previously given us Alice and Harding handles to shades in heaven's own color, have been passed over, and we have gone across to the Italian coast to call our new blue "Sorrento." It is neither dark nor light and it is, of all things, not glary. Softness is its predominating characteristic—the softness of the Mediterranean under a sun veiled by fleecy clouds. It is the blue of blues to set off gray fur and, in such fabrics as velvety marvella or, in the cachmireine which is the latest offspring of duvetyne and cachmere, one can shut one's eyes and revel blissfully, in its possibilities.

PASTURES PLENTIFUL IN OREGON THIS YEAR.

GRASS MORE ABUNDANT IN STATE THAN FOR THIRTY YEARS PAST.

SALEM (Or.) July 17.—Feeding conditions on the Oregon ranges are now better than for thirty years, and not since the days of the early settlers have the hills and deserts produced such an abundance of grass as this season. This was the statement made here by Dr. W. H. Lytle, State Veterinarian, following his return from the mouth of the Columbia River, Eastern and Central Oregon and other live-stock sections of the State.

"A tour of the Eastern Oregon countries bordering on Nevada has convinced me that tons and tons of hay will go ungathered," said Dr. Lytle. "At Paisley one thrifty homesteader was cutting hay between the sage, while in other sections of the State I found similar operations. A reseeding of the range will automatically take place and there should be an abundance of feed during the next few years.

"Oregon's range difficulties started with high-priced hay and short grass. This year the problem confonting the live-stock raisers is to secure animals in sufficient numbers to eat the feed. The interior stockman has emerged from the recent winter with the lowest overhead expenses in many years, and naturally feels joyous because of the prospective bumper lamb and calf crop. Wool is long in staple and good in quality, and everything is satisfactory with the exception of the price.

"Shearing is now well under way in the high deserts of Eastern Oregon and as a result of the abundance of feed the sheep owners are taking their time in getting back to the forest reserves."

Notwithstanding the extensive alterations to our galleries, we are showing as intelligently as possible, under the conditions, our splendid collection of Queen then sent Dr. Theophanos an eminent sanitary as her personal representa- to take charge of the camp. brought a corps of ten Until that time only had administered to ill among the refugees. There had been no one to look after sanitation.

The American Red Cross has sent to Saloniki Col. Henry A. Shaw, of the United States Army Medical Corps, with a party of physicians and nurses, to aid the Greek government in the care of the refugees. Col. Shaw plans to gather 1000 of the orphans in old French barracks, several miles from the present camp, where the children will be given medical attention while food will be furnished by the Greek government. The expenses of this work will be borne by the government.

BOSTON NURSE ACTIVE.

Miss Lillian Snellman, a Boston nurse, is conducting a Red Cross dispensary at the camp where she distributes cans of milk and soon will distribute clothing to the small children.

Many of the refugees were lured here by promise of rich lands in Macedonia, but the majority fled from the Caucasus before the advances of the Bolsheviki and the Turkish Nationals under Kemal Pasha.

The 20,000 are huddled together in barracks which were not intended to hold half that number. A Red Cross inspector who visited the camp reports that diseases such as typhus, dysentery and influenza are prevalent and that more than 1000 of the refugees died within a month.

The Greek Governor, Gen. Zavitsanos, is in despair for he expects 15,000 additional refugees to arrive soon and says that there are more than 50,000 others trying to reach Greece. The fund appropriated by the Greek government to feed, clothe and provide medical attention will be exhausted within a month, say the relief agents.

JAPAN PUSHES SHIP BUILDING.

Naval Program Expedited by Nipponese.

Will Complete Plans Despite Any Agreement.

Navy to Have Sixteen First-Class Warships.

[A. P. FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

TOKIO, June 15.—Japan's present naval program, which, say officials, will be completed despite whatever may be arranged with foreign powers as to future curtailment, means more than the creation of the so-called eight and eight units. The phrase "eight and eight" signifies, according to the official view here, that Japan will build until she has eight first-class battleships and eight first-class battle cruisers but it also signifies another "eight," namely, that when one of the above sixteen units reaches the age of eight years, that unit passes to the second line, to be replaced immediately by a new ship of the latest design.

SIXTEEN FIRST-CLASS SHIPS.

It is pointed out, therefore, that Japan's future navy, as at present outlined, will have sixteen first-class fighting ships of the latest construction as well as numerous ships of the second line to which the warships now building will fall when a period of eight years makes substitution necessary.

Hence, adherence to the "eight and eight" plan means constant building and constant big expenditure. It is this continuing outlay to which ex-Minister Yukio Ozaki takes objection in his campaign for an international agreement for naval restriction on the ground that the budget involved will prove disastrous for his country.

A comparison of the strength of the navies of Japan and the United States shows, according to the view held here, that in 1921 Japan will have one fewer major ship, two more light cruisers, 220 fewer destroyers and eleven fewer submarines than the United States. By the end of 1923, if the programs of the respective countries are carried out, the United States will lead Japan by sixteen in major warships. She will have 321 more destroyers and twenty-four more submarines, but on the other hand the American light cruisers will fall behind Japan's to the number of three. By the end of 1927 Japan will have two fewer big ships, three more light cruisers and forty-seven fewer destroyers. Japan is, however, devoting herself to submarines and it is expected that by 1927 she will beat the United States in submarines to the number of thirty-two.

If the United States does not start a new program after 1923 (either replacing old ships transferred to the "second line" or augmenting her fleet) Japan, it is held here, after big expenditures and continuous building at her maximum capacity will in 1927 only be in practically the same relative position as she is today, 1921.

If, on the other hand, the United States after 1923 adopts a new building program of only replacing the ships going into the "second line," which is regarded as not only a reasonable assumption, but almost a certainty, then, it is the contention here, that Japan in 1927 will occupy the same relatively weak position that she will have in 1923.

WITHOUT THOUGHT.

Those favoring Japan's entering an international restriction agreement express the opinion that Japan's plans are laid without any thought of the United States policy after 1923. And further, that if Japan seriously favored or desired disarmament for herself, she would take the lead in trying to force the world to accept it, immediately, rather than sit back and permit the United States and Great Britain to take the initiative.

Appearances here indicate that Japan is doing everything to expedite her building program. Admiral Kato, the Minister of Marine, recently told the Diet that the following in England of the principle of the division of work made it possible to build more quickly and at the minimum of expense.

Heretofore it has been the policy of the Japanese navy to make each navy yard as complete a unit as possible, capable of doing all manner of work. When the policy of rapid naval expansion was adopted it was found that such yards were not capable of quick expansion. In the meantime, private manufacturing facilities have developed to such an extent that the navy can now depend on some of them to supply much of its required materials. It therefore is considered probable here that the British policy cited by the Minister of the Navy has been adopted by the Japanese Navy Department.

SHOW HASTE.

The almost simultaneous establishment of the new naval gun factories at Hiro and Sasebo, the naval arsenal in Sunoki, which includes 800 acres of land, the Mitsubishi torpedo factory near Nagasaki, the airplane factories of Nagova and Sasebo, the development of the ordnance section of the Muroran Steel Works, and numerous other small projects, are believed to show, in addition to a haste in increasing armaments, a permanent rearrangement and division of work that will in the future be capable of still greater expansion without confusion or disorganization.

Japan has now five superdreadnaughts less than nine years of age, namely, the Fuso, Yamashiro, Ise, Hyuga and Nagato. In 1923, under the age-limit policy, the Fuso will fall into second line, but the new superdreadnaughts, Matsu, Kaga and Tosa, will be in commission, making a total of seven dreadnaughts. In 1927, the Yamashiro, Ise and Hyuga will go into the second line, but it is expected that four others will have been completed, so the total will be eight.

SUPERIOR STRENGTH.

In the powerful battle cruisers, Japan has strength superior to that of the United States. The Kongo, Hiyei, Haruna and Kirishima are all under nine years of age. By 1923 all four are scheduled to withdraw to the second-line defense, but the projected battle cruisers, Amagi and Akagi, are expected to be placed in commission by that year. By 1927 six new battle cruisers are expected to be added, making a total of eight.

In addition to pushing this continuous building program, it is understood that Japan is turning out submarines as fast as possible, realizing that underwater craft is best adapted to the defense of the empire, which is composed of so many islands, and believing that, finding shelter as they can in the rock inlets, they will offer a serious menace to ships advancing to attack in the dangerous channels that surround the Nippon coast line.

Japan realizes that she is weak in aviation, and is exerting herself to train capable airmen as well as to build high-grade airplanes and hydroplanes.

CAT WINS ITS CASE IN SUPREME COURT.

BOSTON, July 17.—The Supreme Court has upheld the right of a cat to use its claws and teeth as a means of protection against persons who seek to interfere in a cat and dog fight. Prudence, the court held, should prompt a person to leave a strange cat alone under such circumstances.

The opinion, prepared by Chief Justice Rugg, sustained a lower court finding for the defendant in a suit brought by Mrs. Fannie E. Goodwin against the Nelson Grocery Company of this city to recover damages for injuries received when she sought to protect her pet dog from the store cat.

"She voluntarily submitted herself to danger and unnecessarily exposed herself," said the Chief Justice.

IN TSETSE-FLY LAND.

Flies in certain parts of Africa mean something more to cattle than a mere seasonal annoyance, for the pestilential tsetse visits disease and death upon those that enter its domains, states an article in the January number of Popular Mechanics Magazine. When a number of shorthorn bulls were driven overland through three tsetse-fly belts, one twenty-one miles wide, they were completely clothed from muzzle to horns in sewn suits of heavy fabric, and their noses, eyes, horns and hoofs, the only parts exposed, were coated with wagon grease.

CONDITIONS IN INDIA IMPROVE.

Session of New Legislature Marks Epoch.

Constitutional Bark Weathers First Heavy Weather.

Native Policy Proves to be Unsuccessful.

[A. P. FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

LONDON, June 15.—The session of the new Indian Legislature, which is now closing, may mark a definite epoch in Indian administration, says the Bombay correspondent of the Times.

It opened, he adds, under the shadow of unassuaged bitterness in the Punjab and under the oppression of heavy burdens of taxation made necessary by military considerations.

"In this heavy weather," the correspondent writes," the new constitutional bark might easily have foundered. That it has passed into comparatively calm waters is due to the Duke of Connaught's visit."

CLOUDS CLEARED AWAY.

This royal visit, with the Duke's appeal for unity, the Indian government's frank confession of error in dealing with disturbances and particularly Lord Rawlinson's declaration of military policy, it is said, cleared away the Punjab miasma for the session.

Taking advantage of this period of quiet, the new Council of State is considering special legislation for the preservation of order, which will prepare the way for the repeal of acts which have outgrown their usefulness.

"The constitution now has the line clear for a year," says the correspondent. "This it owes in large measure to Gandhi (the native anti-British leader) and the doctrine of non-co-operation. By keeping from the councils the firebrands who would have gone there only to obstruct, and by leaving the way free for men desirous of genuinely working for reforms, an opportunity has been afforded for an understanding between the government and the councils established all over the country.

"But the battle between constitutionalism and revolution has to be fought this year. All over the country non-co-operationism is developing into undisguised tyranny, too often accompanied by disorder. Gandhi deplores this for the moment. It is inevitable that as soon as the dismal failure of his effort to bring all governments to a standstill is realized by the public he will be driven to take further measures."

Beyond his Comprehension.

"A curious case came up in the court of domestic relations this morning."

"What was it all about?" asked the meek little man.

"A wife charged that her husband cut out the department store advertisements from the family newspaper before he'd let her read it. He was a brute, wasn't he?"

"Certainly," replied the meek little man. "But what I don't understand is how he managed to get hold of the paper first."—[Birmingham Age-Herald.

Coffee in South Africa.

Coffee is the popular drink in South Africa, says Isaac F. Marcosson in the Saturday Evening Post. In the old Boer household the coffee pot is constantly boiling. With a cup of coffee and a piece of biltong inside him a Boer could fight or trek all day. Coffee bears the same relation to the South African that tea does to the Englishman, save that it is consumed in much larger quantities.—

SOUTH PASADENA.

In compliment to Miss Helen Janssen of New Orleans, who is the house guest of Mr. and Mrs. Walter T. Taylor of 1967 Fletcher avenue, Miss Lily Taylor entertained on Friday afternoon with a most delightful tea for thirty guests. Mr. and Mrs. Taylor also gave a dinner party quite recently, which was enjoyed by a large number of friends. The affair was in the nature of a birthday surprise for Miss Betty Eagan.

The handsome gardens of the Charles B. Boothe home, 1515 Garfield avenue, were the scene of an elaborate card party on Friday afternoon given by the members of the Daughters of the American Revolution for the benefit of their Americanization work, which provides for a visiting teacher for the homes of the foreign women of the community. After the card games, for which handsome prizes were awarded, several pupils of Miss Eleanor Massard's dancing class entertained with fancy dances. Very delicious refreshments were served, and a most enjoyable social time was had by all present. Besides furnishing an afternoon of delightful entertainment, the affair netted a goodly sum for the treasury of the organization, as many who were not found at the card tables were happy to pay admission to the grounds and thus help the worthy cause along.

Mr. and Mrs. Earl Pickle chaperoned a group of sixteen young folk to Ocean Park on Saturday night, where they enjoyed the evening dancing. Mr. and Mrs. Pickle have entertained quite extensively of late, having given a number of most delightful affairs, both formal and informal, during the past few weeks. Among these was a picnic on Monday of last week, honoring their house-guest from San Francisco, Mrs. A. B. Kleinsky.

As a prenuptial courtesy to Miss Alice Stockwell of Alhambra, whose marriage to Mr. Elbert Winegard of this city will be one of the society events of the near future, Miss Helen Blattner entertained with a miscellaneous shower on Friday night at her home on Oak street. The affair was a complete surprise to the honoree. In a novel way the gifts were presented to Miss Stockwell. After the guests were all seated, the doorbell rang, when two young ladies, dressed like bellboys, appeared, bearing two immense packages which were addressed to Miss Stockwell. Upon opening these, they were found to contain many smaller packages, and as each of these were unwrapped, the honoree found herself to be the recipient of very many dainty and handsome remembrances. After the gifts had been duly inspected, the evening was spent in having a genuinely good time. Delicious refreshments were served at the close.

On Tuesday evening Mrs. S. G. Pollard of 1700 Wayne avenue gave a very delightful dinner party in honor of her husband's birthday anniversary. Invitations were extended to fourteen guests, and the affair was a most enjoyable one. The evening hours were spent with conversation and music. Mr. Pollard realizes that it is in every way possible for a woman to keep a secret, as the affair was so skillfully managed by his wife that it came as a genuine surprise to him.

ONTARIO.

Charming in its simplicity was the lovely mid-summer wedding Tuesday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Mitchell, 412 West D street, when their attractive daughter, Miss Jessie Winifred Mitchell, became the bride of Valentine Middough of Long Beach. The Rev. John Barron Toomay, pastor of Bethel Congregational Church, was the officiant. A beautiful garden setting had been arranged for the ceremony, which was witnessed by a group of seventy-five admiring friends and relatives. Members of the bridal party took their places at 8 o'clock beneath an archway of Shasta daisies on the veranda, with a great bank of pink hydrangea forming a background, while the guests were grouped on the broad lawn beneath the soft glow of many electric-lighted Japanese lanterns. Shortly after the assembling of the guests, Way Middough and Lorne Middough of Long Beach, brothers of the bridegroom, sang Cadman's "At Dawning," and just before the ceremony, Way Middough sang "Until." Mrs. Charles Simpson, a sister of the bridegroom, played the wedding march from Lohengrin. The bride entered on the arm of her father, and was attired in a lovely creation of white Georgette, bead trimmed, over white satin. She wore the conventional veil and carried a shower bouquet of bride's roses and lilies of the valley. Miss Hulda Berger, as bridesmaid, was charming in a frock of rose-dotted Swiss, over white organdie, and carried a bouquet of old-fashioned garden flowers. Dr. Frederick L. Mitchell, a brother of the bride, served as best man. Just at the close of the ceremony, Lorne Middough sang very feelingly the last stanza of "Because" and during the reception and supper which followed, the Middough brothers entertained the wedding guests with an impromptu concert. Assisting with the serving were the Misses Charlotte Harper, Blanche Mollard, Isabel Ensley, Frances Fallis and Anna Fallis. Mr. and Mrs. Middough left by motor for a honeymoon in the north, and on their return will make their home at 247 Lime avenue, Long Beach.

BILL HART AND THE CENSORSHIP

Actor Has Strong Views on the Question.

Will Rest for One Year and Write Stories.

Turns an Eye on Business as Well as Art.

BY ALMA WHITAKER.

To be received by William S. Hart in a very businesslike office in which roll-top desks, typewriters and projecting machines are the chief paraphernalia, is slightly disconcerting. However, it was a hot day and he had his collar off. That helped.

"Why," asks an anxious public, "is Bill Hart going to take a year's rest?"

But it is all right. There is going to be no dearth of Bill Hart pictures. On the contrary, Bill is four pictures ahead, having been peculiarly industrious and efficient on his last contract. And, while in pictures, Bill is a kind-hearted, unsophisticated bad man with gentle reformative proclivities tucked away in his belt with his guns—both ready for action at the slightest provocation—in business he is a hard-headed, far-seeing, law-abiding conventional magnate of commerce, with his finger on the pulse of business conditions. No unprofitable over-production for him, no undue risks regarding this bugbear of looming censorship. No waste. No preventable loss.

One appreciates at once why Bill has been both an artistic and financial success. He has his head screwed on the right way round. Any ambitious, yearnful, self-expression that may be his is nicely tempered with a proper regard for markets, vogues, popular moods and reform bogies.

And his chief subject of conversation just now is that looming censorship.

"Every artist, every writer, every sculptor, every magazine and every newspaper must fight this censorship with all their being," said Mr. Hart in his best protector-of-the-arts role. "Otherwose it will blight every form of creative work, reduce art to mediocrity, victimize and penalize every form of artistic progress."

Do Bill Hart's pictures then come within the blight of State Censorships in spite of their inevitable good morals? They do. Pennsylvania, it appears, banned his latest picture, "The Whistle," which will be shown at Grauman's Rialto today for the first time. They banned it because they thought it encouraged class hatred—capital and labor stuff—but at the moment Bill breathes again because he has succeeded in convincing them that it is the story of two men's lives, two men who happen to be respectively boss and employee, but could just as well have been policemen and fireman as far as the plot of the story is concerned. So the ban has just been raised. But, as Bill says, this petty State censorship is a perpetual menace, a perpetual struggle against unintelligent ultimatums that differ in every State and cannot possibly represent a general public opinion at all.

Bill's other three pictures to be shown in due course while he is resting are "Three-Word Brand," which he describes as a clever story bought from an unknown writer (amateur photoplaywrights will be interested in this) and "White Oak" and "Travellin' On"—both stories written by himself. Bill says he nearly always has to write his own stories because he specializes chiefly in Western stuff, faithfully portrayed according to his own knowledge of frontier life gained as a boy, of which the heroes are actually drawn from life—and the average scenarioist appears to be hopelessly unfamiliar with these conditions.

"You always reform in your bad-man parts, and show a marked responsiveness to fond sentiment, innocence and weakness," I reminded him. "Is this for public moral purposes, or do you really believe these bad men enjoy this soft streak?"

"Oh, they sure do," said Bill earnestly." I have never known a really bad man. These gunmen kill strictly to their code—like the gentlemanly duellist, they never just kill for the lust of killing. I have known in life most of the charac-

ROTUND TRIXIE HAS JIT RANCH.

Orpheum Star Raises Chicks, but Not to Eat.

Is Champion Snail Snatcher of the World.

Owns Two Dogs, One Real, One Imitation.

BY GRACE KINGSLEY.

Trixie Friganza owns a ranch. The name of it is Jitney Ranch. It's in Hollywood, in the backyard of her misses' size bungalow.

"It's a pretty little bungalow," admitted Trixie, "plenty big enough for the Singer Midgets—that is, for a few of 'em if they don't crowd."

As for the ranch, she says they don't go into it much of evenings for fear they'll step on it and ruin it. A good-sized rabbit, she says, could board on the ranch for about a minute.

She promises to pull up the other radish if you'll come out to dinner some night. Harvested the peach crop herself—and ate it—both of 'em.

She measures the parsley bed every morning with her measuring tape, and she believes the radishes are getting jealous of the onions. They've kicked up the earth and have taken five inches away from said onions. And look at the lettuce—just green with envy!

"See, we have oranges, too!" exclaimed the vivacious Trixie. "You don't have to say you have only two oranges, you know. But oh, how the grapefruit looks down on the poor oranges—'Such low company,' it seems to say.

"Oh, but see our fig tree! We saw a fig tree in the next yard—a big, strong fig tree, and we bought a little girl fig tree, thinking maybe they would flirt. And they did. Our fig tree turned out to be a perfect mother. See, a whole family of figs has moved right in. Oh, I certainly love my ranch!"

"I know how it is," I sympathized. "You feel so different toward things you've raised yourself. You—"

"Yes," rejoined Trixie, hitching up her overalls, "I feel just that tender way toward my little bed of garlic!

"But," she went on, polishing up a lone grapefruit, "the crop that grows best is the tomatoes! But alas, they're not for me, tomatoes—forbidden by my rheumatism. And they're the fondest thing I am of!

"Oh, yes, I have a chicken farm. It's only 5 by 10, but it's like all chicken farms—a place where the chickens are crowded in, knocking each other down trying to get a little exercise. But eat my chickens? I should say not! Why, my chickens know me—they almost call me Trixie! I know all their names, and their love affairs, and which is jealous of the other's children. Can you imagine eating anything you've named? Imagine calling, 'Here Jim! Here, Jim!' And then zowie! hitting a trusting bird over the head!

"Ah, but I'll tell you the little crop that never fails. The snail crop. Say, I'm becoming the champion snail snatcher of the world. Doesn't sound very wild, does it, chasing snails? But you just try it! You get hold of an old hard boiled elk snail that's seen the world, and who says that the house that was good enough for his father is good enough for him. He doesn't care about anything except his little old mint julep of an evening and then to totter out and watch the little girl snails promenading. That's when you've got to bean him. But you ought to hear the young snails that have lost a loved one talk. Sometimes I try to flirt with a young snail, and coax him out. Without poking his head out, he yells over to his girl: 'There's a terrible old dame out here with white hair and a club. Look out for her!' But I'm getting good. I've got a record of seventeen snails a minute. Those snails get me in good with the chickens anyhow. They feel very differently toward me from what the snails do. They say to each other, 'She may be kind of a funny old thing, but she's a good provider!'"

The Friganza household, consisting of Trixie Friganza, her sister, Bessie Friganza, and her brother-in-law, who was married to a younger Friganza sister, also boasts two dogs.

"We've got two dogs—one real and one imitation," as the buxom Trixie puts it. "Also we have two autos, one real auto and a funny looking thing we call an auto. The dogs are Micky and Jacques.

"When young," explained Trixie, "Micky promised to be a wire-haired Irish terrier. But he broke his word and turned into a mutt. It was during the Irish terrier period we recklessly named him. Jacques is a real pedigreed pup. But stuck up! Oh, Lord. We knocked that

"MICKY" NEILAN'S VERY REASONABLE REMARKS.

"Mickey" Neilan says that some of the reasons why the motion-picture business is still in its swaddling clothes, are:

Only a few producers are making pictures, while most of them are making pencil marks on table linen.

Too many film men are spending their time forming new companies instead of working for those who are paying their salaries.

Every one in the lobby of the Alexandria is excusing himself from his friends every two minutes, to whisper something important to a newcomer.

Sales managers in New York are too busy writing form letters to their branch managers, to sell pictures.

There are too many exhibitors trying to make pictures, instead of showing them in their theaters.

There are too many producers trying to exhibit pictures instead of making them.

Most of the stars believe what the press agents say about them.

Most financiers only want 80 per cent for the use of their money in motion-picture transactions.

There are still some publicity men in the business who are not members of the W.M.P.A.

Many motion-picture executives look on censorship as a medium for personal publicity rather than an evil to overcome.

Too many persons in the producing field forget they are under contract, when they receive an offer from another company.

There are still some newspapers (none in Los Angeles,) that do not know that motion-pictures have a much larger daily following than sports, among the public.

Several directors use megaphones instead of brains.

Some use both, some use neither.

And, finally, because Wesley Barry only received 300 fan letters one day last week, instead of 500.

METEORIC CAREER OF MISS DUPONT.

Magnificent settings, the presence of hundreds of fashionably gowned society women and colorful California locations will contribute to the richness of "The White Peacock Feather," the forthcoming Universal photodrama, which is being used as a premier starring vehicle by Miss DuPont.

Jack Conway, whose handling of "Lombardi, Ltd." and other equally successful productions, has given him a reputation for artistic elegance, is directing Miss DuPont in the story.

Of particular interest to feminine playgoers will be the extensive wardrobe worn by the star throughout the picture. Miss DuPont is regarded as the best dressed woman on the screen, and each of her dresses is of her own designing.

Miss DuPont's elevation to stardom is one of the most romantic chapters in the history of the motion picture industry. She was summoned as a technical adviser to Mr. Conway when he filmed "Lombardi, Ltd.," and required the help of a fashionable designer of women's clothes. Struck by her beauty he gave her a small bit in the pictures.

So successful was her screen appearance that Rex Ingram then called her to Universal City for a similar role in "The Day She Paid." At that time Erich von Stroheim was just starting "Foolish Wives." Miss DuPont played opposite the star.

Before the picture was finished Universal broke every precedent and signed her to star in her own right, and on the very day that the last close-up was made for "Foolish Wives," Miss DuPont began work on "The White Peacock Feather."

KYNE WESTERN STORY.

Grace Darmond in "The Beautiful Gambler" at Superba.

"The Beautiful Gambler," a stirring drama of the old West, with one of the screen's most radiant stars, Grace Darmond, in the stellar role, will be the attraction at the Superba this week.

The story is from the pen of Peter B. Kyne, whose delightful "Cappy Ricks" stories are so well known.

Its plot is based upon a girl's heroic effort to save her father from disgrace and ruin caused by gambling losses by literally selling herself in marriage to the owner of the gambling den. Her sacrifice comes too late, however, for as the ceremony is performed the father dies by his own hand, leaving his daughter at the mercy of the craven brute.

"The Beautiful Gambler" was filmed with elaborate attention to every detail and has an unexpected punch of emotion in every scene. The spectacular night photography will be of particular interest to playgoers who appreciate the artistic presentation of dramatic themes.

One of the most thrilling night fire scenes ever taken is that which shows the burning of the gambling hall. An actual building of this type in the early days of the West was erected for this scene. While it was being photographed several actors and actresses narrowly escaped serious injury in jumping from the upstairs windows.

Grace Darmond will lend to the role of the heroine all the zest of her grace and beauty. Jack Mower who has lately won his spurs as a dramatic actor, will play opposite the star, and others in the cast include Harry Van Meter, Hershall Mayall, Willis Marks and Charles Brinley. Other attractions on the bill are a "Joe Martin" (the monkey movie star) comedy, pictures of the Elks' various parades and a musical program.

CHAPLIN HONORED BY MEMORIAL TABLET.

Word comes from Fontainebleau, France, that a tablet is to be placed by a local committee of French cinema artists on the house where Charlie Chaplin was born. American artists living at Barbizon, near Fontainebleau, where "The Angelus" was painted, are to join with the French cinema artists in making the tablet application a joint holiday.

There are residents of Fontainebleau who assert that they remember little Charlie when he revisited his birthplace, in 1892. At that time Charlie toddled with his mother through the vast corridors of the palace, where Napoleon lived at the height of his grandeur with Josephine. And as a child, Charlie played in the forest and among the curious eroded rocks of Fontainebleau Park.

PILGRIMAGE PLAY SHOWS TRUE TYPES.

Author, Visiting the Holy Land, Made Minute Study of Its People.

"How can a western American catch the 'look' of a far easterner so perfectly—how can he reflect the mystery and lure of the Orient so well?"

This is a question which has been asked scores of times during the past week, when the second annual production of the Pilgrimage Play was opened at El Camino Real Theater, and yesterday Christine Wetherill Stevenson, author and founder of the play, told how so much real "atmosphere" of the Orient has been achieved by western Americans. Mrs. Stevenson passed nearly a year in the Holy Land following the first year's production of the Pilgrimage Play, in archeological and historical research work and, even more intensely, in a study of the mystic people who live in the far-away East.

"While I was there I not only carefully studied the eastern physiognomy, but I carefully photographed it in many aspects and brought it back for the Pilgrimage Play cast to study," Mrs. Stevenson explained, and produced some of the photographic studies which she made of men and women in Jerusalem, Jericho and other places in the Holy Land. "There is a grip about these faces that impresses anyone," she continued, "and I knew that if I could only bring back some good pictures, my people would imbibe eastern pshychology just through studying them. The cast are wild over the photographs, and everyone has scrutinized them scores of times, until each actor knows them by heart."

Officials of the Pilgrimage Play Association estimate that 5000 people witnessed the great religious drama last week. It is the coming week, however, that will practically determine the fate of the play, they state. If the public is sufficiently interested in the production to make this second week a success, it will be accepted as a public guarantee that the production can be continued for at least a third week.

The lighting effects of the production this year have created a distinct furore, and hundreds of people who saw last year's presentation and this year's declare that this time the beauty and spectacular magic of the lights far surpass those of the first production. The lights are used in fascinating play, not on the groups of actors alone, but also on the hills that form the walls of the theater.

VANCE STORY.

"The Bronze Bell" to Have Its Premiere at Grauman's Tomorrow.

In one of the most brilliant programs ever presented at Grauman's "The Bronze Bell," a Thomas H. Ince production, Blanche Hertz's revue, "The Dress Rehearsal," and numerous other novelties open tomorrow.

Taken from the novel by Louis Joseph Vance, of the same title, "The Bronze Bell" was directed by James W. Horne and adapted to the screen by Del Andrews and Louis Stevens. Its action springs from one of the most fascinating plots ever developed—that of an American's adventures through an uprising in India.

Courtenay Foote, Doris May, John Davidson, Clare DuBrey, Noble Johnson, Otto Hoffman, Gerald Pring, C. Norman Hammond, Howard Crampton and Fred Huntley form the cast.

The settings in this picture have been declared particularly beautiful. George Barnes was the cameraman.

The Blanche Hertz revue is one of the most spectacular acts ever presented at this theater. Twenty miniature artists appear in person in this feature. At the Wurlitzer, in addition to playing the organ score which he devised, Henry Murtagh will render "Wyoming Lullaby." An orchestral interpretative musical score has been arranged by Mischa Guterson, director of the orchestra, to accompany those many attractions.

Lew Cody Gives Double Performance at the New Symphony.

Lew Cody in person, with his latest production, "A Dangerous Pastime," is to be the chief attraction, or rather the double attraction at the New Symphony this week.

Cody has for the past five months been appearing with his picture throughout the Northern States and Canada, and has, according to all reports, been an instant hit with his audiences.

For a number of years Cody was on the stage, and that is perhaps the reason his act is different from the usual type of personal appearances. Cody has sixteen minutes of humor and drama, and the humor is furnished by a recounting of some of his motion-picture experiences and some of the odd things that have happened to him while touring with his picture.

Last night Cody left Oakland in his racing car for a dash to this city in order to appear on time at the New Symphony. "A Dangerous Pastime" is claimed to be one of the best of the Cody productions. As usual, the actor has gathered together an excellent cast, composed of such well-known players as Ellinor Fair, Cleo Ridgley, Ernest Joy, Mrs. Irving Cummings and Arthur Hoyt.

"PROXIES" TRAVELS TO MILLER'S TODAY.

"Proxies," the thrilling mystery play which broke attendance records at the California last week, has been held over for another week, beginning today at Miller's.

That a crook may reform and stay reformed is admirably shown in this production. The entertaining and humorous story that is promised commends itself to every motion-picture fan because of its heart appeal and gripping dramatic qualities.

Peter, a butler, portrayed by Norman Kerry, is an excellent specimen of a man whose great purpose is to live straight after spending a term against odds, and the telling of the story provides the spectator with many a thrill.

Zena Keefe is the heroine of the story, and others in the company include William H. Tooker, Raye Dean, Paul Everton and Jock Crosby.

The picture was personally directed by George D. [illegible].

William S. Hart,
Appearing in "The Whistle" at Grauman's Rialto today.

ters I portray, and they were actually that kind of men. Kind, generous, sentimental, but ready to kill where their code considered killing just. It was the old frontier way. They all understood it. One of the most famous gunmen I knew is now an editorial writer on the New York Morning Telegraph — William B. Masterson. But he is one of the finest, most honorable gentlemen I ever met. And remember Wild Bill Hickok of history—my father knew him and he was chock full of courageous virtues, sentiment and honor—according to his code. It is when they get the liquor in them that they show in their worst light—sober, they are among the best."

By which you will appreciate that Bill is something of a prohibitionist. I forbore to argue that drunkards are apt to expose themselves in their true character, because I wouldn't spoil a Bill Hart story for the world.

I met Bill Hart first over five years ago. He has made great strides since then. He was dissatisfied, impatient, with his $75 a week and his circumscribed opportunities in those days. Prosperity has made him rather splendid, magnanimous, patient, thoughtful. In fact, Bill is rapidly acquiring "polish," which is just what he doesn't want in his western roles. He still uses the very western "ma'm" in speaking to the weaker sex, and he had his collar off, but Bill has to watch himself for fear his manners become too cultured, to guard against any hint of pervading gentility and polish, which would be so fatal in a rough-diamond bad man. One feels the urge to address him respectfully as "Mr. Hart" rather than Bill, don't you know.

And during his period of cautious "rest" it will be William S. Hart who will write that book. Yes, Bill is going to devote his leisure to another book. He already has three to his credit—boys' books for the most part, and pretty good literature at that. He really writes them himself, not just rents his name for the cover. One is all about his precious Pinto Ben—an equine beauty of amazing intelligence and courage. The S.P.C.A. got after Bill for submitting that horse to so many dangerous stunts. But Bill says he and the horse take the risks together and find the same zest in them. One rather agrees with Bill after meeting Pinto Ben.

But never fear that Bill will permanently desert the pictures for literature. He expects to resume film work at the end of next February, by which time he hopes that um-um-um censorship question will have been settled once and for all. If there must be censorship it must be Federal, he insists—these forty-eight diversified ideas on morality that beset the movie producer are simply intolerable, says Bill—and if you touch the censorship button, Bill can go on eloquently, indignantly, profoundly, logically and enthusiastically for hours and hours.

But he weighs 190 pounds, which is just right for his size, and he doesn't want to get fat during that literary vacation. So perhaps the censorship bogey will help to keep him slender.

THE BURBANK OFFERS BRAND-NEW REVUE.

Webster defines the word "revue," among other synonyms, as a "passing show" and emphasizes that what has "once been shown in a revue cannot again be included."

This is decidedly the method of the Hi Jinks Revues organization at the Burbank. Nothing is ever repeated. Every week an entire new production is put on, and even the smallest details in costume are so carefully guarded that the colors on the new gowns and dresses do not recall a like combination of the previous week. The slogan is "everything new every week."

With the presentation of "Southern Gal," the latest in the repertoire of the Hi Jinks company, Al and Loie Bridge assume characterizations of a new type, and the entire company is undergoing a complete metamorphosis in their respective roles.

The Beauty Chorus hold the center of attention with their clever singing and dancing.

The opening number is to be an especially gorgeous one. Principals included in the company are Al and Loie Bridge, featured, Jeso Phillips Olga Brooks, Jean Darby, George Clark and the Kemball Four.

"P. B. AND B." STILL RUNS AT MAJESTIC.

No let up is being shown in the interest theater-goers are taking in that lively farce comedy, "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," and with the matinee today the play will commence the fourth week of its run at the Majestic.

Considerable credit for the success of the play must be given to the members of the Wilkes company, who handle the amusing situations with considerable skill. Mary Newcomb in the leading role sets a fast pace for the company to follow, with the result that there is never an idle moment and laugh follows laugh. Miss Newcomb is [illegible]

HART'S LAST PICTURE.

"The Whistle" Will Be Given at Grauman's Rialto Today.

"The Whistle," William S. Hart's first production to be released since his temporary retirement was announced, opens at Grauman's Rialto today as the cinema attraction of an ideally well-balanced program, which is featured with the appearance of 5-year-old Lillian Ruggiero, "Baby Tetrazzini."

Hart ably portrays the most whole-hearted role of his career in "The Whistle." As an honest toiler, who has lost his son, the sole passion in his life, through a factory accident, he sets forth with a father's desire for retaliation, and the subsequent events form an unusual story.

Hart is surrounded by a talented cast, which includes Myrtle Steadman, Frank Brownlee and three child actors—Georgie Stone, Will Jim Hatton and Richard Headrick.

The picture was directed by Lambert Hillyer, who also scenarized it from a magazine story by May Wilmoth and Olin Lyman.

"Baby Tetrazzini" is acclaimed as one of the most wonderful child singers in the music circles of the world. Her vocal accomplishments are so marked that the most difficult operatic selections are included in her repertoire.

Oliver Wallace, who also renders and devises the organ numbers of the interpretative musical score, will play "Second Hand Rose." In addition to film novelties and these features, Mischa Guterson has arranged accompanying orchestral numbers which will be played by the orchestra.

"A TAILOR-MADE MAN."

Lively Social Comedy Comes to the Morosco Today.

"A Tailor-made Man," by Harry James Smith, opens with today's matinee at the Morosco.

The new attraction is another good comedy of the sort so well liked by local playgoers. Bertha Mann and Gayne Whitman appear in the leading roles.

Among those who will appear in "A Tailor-made Man" are Harry Duffield, Helene Sullivan, Joseph Bell, Joseph Eggenton, Harry Garrity, Dora Mae Howe, Vivienne La Rue, Clifton Hodder, Frances Gaunt, June Page, Charles Buck, Arthur Rutledge, Dorothy Eggenton, Felix Valle, Charles Burgman, Innis Sherer, James Williams, Fred Rike, William Austin, Marjorie Sibbald, Naomi Shank, Walter Spence, Helen Dryer, Constance Sibbald, Barbara Blake and Tom Calloway.

"A Tailor-made Man" is a comedy in four acts. In New York and other eastern centers it has scored heavily. It was selected by Oliver Morosco from among a large number of current hits and will be given its first Los Angeles production at the Morosco Theater.

Stage Director Augustin Glassmire has carefully drilled his players in their parts, and indications are that a fine performance will be given of this big hit.

"JIM THE PENMAN."

Lionel Barrymore in Picture Version of Famous Play.

"Jim the Penman" is showing at the Alhambra.

An astounding drama of a Raffles and a Wallingford combined in one man, flights into the dizzy realm of wildcatting, setting the financial world by the ears—a drama of a man whose remarkable skill with the pen and his cleverness in escaping police and detectives of two continents brought him such wealth and power that millionaires the world over sought and feared him. Such is "Jim, the Penman," which has been done into pictures, with Lionel Barrymore in the leading role.

The name of Barrymore always conjures visions of an impressive histrionic performance. Whether it be John, Ethel or Lionel, each is recognized as one of the foremost among thespians.

In his characterization of the man who is a coward and yet fears not man nor devil, Lionel Barrymore makes the name part of "Jim the Penman" one not easy to forget.

The Alhambra is presenting the picture for its first run in Los Angeles.

The cast includes Doris Rankin, Anders Randolph, Douglas MacPherson, Gladys Leslie, Arthur Rankin, Charles Cochlan, and Ned Burton.

The story of "Jim the Penman" deals with high finance and the results of forgery.

GERMAN FILM JUST ARRIVED.

president of the company exhibiting it, is named Riley.

Several hundred motion-picture houses in New York are to close on account of the obstreperous conduct of the union, which is making impossible demands upon the theaters.

UNION GETS BUSY.

The theater guild, which is producing "John Ferguson," has also a story to tell of the beauties of union domination. This is a high-brow play, which they are putting on through patriotic zeal, for the good of the drama. All the action takes place in one set, so no stage hands are really needed. The guild yielded to the union rule, however, and hired stage hands to sit around and do nothing. The union then discovered that "John Ferguson" had once gone out on the road for a short tour. Therefore they declared it was a road show. Road shows, under the union rule, are obliged to have a traveling crew, in addition to the house crew. Therefore, the theater guild was obliged to hire an entire extra road crew to sit around with the other house crew who had nothing to do. The only blessed thing there was for either of the two crews to do was to raise the curtain. But neither crew would raise the curtain. Each crew disclaimed it being part of the job. In the end the guild had to go out and hire an extra man at $30 a week, to touch the button that raises the curtain.

As the result of a campaign started by Willamene Wilkes of Los Angeles, it is probable that the old-time system of stock companies with a visiting star will be revived throughout the United States this winter. George Arliss and W. A. Brady, and others have enthusiastically supported Miss Wilkes's plan. Another Los Angeles woman has left her impress on the producing world. Mrs. Hancock Banning invented the idea, in Los Angeles, of renting the homes of the rich to motion-picture companies looking for locations and giving the proceeds to charity. Eleven weeks ago this plan was put in operation in New York. Practically all the great mansions of New York have now been made available and a lot of money is being made.

MOTION PAINTING.

Ferdinand Earle Offers Something Claimed to be New.

Oh Sun, look beneath you! Behold something new—the motion painting.

It is expected that the motion painting will bear the same relation to the motion picture that the work of the masters does to commercial art.

The first attempted instance of a motion painting is in screen presentation of the Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam, now drawing to a photographic conclusion after two years of arduous work by the artist, Ferdinand Earle, and his assistants.

The finest existing film productions have consisted of a photographic record of dramatic action played in between a dozen and fifty stage settings and locations. Mr. Earle has from 200 to 300 locales in his story. Each is a painted bit of canvas, but to anyone but the trained cinematographer, who knows what is possible and what is not in the way of light effects, each is realtity on the screen. Therefore, through the unlimited scope of painting, ranging from one eight inches high and ten inches wide, to one ten feet high and twelve feet wide, the distinctive character of any given spot on the earth's circumference as it is seen by the artist's eye becomes the locale of the story.

The characters move in and out of the scene in perfect freedom and perfect perspective without causing any wild surprise on the part of the screen-broke observer, but amazing those who know that the scene is a bit of canvas. The photographic procedure requires hundreds of double exposures, of course. For one scene the film will be exposed fifty separate times.

A few of the scenes actually were photographed in the Orient several months ago. These Producer Earle has in his safe, negative and prints. In one of these 200 Arabian horses appear. But in viewing the "takes" of the production on the screen, even Mr. Earle's coworkers have several times been mistaken as to which are real and which are painted.

Washburns Come Home.

"LESSONS IN LOVE" GIVEN AT GARRICK.

"Lessons in Love" will be given at the Garrick Theater by Constance Talmadge, commencing today.

Now we have not yet found out whether "Connie" taught these lessons before she married or whether John Pialoglous her really and truly husband had something to do with it. But anyway it was during this production that "Connie" held up the finishing of "Lessons in Love" for a whole week while she and John went on a honeymoon. This fact should make the production of keen interest to prospective honeymooners.

In any event, "Connie" has put on the final test. She evidently convinced someone that she knew something about love. It may have been that the story had a psychological effect.

Kenneth Harlan plays the leading man in the production, though not in life; and, wonder of wonders, our old friend Flora Finch, of the old days with John Bunny, is the old maid aunt.

There is a strong surrounding cast.

MUSICAL COMEDY.

"Bubbles" will be Headlinger on Orpheum Bill This Week.

For the week beginning Monday matinee, July 18, the Orpheum has as its headliner a one-act musical comedy, "Bubbles" by name, starring Jack Norton and Queenie Smith.

Ordinarily, the fact that a girl act is coming to the Orpheum does not stir more than a passing comment, but along comes Frank Stammers, famous musical show writer and producer, and gives us a one-act musical comedy with all of the essentials of the more pretentious shows of this type. In fact, "Bubbles" has a plot and beautiful song numbers, which were written by B. C. Hilliam and A. Baldwin Sloane, who wrote the music for "Buddies."

"Bubbles" could easily have been made into a three-act show, but is entertainment boiled down to its most amusing essentials. The list of principals reads like the cast of a New York show. Jack Norton is a very famous light comedian. Queenie Smith comes direct from the Metropolitan Operahouse, where she was premiere danseuse. Frank Farrington and Marjorie Leach form the excellent supporting cast and the eight girls are real New York show-girls, the kind you do not usually find on the west coast with road shows.

Trixie Friganza is going to stay another week as an added treat. Trixie has made people laugh before, but never so heartily; never has she been such a riot as during her present Orpheum tour, and her "Little Bag o' Trix" will open up a few new suprises during the coming week.

Each season finds Wilfred Clarke more in demand by vaudeville-goers than the season before. And each season Mr. Clarke comes through with a new sketch more hilarious than the season before. "Now What!" is his latest offering and, with the support of clever Grace Menken and a very capable cast, he will be a valuable addition to the strong bill of the coming week.

Do you want to get a thrill out of life, a real kick? Then don't miss Ce Do Ra. This young lady takes her life in her hands every performance and proceeds to ride 'round the inside of a latticed globe on a motorcycle. She attains a speed of sixty miles an hour and the result is exciting, to say the least.

Ralph Kitner and Jim Reaney, with their rollicking salt-water dialogue and beautifully blended voices, will present their "Ocean Episode." Young and Wheeler have a musical skit called "Bachelors of Music." Wilfrid Du Bois, "Le Jongleur Distingue," is a juggler of extraordinary talent and fun-making ability.

Mae Melville and George Rule remain another week with their farce, "The League of Servants."

RICH BURGLAR MAID DYING FROM POISON.

CHICAGO, July 15.—Mrs. Etta Perry Hell, "burglar maid," wife of Joseph H. Hell, wealthy broker, is hovering between life and death, with the chances against her recovery. After her husband had settled with the people she had robbed, and sent her to a suburb, she returned and kidnaped her two children.

They were rescued and she was ordered back to the Maywood cottage. While waiting for a train, she swallowed poison, and although police surgeons employed a stomach pump soon afterwards, it is feared enough of the poison remained in her system to cause death.

FRONTIER CLASSIC.

"Bob Hampton of Placer" Now Showing at the Kinema.

Fine though all Marshall Neilan's previous productions released through the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., have been, they are said to be surpassed by the wealth of thrill, humor, human interest and the sweet and tragic love romance in his screen version of Randall Parish's famous work, "Bob Hampton of Placer," which is playing at the Kinema today.

This classic of frontier days is the first since "The Birth of a Nation" to introduce on the screen a portion of American history, giving as its climax Gen. Custer's famous last stand against the Sioux.

The scenes of Sitting Bull and his Indian hordes attacking the brave band were taken in Glacier National Park, Montana, where Neilan pressed into service 2000 Indians and 1500 United States regulars for the impressive battles.

Back of all the strife is a charming love story, and a roguish waif who will cause laughter and perhaps a tear.

A esplendid cast has been chosen to interpret the various characters, James Kirkwood, Marjorie Daw, Wesley Barry, Pat O'Mally, Noah Beery, Dwight Crittenden, Frank Leigh, Tom Gallery, Priscilla Bonner, Charles West, Bert Sprotte, Victor Potel, Buddie Post and hundreds of others.

The Kinema has surrounded the presentation with a mounting worthy of its excellence.

DOUBLE TROUBLE.

Two Triangles in "Moonshine and Honeysuckle" at Clune's.

Mary Miles Minter presents a new angle to the matrimonial triangle in her latest picture, "Moonlight and Honeysuckle," which is to be the featured attraction at Clune's Broadway this week.

According to the best authorities, the triangle usually develops after the wedding, but in this picture it comes before. As a matter of fact, there are two triangles, the points of one being three suitors, and the other being the fickle heroine and two of her suitors, to whom she has secretly engaged herself.

Miss Minter plays the role of a willful and spoiled daughter of a wealthy ranchman. The girl, tiring of ranch life, maneuvers her father into politics and gets him elected to a senatorship. Then they move to Washington, leaving the ranch manager desolate for love of the young lady.

Down at Washington the young woman enjoys a whirlwind popularity and has so many suitors that she doesn't know what to do with them, but she finally hits upon the idea of trial engagements with two of her suitors in order to decide which one of them will "wear" best as a potential husband. You can imagine the pickle the heroine is in when her cowboy sweetheart hits Washington with an engagement ring and with a perfectly good six-shooter just itching for a target.

Monte Blue plays the role of the Wild West suitor. Others in the Lewis, Mabel Van Buren, Willard Lewis, Mabel Van Buren, William Boyd and Grace Goodall.

STOCK UP ON CANNED GOODS; PRICE TO RISE.

CANNERS DECLARE NEW PACK TO COST MUCH HIGHER; COMBINATION FAULT.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CHICAGO, July 15.—Housewives are warned by members of the National Canners' Association, in convention here, to buy up any bargain lots of canned goods they come across, for canned goods are to be higher when the new pack comes in.

The canners say the situation is due to a combination of weather financial depression and reduced acreage. The green pea pack, for example, will run about half of what it was last season, while the new pack of sweet corn will be about one-third of last season's output.

"Tomatoes are even worse off," said State Senator Bennett of Delaware. "The farmers reduced their acreage because of the low 1920 prices, but the real damage was caused by the drought. The tomato pack will run about 20 per cent of normal."

Western canners say the salmon industry is trying to recover from the effects of the World War and a very small pack is expected, but they admit that a large surplus of the 1920 pack is being carried over.

SHIRLEY MASON IN "THE MOTHER HEART."

Shirley Mason, in what is said to be one of sweetest stories of sacred love ever screened, will be seen at the Hippodrome today in "The Mother Heart."

The dancers de luxe, in an artistic conception of melodies, music and novey dance creations, top the vaudeville bill, and Julia Curtis, in original song impressions, will prove a delightful surprise.

Bell and Belgrave offer an amusing one-act comedy, "Three G. M.," and Gordon and Gordon present a series of funny twists and turns. Maxon and Morris offer "The Dancing Dolls," declared to be a unique and mirthful oddity.

"How far that little candle throws his beams'
So shines a good deed in a naughty world."

The United States is conducting four large enterprises for the benefit of its soldiers of the World War and their families. It is carrying on the largest insurance business in the world. It is paying compensation to men who were disabled in any way. It also has assumed the obligation of paying for the medical keep and the rejuvenation of all men disabled care and the rejuvenation of all men disabled by the war. It has further agreed to arrange and pay for the vocational training of disabled men so that upon their final discharge from government supervision they may be self-supporting.—[World's Work for July.

According to Brig.-Gen. J. Leslie Kincaid, Adjutant-General of New York and State chairman of the Near East relief, the people of New York State contributed more cast-off clothing for the Armenians during the six weeks' drive just finished than all the other States combined gave in many months.

A million and a half pounds of old clothing was collected and baled at the army base in Brooklyn for shipment in time to reach Armenia before cold weather comes. The clothing, Gen. Kincaid stated, is mostly of the warm, substantial kind needed. It is of very good quality for the most part.

Some one discarded a Boston paper in a town on the west coast of Florida in which there was an appeal in behalf of the Baby Hygiene Association and a picture of a healthy, smiling infant. A postmistress found it and read the story about what is being done to keep babies well and happy. She wrote and inclosed her check for $67.10, which will mean nursing care for ten children for an entire year.

The baby whose picture was used is Martha K——, who owes her two healthy years to the Baby Hygiene nurse who has supervised her care and feeding since she was six months old. In May the Baby Hygiene nurses supervised other babies besides Martha at a cost of but $6.71 per baby per year, and there were 12,110 staff visits made.

The 1667 members of the Junior Red Cross in nineteen township schools in Massachusetts have sent this spring to destitute children abroad a total of 136 scrapbooks, eleven games, fourteen books, one toy tool chest, one household set, eleven small dolls, six wash cloths, two handkerchiefs in a box, fourteen tops, eight paper dolls, one spool thread, one box of beads, crayons, two balls, two engines, one toy elephant, two knitting sets, one weaving set, one sewing set, two puzzles, one scarf, one broom, two toy violins, one pillow and blanket, one gun, one toy automobile, two toy boats, one pendant. The scrapbooks were made under the careful direction of the teachers and contained postal card views of different parts of the United States and photographs and illustrations cut out of magazines.

A few doors from Massachusetts avenue at 339 Commonwealth avenue is the home of the Speech Readers' Guild, which is to continue through the summer months some of its activities, and it extends a cordial invitation to deafened visitors coming to Boston. It is somewhat unusual to find an ample dwelling house devoted to the interests of the deafened, but this is the purpose of the Guild House, and its comfortable bedrooms and cool dining-room are available to persons who, through suffering from the handicap of impaired hearing, appreciate the protection offered in the way of kindly interest and consideration. The deafened shrink from staying in a large hotel where the difficulties caused by their limitations become so magnified. For these the Guild exists and to these it extends its hospitality.

Ethel Grey,

Who assumes the leading feminine role in "Husbands and Wives," a picture showing at Broadway Pantages.

DOMESTIC COMEDY AT BROADWAY PANTAGES.

"Husbands and Wives" is the scheduled offering of the Albright Follies for the coming week at Broadway Pantages.

While the title suggests a Von Stroheim movie, nothing is farther from the fact. "Husbands and Wives" is a domestic comedy, with nothing startling in its make-up.

The fact that Frank Samuels, the author, is unmarried might cast some doubt upon the realism of the comedy; but after seeing "Husbands and Wives" it will be admitted that what Mr. Samuels lacks in experience he makes up in imagination.

"Husbands and Wives" contains the germs of divorce in highly concentrated solution, and those who anticipate, desire, fear or wish to evade a dissolution of their matrimonial entanglements will find it an interesting and suggestive study. "Tiger's Cub," with Pearl White in the title role, is the feature film for the week. The William Fox production is also a study in matrimonial readjustment, with the uncivilized North and those whom civilization has cast out as its locale and personnel.

MORE DUNKENNESS IN MINNEAPOLIS NOW.

INCREASE OF INEBRIETY ATTRIBUTED TO BAD BOOZE OF BOOTLEGGERS.

MINNEAPOLIS, July 17.—Drunkenness in Minneapolis is twice as prevalent today as it was during the first year of prohibition, according to the records of the municipal court, the clearinghouse for a majority of the offenders.

The records show that during the first dry year, from July 1, 1919, to July 1, 1920, there were 1590 arraignments on drunkenness charges, while for the year beginning July 1, 1920, and ending yesterday, the total arraignments were 3746, increase of 2156.

Although on the increase, the drunkenness is still far behind the figures for the pre-prohibition days. From July 1, 1918, to July 1, 1919, the final wet twelve months, 6089 persons were arraigned in municipal court for drunkenness.

Judging from the records, the most drinking was done in the month of May, or, according to officials, the whisky sold during that month may have had more kick, or the police may have been more alert. Whatever the reason, 446 persons were arraigned during that month for drunkenness. The figures for the other months are as follows: July, 1920, 258; August, 243; September, 335; October, 317; November, 258; December, 234; January, 1921, 275; February, 299; March, 370; April, 277, and June, 334.

The increase in drunkenness during the past fiscal year over the first year of prohibition was declared by J. F. Walker, superintendent of police, to be due to the poorer grade of liquor now on the market. Mr. Walker has had charge of local prohibition enforcement during the past two years.

He pointed out that during the first year many persons had private supplies of good whisky, and that good bonded whisky could be purchased very easily. This whisky, he said, did not have the same effect on the imbiber as the "moonshine" variety, but it soon gave out and the moonshine took its place, with result that more persons became drunk than before, and more arrests were made.

Figures, supplied from the Federal Court by Emerson Hunt, new Federal prohibition agent, show that 2703 cases were prosecuted in the Northwest district from July 1, 1920, to yesterday. Liquor seized had an estimated value of $146,963, and taxes and penalties totaled $4,336,281.

STRANGE CREATURE FOUND IN ARABIA.

THOUGHT TO BE LINK BETWEEN MERMAID AND THE HUMAN.

PORTLAND (Or.) July 17.—Col. John Leader of this city has a photograph of what he believes to be the nearest connecting link between the mermaid family and the human being, the photograph having been taken of the mother of the family after she had been captured and lived forty-eight hours in captivity. The hide was then stuffed and is still in the possession of Cowasjee Dinshaw, a Parsee, who lives on the coast of Arabia, near the island of Perim.

While Col. Leader was a visitor at the steamer point on the Arabian coast, near the Perim Island, a party was organized to capture one of the mermaid family. The mother and two pups were caught with the aid of a strong net. The two little ones lived but twenty-four hours, while the mother died forty-eight hours after she was captured. The party secured the advice of a scientific authority and the information was given that the family was evidently the descendants of a tribe of cave dwellers who lived along the coast some 10,000 years ago and who sought protection from their enemies in these caves, living off fish and sea food. The animals are probably of the dugong species resembling sea lions.

According to Col. Leader the idea that they are descendants of human tribes comes from the fact that they are warm blooded, they have intelligence of human beings and they continually cry in a human voice. They were examined closely and during the time they were in captivity they refused to eat anything and continually cried and moaned with a voice which sounded as if it came from a human being. The upper fins of the creatures are shaped like hands, with the bones of the fingers plainly traceable through them. Fishermen who lived along the coast complained that the strange creatures had solved the method of diving into their nets and taking fish from them.

They were continually killing sharks along the coast there, although they were smaller than the sharks. The picture is that of the mother, which measures eight feet from the tip of her nose to the tip of her tail. They were caught in 1908. In the opinion of Col. Leader there are none like them in the world today, but those familiar with the strange mammal say it is not yet entirely extinct.

Mr and Mrs. Marion Featherstone, who numbered among the recent June wedded couples, were happily surprised at their home Monday evening when a large number of their friends walked in upon them and spent the evening at their home. The "visit" proved a most agreeable surprise. The uninvited guests had provided an evening's entertainment and were soon having a most enjoyable time. A Chinese spelling match was one of the games played and this was in the hands of Rev. I. A. Engle, who was school-teacher. Mrs. R. A. Newton and Mrs. Herbert Wroot on one side and Miss Vera Fagon on the other side were the winners of this contest.

At 6:30 o'clock Tuesday evening the City Park was the scene of a merry surprise party, when Mrs. Harry T. Ashley and Mrs. John R. Hardisty entertained a number of friends of Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Scoville, at a picnic supper, the occasion being the twenty-eighth wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Scoville. A menu, consisting of delicious fruit salad, sandwiches, olives, pickles, coffee, fruit and cake were enjoyed, after which the honorees were presented with a large cake bearing the figures twenty-eight. After the supper the guests were invited to the Scoville home on Howard street where a delightful evening of music and conversation was passed. At the close of the evening, refreshments of ice cream and cake were served, and then came another surprise when a fine birthday cake with lighted candles was presented to Mrs. J. R. Hardisty, the occasion also being her birthday anniversary.

WHITTIER.

Of interest to a wide circle of friends at Whittier was the announcement of the engagement of Miss Esther Kirkwood and Mr. Charles Thornburg, the latter a young business man of Los Angeles. The interesting news was disclosed as a surprise at a cleverly appointed afternoon affair given by Miss Kirkwood's mother, Mrs. H. E. Kirkwood, at their home on East College street, Saturday afternoon. Some twenty-five friends had been invited, presumably to assist in the celebration of Miss Kirkwood's birthday anniversary. In fact, they were invited to an announcement party. The guests brought many beautiful birthday gifts. It was not until the collation was being served that the guests knew of the betrothal. Hidden in the bon-bons was a tiny scroll of paper on which was written the names of the bridal pair and the date set for the wedding, Aug. 9, 1921.

An al fresco affair that proved a delight to the little folks attending, was the birthday party which Mrs. D. F. Langstaff gave in Central Park Friday afternoon, to celebrate the sixth birthday anniversary of her young son Lawrence. After many interesting games on the lawns, in the shade of the park trees, the birthday luncheon was served, the piece par excellence on the long table being a big birthday cake, with six pink candles. Many beautiful gifts were received by Master Lawrence.

Mrs. C. L. Hoskins, who is the well-loved house-mother at the girls' cottage on the Whittier College campus, entertained informally at dinner Monday evening, in compliment to Mrs. Lelia Bind, who is spending the month here from Indiana. Aside from the hostess and her honor guests, others at the table were Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Carey of Whittier and Mr. and Mrs. Van Hove of Long Beach.

Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Daniels entertained at their hospitable home on North Comstock avenue with a Sunday dinner for two eastern friends, delegates to the national convention of the B.P.O.E., in Los Angeles the past week. The honor guests were Mr. T. J. Sutherland of Donora, Pa., and Mr. R. E. Swickey of Pittsburg, Pa.

Burke of Rivera, with whom he makes his home. He has been for some years on the staff of the First National Bank of this city. Both young people are graduates of the local high school. The guests at Mrs. Bourne's luncheon were principally relatives of the betrothed pair, and were Miss Mary Keen and mother, Mrs. W. Scott Keen, Mrs. Walter Keen, Miss Maria Keen, Mrs. J. L. [illegible] July 2.—This story is a [illegible] life as told in the un[illegible] records of the German [illegible] echoes in the dossiers [illegible] of Paris and other [illegible] centers.

[illegible] history of the "Dancing [illegible] which the police of Eu[illegible] searching after [illegible] "safe custody" more [illegible]. He "fox-trotted" into [illegible] Paris and out again. [illegible] "the Zig-Zag" fox-[illegible] is the main clew to the [illegible] of the "count." Once [illegible] that the composer of that [illegible] had dedicated it to [illegible] him to the police. But [illegible] quite enough. He [illegible] the sleuths finished their wine in a Berlin dancing hall.

SAVED BY ILLNESS.

Then they tracked him to Hamburg and there arrested him as he was dancing a fox-trot. But he got away again. This time an illness saved him. He was taken to a hospital. One night he had a miraculous return to health and quietly vanished before the morning.

Picture to yourself a slim, stylishly dressed man, graceful, quick in all his movements with the lithe steps of the accomplished dancer. Young, with alert, sparkling eyes and what is known in the best circles of popular fiction as "a way with him." You will have much trouble to determine his nationality, for he speaks many European languages with equal ease and absence of betraying accent.

Doubtless you will declare him a pleasant fellow, rather wild, rather foolish and unduly free with his money. Amiable faults, these, and smacking of the gilded youth to which he claims to belong, for is he not the Count de Parmas?

FLED TO HAMBURG.

From Berlin he flitted to Hamburg, where he became just as well known as "the dancing count." Back again he came to Berlin. So lavishly did he entertain his acquaintances, so freely flowed the champagne—and he has a pretty taste in vintages—that he soon became almost a legend in the dancing halls. When he was about there was no lack of drink for everybody who cared to enjoy the hospitality. He had not need to ask for partners, for he dances divinely.

The story of the rich, young man, who was spending his money so lavishly in the ballrooms of Berlin reached the ears of the police and they began to take notice. The free expenditure of money at once brings you under their suspicious observation, for who would throw away hard-earned cash?

FRENCH POLICE SEEK HIM.

And it was this police theory that was soon justified, for there came to the German police headquarters certain detectives from Paris who were looking for a young man named Andre Florian Bigran, whose chief title to recognition was that he claimed that the zig-zag fox-trot had been dedicated to him. The German police at once thought of the Count and he was placed "under observation." This meant that a number of detectives had a nice little visit to a dance hall.

While they were discussing crime in came the Count. As he took to the dancing floor the Parisian visitors recognized him. They knew him by his steps.

While the Count fox-trotted he spotted the gentlemen from Paris and quietly trotted toward the door. When the detectives looked up they found their man had given them the slip.

The German police organization was at once put in motion and the Count was tracked to Hamburg. The moment they set eyes on their prey they made one united rush to the middle of the floor and caught him.

But, as I have told, the Count got away again and there is a hue and cry all over Europe now for the missing dancer.

The story of the Count is a strange one. About a year ago the Count arrived in Paris from Smyrna and set up as an agent for an English shipping company. His main line was to get hold of Russians and Poles who wanted to emigrate. From each one he took about 1500 francs for tickets to America. He managed to defraud some 300 in this way and fled with the proceeds.

SWINDLED AMONG GREEKS.

He was next heard of in Athens, where he went on fox-trotting and swindling. This time he did very well, for he got 500,000 francs out a French jeweler and then disappeared. Nothing was heard of him for some time after this, but at last he appeared in Brussels and made a real success as "le beau Bigran." He had a fine motor car, had his own airplane to take him to and from Antwerp, and he was known to all the habitues of the dancing halls of the Belgian capital. He must have had a splendid source of secret information, for when the police were about to move for his arrest in Belgium he disappeared again and was not heard of until he appeared in Berlin.

RATS DESTROY EVIDENCE.

YAKIMA (Wash.) July 17.—I. J. Bounds, attorney, and George F. Steam, hotel man, pleaded guilty to violation of the migratory-bird treaty through killing a swan, and were fined $5 each by Judge Frank Rudkin in Federal Court. They stated that, while pleading guilty, the bird they killed was an Arctic goose.

When the court asked for material evidence they said that the stuffed bird, which caused the case, had been placed in a chest for safe keeping, as they had intended to use it as evidence, but that rats got into the chest and destroyed the exhibit.

Latest Market News.

J. G. G. of the curb district favors us with the following resume of stock market conditions:

Tires are flat, he reports. Cement is hardening. Telescopes are looking up. Airplanes coming down. Jellies are stiffening, but nothing stirring in cereals. Coffee is strong. Hats are off. Rising tendency in yeast. Eggs broke badly. Tinware looks brighter. Shoes are pegged. Shipping is buoyant. Coal presents a black aspect. Toy balloons indicate inflation. Soft spots in fruit. Whisky is still. Pocketbooks show no change.—[Boston Transcript.

TELLS HORRORS OF RED PRISONS.

American Communistt Escapes from Bolsheviki.

Captives Subjected Daily to "Third Degree."

Many Prefer Death to Torture of Lenine Satellites.

[A. P. FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

REVAL (Ethonia) June 10.—The worst phase of imprisonment in Moscow is not the possibility or probability of execution, but the daily attempts made to wring confessions from the prisoners, says Dr. Morris Zucker, a Brooklyn Communist, who arrived here this month after having served four months in the Russian jails.

Some of his experiences and observations have previously been made public. Zucker, sentenced in New York in 1919 to sixty years' imprisonment for sedition, was deported instead.

DAILY THIRD DEGREE.

Speaking of the life of the prisoners in the principal political prison at Moscow, which is called the "O.O.V.," he said: "The daily third degree to which prisoners are subjected if they are suspected of a serious political crime is worse than execution. These prisoners are taken every day, if their captors think there is a chance of wringing a confession from them, into the questioning-room. There, whether they have anything to confess or not, they are commanded to 'reveal the truth.'

"The commissar puts a revolver to the prisoner's head. 'Confess or I'll shoot,' he says. The prisoner waits for the shot. He never knows whether it is coming or not.

"This process is often repeated until the prisoner will confess rather than undergo any further ordeals, in which case he is shot anyway."

The mental condition of these prisoners becomes such that they would prefer death, said Dr. Zucker. The Brooklyn Communist says that he met in the various prisons of Moscow twenty of the radicals deported from America, and that he could well understand why the Bolsheviki arrested them, for they were chiefly anarchists who did not believe in any government, "particularly in a government so dictatorial as that maintained by the Bolsheviki."

Zucker said he found in prison also the president of the Turkestan soviet republic, Mohammed Hadjiz, Gen. Alex Gertor, once commander of the Russian southwestern front; eight members of the executive committee of the right wing of the Social Revolution party, three members of the left wing of that party, including Mayorieff, who was Commissar of Agriculture in 1918, and also a former minister of eccelsistical affairs, M. Sahaun.

Zucker described the summoning of prisoners for execution in much the same way as did Schwartz, the San Francisco Communist, who came out of Russia some months ago. He added that executions were going on as late as March 27, and declared there had been no diminution of the "red terror" in Russia.

BRANDED HERSELF AS PLEDGE OF FIDELITY.

CURIOUS STORY TOLD IN A NEW YORK POLICE COURT BY YOUNG WIFE.

NEW YORK, July 17.—In the familiar triangle of human affections there developed an entirely new situation when Vera, wife of Benjamin Hojnowski, who is employed in a piano manufactory and lives with his wife and two children at 534 West Fiftieth street, appeared in the West Side Court with a cross branded on her chest and another on her left arm. The young wife, who is a good-looking blonde, said she voluntarily placed the red hot piece of metal against her flesh as a pledge to her husband that she would be true to him in the future.

Magistrate Francis Mancuso, who was presiding when the Polish couple were brought in, declared it was one of the most extraordinary cases he ever had heard, and he was glad to let Hojnowski off on suspended sentence after the two threw themselves in each others arms and kissed fervently.

Mrs. Hojnowski said that she was sorry she had caused her husband to spend a night in jail because he had said unpleasant words to her and had threatened to get a divorce. She couldn't stand the thought of his leaving her. The trouble arose over the attention paid to Mrs. Hojnowski by a man who is foreman of the building where she is employed as a cleaner. Hojnowski, who became jealous of his wife, made her go out and work, Mrs. Hojnowski stated, and then when he found another man walking with her he swore at her.

"I told my husband I love him more than any other man," the wife said, after they had both returned home. "Then he demanded that I give him some proof. That was Sunday. I ran into the kitchen, seized a can opener, heated it over the gas stove and burned my chest. It hurt terribly, so I placed the hot metal on my arm. My husband didn't ask me to do it.

"Everything would have been all right after that," added Mrs. Hojnowski, "if it hadn't been for this foreman, who was in front of our house Monday when I went out. I stopped to tell him that he must not see me any more or come near our house. My husband saw us talking together and he became angry again and said that I had not kept my pledge. My husband called me names again and I had him arrested."

BRONX PHYSICIANS TO HONOR COLLEAGUE.

NEW YORK, July 17.—Physicians of the Bronx are creating from their personal subscriptions a fund of $5000 which will be used in the erection of a monument to their colleague, Dr. Hillel Solotaroff, who died at his home in the Bronx, about a month ago.

Dr. Solotaroff practiced in New York for many years, giving much of his time and skill to the poor of the East Side. He distinguished himself as a lecturer for the Board of Education. During the war he directed the work of the medical council of the Jewish Red Cross. On his death bed he completed a play which rebukes life sacrifices by revolutions.

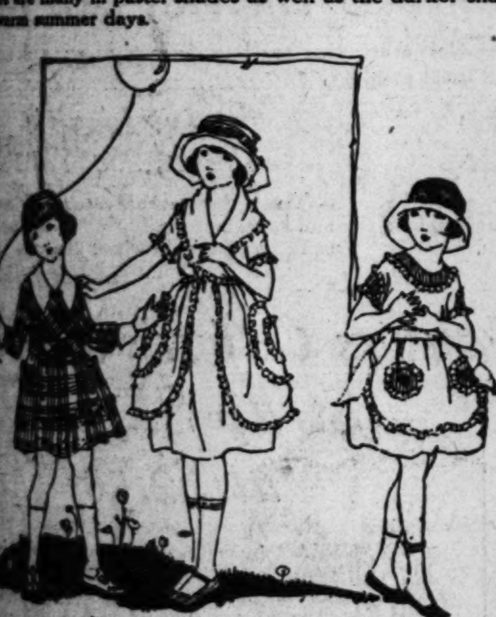
—These dainty, crisp dresses of imported organdie were originally marked considerably more than the price we have put on them for Monday.

—There are many in pastel shades as well as the darker shades that are being used for various occasions these warm summer days.



Many of the Organdies Are Prettily Embroidered

—and there are many, many becoming styles in the group in a variety of the season's smartest colors. In sizes for girls of 10 to 17 years, marked at only $12.95.

—The Broadway—Second Floor.

Girls' Gingham Frocks, $1.75 to $4.95

—There are many good styles in this group of inexpensive dresses so suitable for play hours during the summer vacation. They are practical little garments and at the same time very pretty, including many checks and plaids in a variety of good colors.

The Dresses at $1.75

—are in plain colors with checked gingham trimming the collars and pockets. You will be surprised to find how good looking they are at this unusually low price.

Good Looking Bathing Suits for Children

—Even if your young people are too little to go in where the water is deep, they will enjoy wading about in shallow places, and they might better play in bathing suits than to get their clothes all bedraggled when unexpected breakers come creeping up on them.

We Have Pretty Suits in Sizes 26 to 36, from $3.45 to $5.95

—And they are in great demand these hot summer days. You may choose from suits in plain colors such as blue, red, green and taupe, or others with contrasting stripes in gay shades.

—The Broadway—Second Floor.

If You Are the Type of Girl Who Looks Well in a Tam

—you will just love the new ones we are showing in a soft, suede-like material.

Priced at $1.50

—They are to be found here in an exquisite shade of peach, also tan, gray, brown and red and are wonderfully good looking and becoming. They are intended for girls of 10 to 14 years, but we know of some older girls who have been delighted to find just such tams at the low price of $1.50.

—The Broadway—Second Floor.

It's unusual, indeed, to find such

A Remarkable Collection of Low Shoes at $6.45

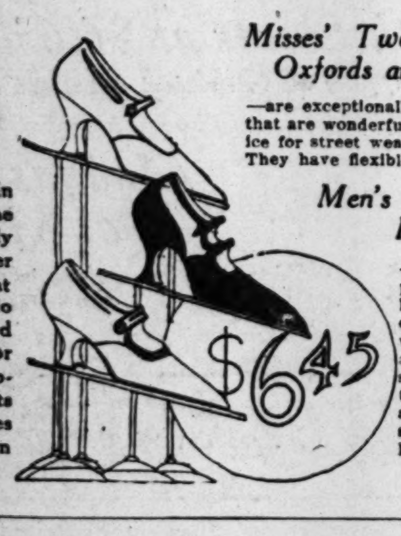
—especially at this time of year when footwear of this light, summery character is so much in demand.

Brown Ooze, Gray Ooze, White Kid, Gray Satin

—Pumps, oxfords and strap slippers as well as attractive footwear in black kid, black satin, brown kid and brown satin, also beaded slippers for evening wear are in the assortment of shoes at this exceptional underpricing. They are fashioned on the slender, graceful lines characteristic of higher priced shoes, and many are "Queen Quality" and other well known makes.

All New Perfect Merchandise

—and there are all sizes in practically every number. The reason for the exceptionally low pricing is that our buyer was in the East at the time that factories with which we do business were receiving a flood of cancellations, due to labor conditions, and he had the opportunity to purchase large lots of these fine shoes at prices way less than those usually in effect.



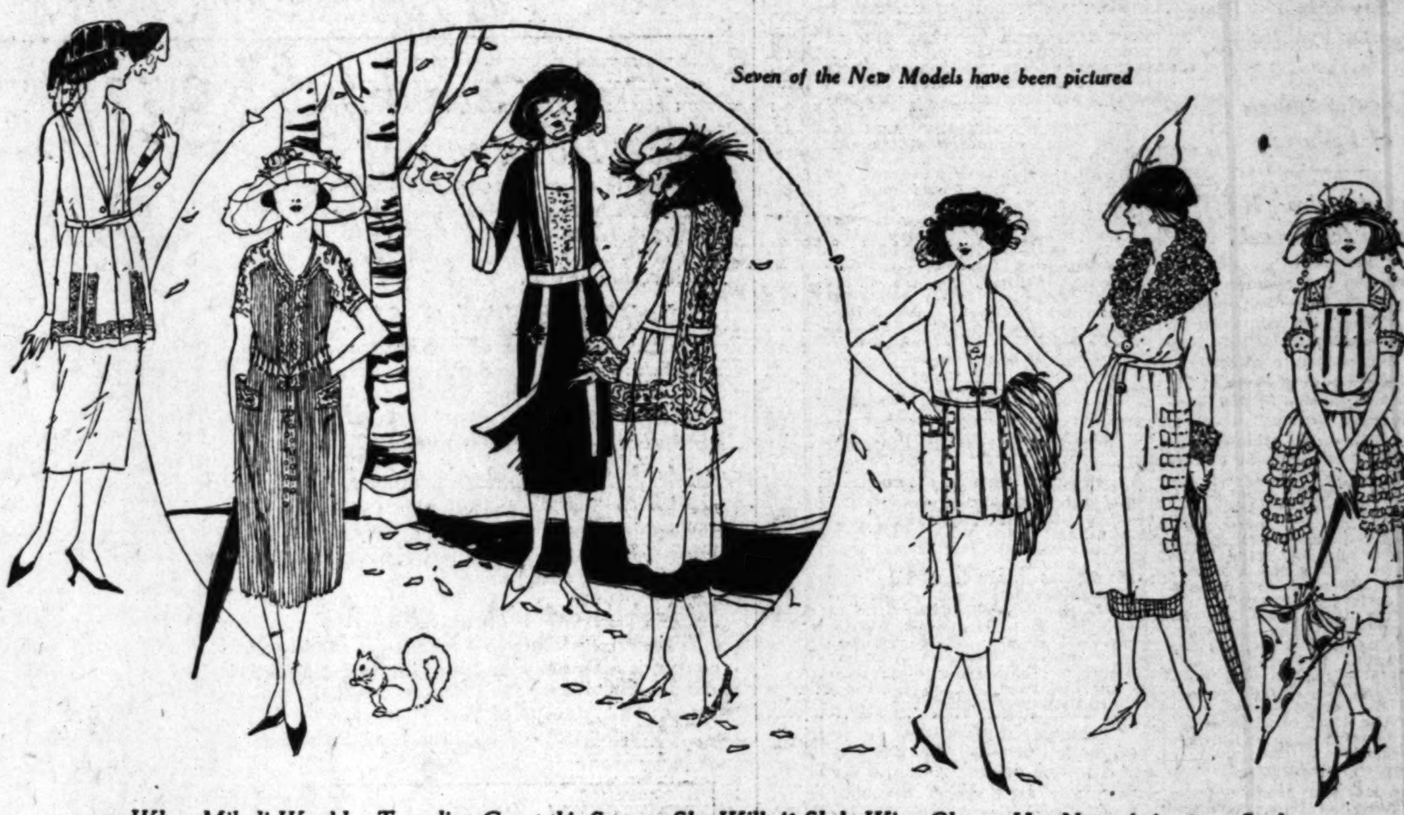
Misses' Two-Button Tan Russian Calf Oxfords and Strap Slippers at $3.45

—are exceptionally valueful. They are the kind of shoes that are wonderfully attractive and yet give excellent service for street wear as well as sports and outing occasions. They have flexible soles and are in sizes 11½ to 2.

Men's Shoes Are Also Being Featured at $5.95

—as a companion offering to the underpricings on women's shoes. There are high and low shoes in the assortment including many good looking styles. You will find here the new oxfords in brogue, and vamped strap styles in popular Russian calf. There are also more conservative models in the correct shades of tan as well as high shoes of black kid or Russian calf. All are priced at the unusually low marking of $5.95.

—The Broadway—Aisle Eight.



Seven of the New Models have been pictured

When Miladi Would a-Traveling Go at this Season, She Will, if She's Wise, Choose Her New Attire from Such

Delightfully Smart Fall Models As Are To Be Had at The Broadway

—There's double-barreled satisfaction in so doing; first of all, when conscious of being provided with before-the-minute clothes one fares forth on the long-looked forward-to holiday jaunt with more than ordinary delight; then, too, new togs chosen from advance fall displays will continue to be valued possessions throughout the coming season, as well as in that which we're now enjoying.

On Monday we will feature an unusually attractive Array of New Fall Dresses, Suits, Coats and Skirts

—each group containing models which are not only the acme of smartness, but which are, too, noteworthy for the moderation of their marking.

—Let us tell you, for instance, about

Fall Dresses at $39.75

—They are made up in various charming ways that are in tune with the vogue for long straight lines. Ruffles and tucks are used effectively; braid, beads and touches of lace provide decorative trimming. The materials are Georgette crepe, Canton crepe and satin charmeuse in navy, brown and other smart shades, as well as black. Sizes 16 to 44 are included in this group of smart fall frocks at $39.75.

Fall Suits at $49.75

—As you will expect, the coats of these suits have taken decided length unto themselves. They are several inches longer than were spring models. You'll like the fine quality of the tricotine, twill cords, serge, Duvet de Luxe and piquetine of which they are made; you'll admire the embroidery and braiding that trim them; you'll be charmed with the lovely fur collars that appear on some of the models. Sizes 16 to 44.

Fall Coats at $39.75

—Exceptionally good-looking are the coats in this group — you'll wonder at their $39.75 pricing when you see them; and well you may! velours, kersey and velours de laine are the materials used in their fashioning; beaverette and kremmer cloths provide cosy collars for some of the models, embroidery in silk is much in evidence. The colors include navy, reindeer and brown; the sizes 16 to 44.

Fall Skirts at $18.75

—Ever so attractive are they, in every particular. The materials that have been so skilfully used in their making are prunella cloths in smart checks and stripes; various adaptations of pleating are noticeable; the color combinations include navy and tan, brown and tan and many others. As for sizes, they run the gamut from 25 to 32 waist measure. They're wonderfully good-looking skirts, one and all, at $18.75.

—The Broadway—Third Floor.

ATTACKS JAP MILITARISTS.

Count Soyeshima Blames Them for Conditions.

Diplomacy Continuous Series of Failures.

Declares America Half to Blame for Breach.

[A. P. FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

TOKIO, June 14.—The alleged meddling of Japanese militarists in diplomacy is vigorously attacked by Count M. Soyeshima, a prominent member of the House of Peers in the course of a contribution to the Japanese "Diplomatic Review," which is attracting considerable attention.

He affirmed that the cause of foreign misconceptions of Japan lies chiefly in the so-called dual diplomacy which was the worst deterrent to Anglo-Japanese, Japanese-American and Chino-Japanese friendship. In the Count's opinion, "Japan's diplomacy has, even since the outbreak of the late great war, been a continuous series of failures."

He laments that there are no longer, or at least not now in view, men like the late Prince Katsura and the late Marquis Komura. It was these two great statesmen who, nearly twenty years ago, committed the country to the Anglo-Japanese alliance, over the heads of some of the older statesmen and others who were opposed to the idea at the time.

UNITED COUNTRY.

When the late war broke out the two statesmen had been gone for some time and what followed was most disconcerting, in the view of Count Soyeshima. Had they been alive and in power, they would have seen to it that the country was solidly united against Germany before they declared war on her.

As it was, the government could not prevent newspapers and magazines, scholars and military reservists, from talking and writing as if Japan were the friend of Germany and an enemy of the Allies. Unfortunately, those in power successively since those days have gone on blundering, knowing no better than to fish for cheap popularity.

The notorious twenty-one demands presented to China in January, 1915, had to be reduced to mere commonplace before they were finally accepted by her and that by force of an ultimatum.

AMERICA HALF TO BLAME.

Count Soyeshima thought the militarists' meddling in diplomacy and the German and Chinese propaganda were chiefly responsible for what he called "the present set-back in Japanese-American friendship," though he believed that "America has to bear more than half the blame." He explained his last remark in this manner:

"The Anglo Saxons are a lovable race of people, but speaking candidly, they are a people of excessive pride, this being especially the case with Americans who may be said to have a weakness of being self-centered and self-willed. The forcing of Japan to open her doors, the annexation of Hawaii, the war with Spain, the anti-Japanese campaign in California, the lynching of negroes, the audacious movement in support of Irish independence—all come from self-centralization. This trait of the Americans accounts, in no small measure for the present cooling of friendship between Japan and America."

CALLS US UNSOPHISTICATED.

"To do them justice, however, Americans are unsophisticated, sincere and strong-willed and when they are persuaded to trust Japan and England it will not be so very difficult a task for the three powers to work in concert and maintain the peace of the world. To come to a real good understanding with America, however, Japan must have a right grasp of America's China policy."

The United States, the Count believed, was conquering China by education. Twenty years, hence, he said, all the important government posts in China will be occupied by Chinese of American education. Japan should prepare, herself for the peaceful conquest of China by America, and to that end Japan's militarist policy must be discarded and her entire attitude towards China recast. He added: "Our policy toward China has been one of outrageous recklessness. The Imperial Foreign Minister, who caused the twenty-one demands to be presented to China, is said to have told a foreigner at the time, that those were not the demands of the ministry, but of the military cabal. A government that must bow to the militarists can never be trusted by the nation."

CANKER WORM OF JAPAN.

To him the militarists were the "canker worm" of Japan. He continued:

"Ninety-nine per cent of the Japanese people are opposed to aggressivism. They want no more war. The money Japan spends on her Navy is the premium she pays for national insurance. But we can do with a great deal smaller Army than we have at present. Military Germany has gone to pieces and military Russia has collapsed. Japan must not walk in their footsteps."

Making it Homelike.

On Dolly's birthday she was presented with a baby bulldog, and her delight was delicious to behold.

It was very young, and she insisted upon taking it to bed with her, but the next morning she was looking very tired.

"Haven't you slept well, darling?" asked her mother.

"No, mummy," said Dolly. "Nelson was crying in the night for his Munsey, so kept awake with him for company, and I made awful faces all night to make him fink I was his bulldog muvver to comfy him!"—[London Answers.

What About It?

It was Monday morning and the electric washer was going when the family sat down at the breakfast table. Father looked up, annoyed by the washer's steady click-clack. "We'll omit grace this morning," he said testily to mother. "There's no use saying it when that washer is going and no one can hear what is said."

Little Helen stared at him. "Why father, I didn't think you were talking to us," she said. "That washer doesn't bother God, I'm sure."—[Indianapolis News.

Diplomatic.

He was one of the few remaining old-time darkies. He had finished the odd jobs for which he had been employed, and, hat in hand, appeared at the back door.

"How much is it, Uncle?" he was asked.

"You' say how much? Jest whatever yo' all say, missis."

"Oh, but I'd rather you would say how much," the lady of the house replied.

"Yas, m'am! But, m'am, Oh'd rather ha bde 75 cents yo' all would gimme dan de 50 cents Oh'd charge yo' all."—[Life.

recent weeks the trans-
of coal from the Donetz

Valley has grown steadily less. The production was between 300,000 and 400,000 tons monthly, but only about 150,000 tons were loaded for rail haulage, due to the practice of expropriation by subordinate soviet corporations or councils.

Simultaneously with the reduction in the coal supply, there was an almost complete cessation of delivery of wood. In addition to this, the snowless winter and the slaughter of horses in 1920 added to the difficulties of local transport.

Lack of fuel resulted in the shutting down of rail traffic. According to soviet newspapers no trains are running on thirty lines and on the others only rudimentary schedules are being maintained.

Little hope for improvement is held out unless supplies of naphtha stored at Baku can be brought into the center of the country.

NEW REAL ESTATE RULES IN OREGON.

LICENSE LAW TO BE STRICTLY ENFORCED BY THE OFFICIALS.

SALEM (Or.) July 17.—Thorough cleansing of the real estate business in Oregon, with a view of placing the profession on a plane not excelled by any State in the Union, will be undertaken by G. V. Johnson, in charge of the State Real Estate Department, under authority vested in the commissioner by a law enacted at the last session of the Legislature.

It is provided that prospective dealer shall make application to the State Real Estate Commissioner for license, giving his full name, address and other information required. The annual fee for the license is $5, payable in advance.

Further provision is made that any licensed real estate broker shall first deliver to the commissioner a bond in the sum of $1000, as a guarantee that the dealer will conduct his affairs without fraud. To make the dealer's obligation to the State even more binding the new law makes it incumbent upon the proposed dealer to submit a recommendation signed by at least ten freeholders of the county in which the applicant intends to carry on his business. The persons signing this recommendation must attest to the honesty, truthfulness and good moral character of the applicant.

If the applicant is a non-resident, he shall file with the commissioner an irrevocable consent that suits and actions may be commenced against him in any county of this State in which the plaintiff having a cause of action or suit may reside.

In cases of fraud, the person damaged, under the new act, in addition to other legal remedies, has a right to action in his own name on the bond filed by the dealer with the commissioner.

Strange, Almost, as Fiction.

Last Sunday night during an electrical storm a bolt of lightning struck a large sycamore tree in our pasture. There was at the time a raven in the branches of the tree and a coyote on the ground underneath. The bolt killed them both and wiped the tree from the face of the earth. Monday when we skinned the coyote we found on the inside or flesh part a perfect photograph of the bird.—[South Randall correspondent in Oakley Graphic.

CHILEANS SCORE AMERICAN GOODS

Newspaper Declares Them Costly and Inferior.

Yankees Refuse Credit and Packing is Poor.

Methods Employed by the Exporter Disliked.

[A. P. FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

SANTIAGO, June 15. — The South American countries will be commercial clients of the United States so long as they are not able to avail themselves of more advantageous markets, says the newspaper Ultimas Noticias, in an editorial in which it asserts American goods "ordinarily are of inferior quality."

The paper says the war permitted the United States to enter into commercial relations with the South Americans who "by force of necessity were obliged to accept America's strange systems, diametrically opposed to those that had been used by the great producing nations of the old world. It is well known," the paper declares, "that the methods employed by the North American exporter differ notably from those followed by the exporters of Great Britain and above all by Germany.

GOODS ARE INFERIOR.

"The American goods, apart from being ordinarily of inferior quality, are costly," the paper adds, "and in addition the goods are badly packed. This results in heavy losses. Moreover, the Americans do not concede credit and if they do concede credit it is on terms little acceptable."

Replying to the newspaper's charges of inferiority in American merchandise, a writer in the newspaper El Mercurio, signing himself "Chilean Merchant," says: "If American goods are consumed by 150,000,000 Americans and Canadians, in fact by nearly half the population of the Americas, are you not able to be assured that American merchandise should be good enough for we South Americans?"

Answering the newspaper's assertion that American export methods are entirely different from those employed by the Europeans, the "Chilean merchant" says there are two reasons for this: First, because the Europeans have demonstrated that their system of selling has not proven beneficial since "it only has facilitated fictitious businesses without foundations, resulting largely in heavy losses through bad arrangements or bankruptcies," and secondly, because the Europeans are not able today to extend long-term credits through lack of means.

CREDIT VANISHED.

The "Chilean merchant" thinks the period of long-term credits has passed, never to return, and continues.

"What occurred here in Chile before the World War? A foreigner would arrive and set up a business with, say, 20,000 pesos. He then received visits from the salesmen of European firm, who would deliver him merchandise. At the end of two years, he would have a credit with these houses for more than 200,000 pesos. At the end of another year he had declared bankruptcy, accidental or fraudulent, thus occasioning heavy losses to the European creditors."

The merchant adds that Americans always have extended credit to serious firms that respect their obligations and do business on a solid basis.

Off on the Wrong Foot.

The wicked garage keeper was trying to figure out his income tax.

"If a man brings his car to me to be repaired, and it costs me 60 cents, and I charge him $16, what per cent profit would I be making?" he demanded of his son and heir.

"I'm sure I don't know, pop," answered that young hopeful. "You'll have to get somebody who knows the rules of grand larceny to tell you that. The rules for percentage wouldn't cover it!"—[Life.

It's the Way of the World.

One of the young ladies in the accounting department has complained that her name never appears in the personal mention items in the Family Bulletin. She says when anyone is away from work for any reason, or leaves service to get married, or is in an automobile accident, they get a big write-up, but when they report for work on time each morning, never lose a day, put in eight hours of hard work daily, they are entirely ignored.—[Union Pacific Family Bulletin.

"Now, my dear, you positively must forget business if you are going into society with me."

"What have I done?" inquired the preoccupied physician.

"Why, you feel the pulse of everybody who extends a hand."—[Boston Transcript.

DUCHESS LEADER OF TAX REVOLT.

Refuses to Pay "Rates" on British Property.

Hurls Demand in Face of the Collector.

Noble Husband Hard Hit by Levy on Lands.

[SPECIAL FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

LONDON, June 15.—If revolution comes in England its Red angel may be not a daughter of the people, but one of this country's most famous duchesses.

Don't laugh! The revolutionary outbreak most likely to occur in this country would not be one of the masses, bent on overturning the monarchy and proclaiming a soviet republic, but a revolt of the so-called upper classes, who are growing more and more restive under the crushing taxation which, as Gordon Selfridge, the great American-British merchant prince, is reported here to have told a gathering of business men in Baltimore recently, threatens to impoverish them to such an extent as to compel them—hideous thought!—to work for their living.

The Duchess of Rutland probably will lead this revolution; in fact, she has started leading it already. Her Grace is the owner, among other things, of two houses at Aldwick, near Bognor. On these two abodes of hers "rates" amounting to 41 pounds, 1 shilling and 4 pence, or about $200, were recently levied, an dthose rates the Duchess refused to pay.

She didn't merely refuse, either, when the rate collector called on her recently. When he handed the demand notes to the Dutchess, she got boiling mad, crumpled the notes into a ball and threw them at him, so the flabbergasted official told the horrified magistrate later at the Chichester County Police Court.

As a result of this episode, the Duchess was included in a list of defaulters summoned at Chichester the other day in respect of unpaid rates. The bench ordered her to pay within fourteen days, and it will be highly interesting to see whether she decides to do so or defies the authorities to do their worst. In the latter case she will render herself liable to a "levy of distress," which means, in simpler language, that sufficient of the contents of her two houses will be seized and sold to realize the amount of the uncollected rates in addition to "costs."

As you will have heard already, the Duchess's even more renowned daughter, known to world-wide fame as Lady Diana Manners, but now officially Lady Diana Duff-Cooper, has entered into an agreement with an American film producer to act for the movies.

HUSBAND HARD HIT.

In the stand which she has taken against high rates the Duchess is pretty certain to have the support of her noble husband, the Duke, who probably has suffered as severely from heavy taxation as any member of the aristocracy. The death duties, which the Duke was called upon to pay when he succeeded to the 62,000 acres of which the family estate consists, amounted to $167,500. Having to produce such a sum as that left His Grace so crippled financially that he was compelled to close historic Belvoir Castle for a year, to "let" his shooting box and moors in Derbyshire, and to effect other economies that must have been exceedingly distasteful to a great nobleman. Ever since then it has been generally understood that the Rutlands, like almost every distinguished family in England, have been rebels against this mad taxation, and it occasioned no great surprise when it was announced recently that the famous tapestries of Belvoir Castle are for sale.

It was the Duchess of Rutland who founded the famous Society of Souls, of which Mrs. Asquith and Arthur J. Balfour were members, and ever since she made her social debut she has been renowned alike for her beauty, wit and charm, not to mention her really great artistic talent.

Had not fate made her a duchess she undoubtedly would have won a place among the small group of the world's great women artists. As a girl she knew two of the greatest artists of the day, Watts and Burne-Jones, both of whom were deeply impressed by the brilliance and strength of her work.

The hundreds of celebrities who have sat for the Duchess include Cecil Rhodes, Rudyard Kipling, Paderewski and the late George Meredith. She sells her portraits and gets high prices for them, two that were recently on show at the exhibition of the Society of Women Artists at the Royal Institute Galleries in Piccadilly having been marked $500 each. One of them was on original drawing of Paderewski.

Perhaps the most famous of her portraits was one of Queen Victoria who, no mean amateur artist herself, made quite a charming sketch of the Duchess as a child. Another of her best-known works is a sketch of the present Prince of Wales, executed when he was only 2 months old.

HOW RED TAPE WORKS IN NATIONAL CAPITAL.

WASHINGTON, July 17.—Here is the latest specimen of government red tape. They say it is the longest piece in a noted collection.

A group of college students climbed to the top of the Washington Monument. The elevator was out of commission. A senior, arriving at the top, exhausted, fell against one of the windows, 555 feet up, and his hat rocketed down the elevator shaft.

The hatless college lad sought the aid of a guard, who sent him back down the thousands of steps to the monument office, where he obtained an order for the opening of the lower elevator door. Armed with his pass the youth rushed back. Then he was curtly told that he must have the counter-signature of another attendant. And this attendant, at the moment, was at the top of the shaft. Breathless, the boy, to establish his identity, had to climb the thousands of steps again all the way to the top, and after getting the signature, turned around and descended the thousands more.

The lad got his hat. He also got inside information on government red tape. Officials, learning of the incident, felt that Gen. Hell and Maria Dawes, in the course of government house cleaning, may hurl his spectacular form against some of these specimens of needless rules, which clutter up all agencies in Washington.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIRS.
WARTS AND MOLES.

Pulling a few stiff hairs from the face may start a serious growth. Let me demonstrate free of charge how pulling, cutting, using wax depilatories and the so-called hair removers promote growth of hair on the face. My electric machine is the only known method of killing superfluous hair, fuzz, warts and moles without destroying the surrounding tissue. This machine destroys 360 hairs an hour. I have had 24 years' experience and devote all my time to the work. A binding guarantee that any hairs or moles I treat will never return. Many L. A. satisfied customers, will testify to my skill as an expert. Work done at your home by appointment.

PERSONAL—"A WEAK SPINE."
A deformed, rigid and weak spine is the cause of many internal afflictions, it is manifested by wry neck, unevenly drooped shoulder, protruding scapula (shoulder blade,) stooping and sway back, one high hip seemingly due to a short leg. Even difficulties of the lower limbs, joints and feet are due to such weakness, a drawing pain especially in the lower back is always symptomatic. To strengthen and straighten the spine by repeated, specified curative and corrective movements of an active and passive character is the only reliable way to overcome such conditions. LIVE WIRE SALESMEN
To sell direct to dairy a churn which makes butter from sweet or sour cream in from 30 seconds to 3 minutes. Think of it! It's a "knockout." Made of metal—no wood, no oil, no noise, no friction, no wear, no sour smell and is adjustable to any amount of cream up to one gallon. Pays for itself in the saving of time, labor and butterfat. Nothing like it on the market. Talks for itself and sells like wildfire. Mr. Best took orders for nearly 500 churns at the Utah State Fair last fall. You can do as well.
Territory now being allotted for counties in California, Oregon and Washington. No bonus charged, but the agent pays a deposit on each churn covered by contract. This deposit is returned to agent as churns are sold. Best agent game on the market today.
Here is your chance to "clean up." A live wire can average $25 a day. If you have the money to handle one or more counties, come up and see it work. This is too good to last, so get busy.

That all parts and units are absolutely standard.

Six years ago Maibohm saw the handwriting on the wall. The inevitable coming of the lightweight, fast, comfortable car became the ideal of Maibohm design.

Now with the buying public awakened to the value of less pounds, less fuel use, less vibration, more power, speed and get-away, Maibohm has a proved car, ready for the demand—proved through six years' intensive design, testing and use under every imaginable condition.

WAR WITH JAPS IS DISPARAGED.

Nipponese Wendell Phillips Ridicules Idea.

Declares Statesmanship to Settle Differences.

Questions Will be Solved in Passage of Time.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

TOKIO, July 15.—Ex-Speaker Saburo Shimada of the House of Representatives who, because of his oratorical powers, if often called by Japanese the Wendell Phillips of Japan, is contributing a series of articles to the Nichinichi Shimbun on relations with the United States in which he deplores and decries talk of war. The distinguished parlimentarian holds that if the situation between the two countries is studied from a broad statesmanlike attitude, such talk will become meaningless.

OUR WAR QUESTION.

He says: "Possibly there are no Japanese who seriously think that Japan is able to attack America across the Pacific, as there will be no Americans who dream of an American invasion of Japan. Some think that the immigration question will probably furnish a casus belli between Japan and the United States, while others are of the opinion that the scramble for rights and interests will lead the two countries to war. These questions are not of such a nature as to be solved by an appeal to arms. American misunderstandings about Japan may be dispelled by the efforts of diplomats who can explain the general tendencies of the world, and Japan's position, plainly and fearlessly. Immigration is no more a question with America than with Great Britain, which is Japan's ally. Such a problem can be solved with the progress of civilization and mutual understanding. It is not the whole American nation that objects to Asiatic immigration on racial grounds. America is a free country, where any sort of opinion can be expressed with perfect freedom. It is not surprising, therefore, that from the Japanese standpoint some of the arguments in America about Japan may seem too bold and reckless. It is a mistake to think, however, that these views represent public opinion in America.

"The questions pending between Japan and the United States at present are likely to be solved with the passage of time. It is true that there are some Americans who are not satisfied with Japan's doings in China and Korea, while there are other Americans who perfectly understand Japan's position.

"Japan is not without faults. During the progress of the war Japan concluded with China what is known as a military agreement, by which it was undertaken that Japanese officers should be engaged as instructors in the Chinese army, and the common use of arms by the Japanese and Chinese was stipulated in the agreement. This not unnaturally gave rise to the suspicion among the occidentals that Japan is attempting the Japanization of China in the same way as Germany contrived the Germanization of Turkey. The twenty-one demands presented by Japan to China are also potent cause of misunderstanding of Japan among Europeans and Americans. In the Siberian intervention, America proposed that similar numbers of troops should be dispatched to Siberia, but whereas America sent only 7000 men, Japan dispatched as many as 70,000. This aroused the suspicions of America as to the real intentions of Japan. Japan's failure in Siberia is clear from what has followed since then.

SOVIET ALLOWS CAPTIVE TO WED

Hungarian Lieutenant is Now Married to Princess.

Marriage Performed Under Guard of Reds.

Bridegroom Forced to Wear Prison Garb.

[A. P. FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

WARSAW, June 25.—News of the marriage in Moscow of Count Szechnenyi, a lieutenant in the Hungarian cavalry, who is still being held a prisoner by the Bolsheviki, to Princess Golicyn, a member of one of the oldest Russian families, has just been received here. Count Szechnenyi is a cousin of Count Lazlo Szechnenyi, who married Miss Gladys Vanderbilt of New York.

At the beginning of the war he was a lieutenant in the Hungarian cavalry and was taken prisoner by the Russians on the Galician front in 1915. He is about 27 years old.

Details of the wedding were brought to Warsaw by Dr. Sigmond Janczura, formerly a dentist in Detroit, Mich., who served in the Polish army, was captured by the Bolsheviki and released from the Moscow prison early in June.

ROMANCE BEGAN LONG AGO.

Count Szechnenyi was a prison companion of Col. Merlon C. Cooper of Jacksonville, Fla., of the Kosciuszko air squadron, who escaped from Russia this spring.

The romance had its inception prior to the World War, while the young woman was visiting in Constantinople, near where Count Szechnenyi's father has a palace and a vast estate. Princess Golicyn returned to Russia several years ago, upon learning that Count Szechnenyi was a prisoner and since has been endeavoring to aid in gaining his freedom and sending him food whenever possible.

It is no easy matter to arrange a marriage by a prisoner in a Bolshevik prison camp. Month after month the societ authorities refused to give their consent. When it was obtained the ceremony was first performed by a soviet commissar and afterward a religious marriage was performed in a Greek orthodox church in Moscow. Although the Count had many friends among the prisoners none was allowed to attend the wedding.

GUARDED AT WEDDING.

Instead of a friend as best man there was a Bolshevik soldier guard. The Count, with four armed soldiers at his sides, marched through the walled prison gate to the commissar's office where he met his bride attended by several girl friends. The Count wore the same prison garb which he had worn for months.

Immediately after the church service the Count was marched back to prison, his bride accompanying him to the prison gates. The next morning the bride was permitted to visit her husband and, with the Count's prison friends, sat down to a wedding breakfast—a wedding breakfast of black bread and imitation coffee and hot water.

Twenty Hungarian officers, including Count Szechnenyi, are being held by the Bolsheviki as hostages to secure the safety of ten soviet commissars imprisoned by the Hungarian authorities. The Hungarians were sent to Siberia in 1915 and were on their way out when rearrested by the Bolsheviki.

WAR HERO RELEASED FROM TOMBS PRISON.

WILL BE RECOMMENDED FOR WEST POINT APPOINTMENT.

NEW YORK, July 16. — A member of Col. Theodore Roosevelt's command in the World War, Sergt. Robert McLean of the Aero Supply Detachment at Mitchel Field, L. I., was released from the Tombs Prison by Judge Mulqueen in General Sessions after Army officers had aided him to prove his innocence of charges made by a taxicab driver. Maj.-Gen. Bullard, commander at Governor's Island, called the attention of the District Attorney to the case of McLean, who has several medals for service.

He had been in the Tombs since May 7, accused by Frank Thumm, a taxi driver, of 95 Watt street, of robbery in the first degree, grand larceny, assault and criminally receiving stolen goods. The taxi-driver alleged that he had been knocked unconscious and robbed of $8 by two soldiers, who had hired his cab. McLean was arrested in a restaurant after the robbery.

Investigation by Asst. Dist-Atty. O. W. Bohan showed that McLean had alighted from the cab on West street, and had departed before the robbery. McLean said his soldier companion, whose name and unit were unknown to him, had assured him that he would pay the driver. Thumm said yesterday he didn't believe McLean had any part in the robbery and assault.

Through this investigation of the charges it became known that Army officers and others intended to recommend McLean for appointment to West Point, because of his war record. McLean is 21 years old. He is the youngest son of a West Virginia family. Four of his brothers, two of them West Pointers, were killed in the war.

BATHERS HAVE BATTLE WITH A BIG FISH.

CHANUTE (Kan.) July 16.—Bert Ray was slightly injured in a battle in which he, Frank Blanton and Oliver Donaldson engaged with a monster fish in the Neosho River, near here. The three had gone to the stream for a plunge. One of them stepped on the fish. He summoned his companions and they grappled with bare hands. The fish fought back and the struggle lasted an hour, at the end of which time the men had tired it out and dragged it ashore. It was a yellow cat, weighing fifty-five and one-half pounds.

The fish seized Ray twice, snapping the side of his hand once, and the other time getting not only his hand, but his entirely forearm in its mouth. Hostilities were suspended while Ray worked his arm out so that the sharp teeth would not strip off the flesh, and he was fortunate enough to escape with nothing more serious than painful surface scratches.

SPLENDID RACE SEEMS DOOMED.

Pure Blooded Hawaiians Are Rapidly Dying Out.

Statistics Tell Story of One of World's Tragedies.

Century of Civilization Deals Harshly With Them.

BY GEORGE F. NELLIST.

[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

HONOLULU (T. H.) July 16.—The plaintive, haunting music of Hawaii is the requiem of a dying race.

The pure blood Hawaiians, once the mightiest and noblest nation of Polynesia, even now magnificent of physique and keen of mind, are dying out.

Statistics showing the birth and death rates in the Territory of Hawaii for one year, just published by the bureau of vital statistics of the territorial board of health, tell the story of one of the world's tragedies, the doom of a once splendid race.

It is estimated that there are 22,000 pure blood Hawaiians in the territory. For the twelve-month period there were 676 births among them, a rate per 1000 of 30.73, not far below the average for all races, 39.05, but there were 1010 deaths, a rate of 45.91, against an average of 17.53, a net loss in population of 334, an annual decrease of 15.18 per cent. Those mathematically inclined can figure out with reasonable certainty the year when the pure Hawaiian race will have ceased to exist.

HURT BY CIVILIZATION.

A century of the civilization of Christianity has dealt harshly with the Hawaiians.

As pointed out recently, however, by an ehnologist of the Bishop Museum, from the ruins of the Hawaiian, there is springing up in the island a new and virile race, made strong by the mingled blood of the Occident, the Orient and Polynesia.

There are now in Hawaii 6100 Asiatic Hawaiians, and for the year their birth rate was 80.49, the death rate only 16.89, a rate of increase of 63.60 per cent.

For 10,800 Caucasian Hawaiians the birth rate was 64.72; death rate, 23.15; rate of increase, 41.57.

It would appear from this showing that an alliance between the Orient and Polynesia is more prolific and hardier than the union between Occident and Polynesia.

JAPS RARELY INTERMARRY.

Most of the unions of Hawaiians and orientals have been those of Chinamen and Hawaiian women. The Japanese rarely marry into another race. Preservation of racial purity seems to be almost a fetish with the sons and daughters of Japan. The Chinese, however, have freely intermarried with the Hawaiians, and the results have been good. It is largely to children of such unions that credit is due for the widespread tributes which have been paid to the beauty of Hawaiian women.

It is impossible in any consideration of the racial problem of Hawaii, to ignore the Japanese. Their preponderance, their prolificness, their jealously guarded racial homogeneity, make them a factor overshadowing all others when one undertakes to read the future of these islands.

JAP POPULATION STRONG.

Of a total population of less than 260,000, the Japanese are now estimated to number 113,500, and for the last year for which statistics are available their birth rate was 43.73, their death rate 14.06, and rate of increase 29.67. For the twelve months there were 4963 Japanese births and 1596 death. For all races there were 10,165 births. In other words, of the natural increase in Hawaii's population almost one-half is Japanese, their percentage of increase being considerably larger than their proportion of the present population. So far as numegical domination of the territory is concerned they are simply overwhelming the new Asiatic-Hawaiian and Caucasian-Hawaiian races. A transplanted people are breeding themselves into a racial majority in a land whose aborigines are fast dying out.

A chemistry of evolution, the harsh rule of the survival of the fittest, is working out a most interesting problem in Hawaii, the result of which can almost be written now.

CHINESE ARE EAGER FOR AMERICAN TRADE.

HOQUIAM (Wash.) July 9.—Chinese business men are eager to take opportunities in the country for development afforded by American trade and the possibilities for American industry to secure this trade are ripe now, according to Ralph D. Emerson of the First National Bank and the Aloha Lumber Company, who returned recently from a three months' cruise on the Wenatchee and inland trips in China and Japan. Mr. Emerson represented the West Coast Lumbermen's Association and also the honorary commercial commission, which is made up of a group of Pacific Northwest men who went to investigate trade requirements and opportunities in the Far East.

Due to accidents to the machinery of the Wenatchee the party considered itself doubly blessed for besides having a fine trip and meeting many men in coast towns of China and Japan, they were enabled to make a trip inland to the north in Japan from Yokohama and catch the ship at Kobe. Again they left her at Shanghai and went to Pekin and Hankow, returning cia the Yang-tse-kiang River while the ship was going to Manila and return.

American contributions are relieving the distress in the famine-stricken district around Hankow and he expressed the belief that the very bountiful harvest there would make conditions much better the coming winter. The wheat crop particularly attracted his eye, being as fine as any he has ever seen, he said. Japanese and Chinese were cordial and accommodating, showing evident desire to make friends and assist in any way possible in making the stay of the Americans pleasant and instructive.

DEATH MYSTERY WOMAN IS HELD.

Murdered Conductor's Widow Jailed in Arizona.

Mrs. McLennan Charged With Slaying of Husband.

Applied for Divorce Prior to Fatal Shooting.

Mrs. Elsie Kinney McLennon, widow of Robert C. Mc Lennan, well-to-do Santa Fe conductor who was the victim of a mysterious shooting at Winslow, Ariz., last April, has been arrested for the crime and will come up for a preliminary hearing next Wednesday.

This was the information given to The Times last night by Dist.-Atty. Riley Greer of Navajo county, Ariz., whose energetic investigation in Arizona and Los Angeles brought to light one of the most unique crime mysteries in the history of the Southwest.

Mrs. McLennan, according to Mr. Greer, was arrested in Winslow and is now held on the charge of murder. She made no statement other that a general denial of her guilt, Mr. Greer said. W. R. Seeley, representing friends of the dead conductor, was the complaining witness.

According to the information received here last night by Deputy Sheriffs Fox and Nolan, who conducted the investigation in Los Angeles, the case promises to develop into a bitter legal battle, with unusual features.

INQUIRY STARTED.

Mr. McLennan, who was said to be wealthy, died at the Santa Fe Hospital in Los Angeles June 15 from complications resulting from the wounds received in Winslow. His death was followed by an investigation under the direction of fellow members of the railway brotherhood to which Mr. McLennan belonged. Coroner Nance, Autopsy Surgeon Wagner, Sheriff Traeger and Deputies Manning, Fox and Nolan co-operated with the friends of Mr. McLennan and the Arizona authorities.

Dist.-Atty. Greer did not give the details of the evidence against Mrs. McLennan that led to the issuing of the complaint and the warrant for her arrest. From other sources it was learned that certain conflicting statements, a bundle of letters that figured in the case and a few hints given by Mr. McLennan following the shooting, formed the first clews on which the Arizona and the Los Angeles authorities worked.

Mr. McLennan was found in his room at Winslow in a dangerous condition from three bullet wounds in the head. He had been in the room for more than twenty-four hours. Several shells in his revolver had been fired, but the direction of the bullets as they plowed through his head and the absence of powder marks caused the authorities to doubt that the wounds were self-inflicted. Mr. McLennan, when he recovered consciousness, said he had been shot, but, so far as is known, refused to name his assailant, saying, however, that he knew who shot him.

SUED FOR DIVORCE.

An interesting phase of the shooting was the fact that Mrs. McLennan had filed suit for divorce a few weeks before. Mr. McLennan, his friends said, told them he had a package of letters which he desired to use in a cross-complaint action against Mrs. McLennan. This package of letters was later recovered by Mr. McLennan's friends. It was blood-stained. Mr. McLennan is said to have told his friends that he was safeguarding these letters when he was shot.

Mr. McLennan was brought to Los Angeles after emergency treatment in Winslow and Albuquerque, N. M. While here he is said to have made some statement to friends who later were active in the investigation. He also, Deputy Sheriffs Fox and Nolan discovered, transferred his insurance policy to his mother from his wife's name.

In an interview with The Times shortly after the death of her husband, Mrs. McLennan said she was in the house of a Mrs. F. H. Trimble, in Winslow, on the day of the shooting.

FIGHTS VOLSTEAD ACT.

League Wants Congress to Restore Beer and Light Wines.

The Sanity League of America, formed here recently, yesterday announced that it will cause the circulation of a petition through the United States asking Congress to permit the manufacture and sale of beer and light wines. It is the opinion of J. Morgan Marmaduke, retained as attorney for the league, that such permission could be granted without altering the Eighteenth Amendment.

J. S. Pelton, with offices at 701 Fay Building, is temporary chairman of the league; H. B. Boise, secretary and treasurer, and W. A. Hill, publicity director.

Mr. Pelton says the league is not sponsored by the liquor interests.

DIES IN DRUG STORE; IDENTITY IS MYSTERY.

Entering the Vermont Square Pharmacy, 4721 Vermont avenue, shortly after 5 o'clock last evening with the apparent intention of making a purchase, a man whom police had not identified late last night, dropped dead from what is thought to have been heart failure. A billhead of the Whitehead Lumber Company of Los Angeles, made out to P. M. Kay was found in his pocket. Officials of the lumber company told the police, however, that there is no record of P. M. Kay on their books. The dead man was about 53 years old, five feet, ten inches tall, with gray hair, weight about 160 pounds. He was dressed in dark clothes, brown shoes and a straw hat. The body was taken to the Pierce undertaking establishment.

GAMMA ETA KAPPA'S CONVENTION ENDED.

Two hundred delegates to the Gamma Eta Kappa fraternity closed their eighth biennial convention here last night with a banquet at the Alexandria. The fraternity men had been in session since Wednesday, holding their meetings in the rooms of Victory Post of the American Legion, 327½ South Hill street. Special music and entertainment added to the banquet gaieties last night.

KIDNAPED BY GANG AFTER NIGHT FIGHT.

Man Whose Vest was Found Near Beach Appears; Tells Story of Captivity.

Charles W. Rodemar, missing for a week, appeared here yesterday and said he had been kept captive by three men, who had kidnaped him in a fight at night on the beach near Santa Monica. Mr. Rodemar's torn waistcoat was found on the 8th inst. on the road near Santa Monica, and his friends instituted a State-wide search for him.

He said he was slugged and regained consciousness in a darkened room. He said his captors treated him well and fed him for seven days, and then apparently decided they had got the wrong man. They blindfolded him, he says, and, after a drive of five hours in an automobile, released him on the outskirts of Los Angeles. Mr. Rodemar lives on a ranch near Volta.

A telegram from Fresno last night said a friend at Los Banos had received a telegram from Mr. Rodemar saying he would be home today. The clerk at the hotel where he was stopping here said he left yesterday morning.

FILM UNIONS STRIKE OVER CUT IN WAGES.

HAL ROACH, FOX AND GOLDWYN STUDIOS, AFFECTED BY SMALL WALKOUT.

Certain of the motion-picture studio unions have called a strike because of changes in the wage scale enforced by the Motion Picture Producers' Association. One company, Hal Roach, yesterday announced it would close its studios in Culver City for a week. It was announced, however, that only the carpenters and some of the painters had struck. Some employees of the Goldwyn studios are out, and the Fox studios also are affected, according to the union statement.

The changes in the scale are twofold. Wages are cut from $1 a day to less than $5 a week for some classes of laborers. In addition, time and a half for overtime is discontinued unless the overtime runs for more than two hours. Overtime for less than two hours is paid as straight time.

Samuel Goldwyn yesterday explained that the motion-picture industry is the last of the great industries of the country to reduce wages in keeping with the economic readjustment. Since the increase in pay of September, last year, he explained, painters, carpenters and electricians have been getting $1 an hour, and gang foremen $1.25 an hour. The reductions now effective, Mr. Goldwyn said, merely bring the scale back to where it was in 1919.

"Futhermore, a condition exists which makes it imperative that pictures be made at a lower cost," he declared. "It is a question of making them at a lower cost or not making them at all."

OPEN SUNLAND LODGE.

The opening program included several picnic parties held in the county park near the lodge. Further opening exercises including an informal reception, will be held today to 7 p.m.

SEEK HIGHER WALNUT TARIFF

Commerce Body Carries Fight Direct to Fordney.

County Farm Bureau Requests Aid of Congressmen.

Revision Asked for by Local Chamber in Telegram.

With a vote on the Fordney tariff bill only a week distant, scores of chambers of commerce and other business organizations in Southern California are urging upon the Congressmen and Senators of this State the absolute necessity for an immediate revision of the walnut tariff schedule.

The Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce took the fight direct to Chairman Fordney of the Ways and Means Committee yesterday, while the Farm Bureau of Los Angeles county has sent urgent telegrams to Congressmen Lineberger, Osborne, Swing, Frew and Kahn, calling upon them to use every ounce of pressure in an effort to protect the walnut industry from disastrous foreign competition.

Signed by President Neely and addressed to the five Congressmen above mentioned the Farm Bureau telegram was as follows:

"The Farm Bureau of Los Angeles county urgently requests that you urge the Ways and Means Committee to give reconsideration to the duty originally proposed in the Fordney tariff bill, on shelled and unshelled walnuts. The rate of 4 cents on unshelled and 12 cents on shelled walnuts, requested by the American walnut industry, only represents about half the difference in cost of production between America and the principal foreign countries, and as the American walnut industry is and has been doubling its output every four years, it will shortly be producing sufficient to take care of the entire American requirements. In fact, sufficient acreage is now planted to accomplish this when all is in bearing. Reasonable tariff protection is absolutely necessary or the American industry cannot continue to exist."

Making its message a little more general, but stressing the importance of an adequate tariff for the California walnut industry, the Chamber of Commerce of Los Angeles sent the following telegram today to Chairman Fordney:

"The Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, in the interest of agricultural industries of California, urges you to give reconsideration to the rates of duty established in the tariff bill on walnuts, beans, almonds and marmalades, with a view to raising the rates to the level wired your committee in December and January, namely; 5 cents on unshelled almonds, 15 cents on shelled almonds, 4 cents on unshelled walnuts, 12 cents on shelled walnuts, 2 1-2 cents on beans, 30 cents on marmalades. This will not more than place these American industries on a fair competitive basis with foreign products, and is essential to the permanent prosperity of these California industries."

The proposed tariff schedule provides for a tariff of only 5 cents per pound on shelled walnuts and 2 1-2 cents on unshelled walnuts. Carlyle Thorpe, general manager of the California Walnut Growers' Association, insists that if the cent-a-pound increase in transportation costs is taken into consideration this tariff puts the walnut growers on a footing far more unfavorable than the old Payne-Aldrich Bill.

C. C. Teague of Santa Paula, president of the California Walnut Growers' Association and the California Fruit Growers' Exchange, plans to leave for Washington shortly for the purpose of going into tariff matters more thoroughly with the Ways and Means Committee.

HOSPITAL WAS NOT CONDEMNED

Conduct of Phoenix Hospital is Defended.

No Complaints Are Made by Soldier-Patients.

Whipple Barracks is Giving Needed Treatment.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

PRESCOTT (Ariz.) July 16.—Secretary Grace M. Sparks of the Yavapai County Chamber of Commerce, of this city, has issued a statement in defense of the Whipple Barracks Hospital, recently attacked in the Senate. In part, she says:

"Believing that your paper is desirous of printing the truth regarding any subject, which may have found its way into the columns of your valued publication, we are taking the liberty of calling your attention to an article appearing in the columns of The Times, under date of July 5, entitled, 'Ex-service Men are Neglected.'

"It is difficult to understand how any member of the Senate committee could permit such a statement regarding the hospital at Whipple Barracks, Prescott, Ariz., to go unchallenged.

NEVER CONDEMNED.

"This hospital, or as it is familiarly termed, 'Whipple Barracks,' was never condemned by the War Department. It required considerable persuasion to have the War Department turn over to the United States Public Health Service the buildings which are now used as a part of the hospital. This organization, representing the citizenship of Prescott, sent a committee to Washington in December, 1920, and their mission, following conferences with the Secretary of War and the Surgeon-General of the United States Public Health Service, resulted in permission being given for the use of these buildings, which are now a part of the hospital. These buildings were constructed of cement blocks, well ventilated and modern in every respect. Where in the Southwest can you find buildings with slate roofs? These were constructed at a cost approximating a million dollars and could not be rebuilt today for twice that sum. They are in excellent condition, clean and equal to the best buildings to be found in Arizona.

"The United States Public Health Service keeps in close touch with affairs at Whipple Barracks, with the members of the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and it is a crying shame that such publicity should be given to an institution that is managed entirely looking to the comfort of the men who are there.

PATIENTS HAVE COMMITTEE.

"A patients' committee, elected from among the men themselves, investigates and reports on all and any complaints. Any man has free access to this committee and the commandant in charge, Dr. R. H. Stanley, can at all times be reached by any of the patients either directly or through the medium of the patients' committee.

"There has not been a complaint regarding the quality or quantity of the food which is being served. The complaint which has been made occasionally is that it has not been served piping hot, and this, you can readily understand, is a difficult matter in a large hospital.

"It is my opinion that if the patients at the United States Public Health Service Hospital at Whipple Barracks, or their families, were obliged to furnish the same treatment at a private sanatorium, they could not obtain the same under $150 per month. I am not saying this to deride any patient at Whipple Barracks—for I believe we all realize the sacrifice which has been made by these men and that they are merely receiving what they paid to receive—their insurance and compensation—and that they are entitled to the best care and treatment this country affords."

HAYS WILL CUT DOWN POSTAL EXPENDITURES

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, July 16.—Plans for cutting down expenditures of the Postoffice Department approximately $15,000,000 during the next twelve months, are reported to have been outlined today to the Cabinet by Postmaster-Gen. Hays. The plans involve dropping from the payrolls approximately 1⅓ per cent of the 300,000 postal employees over the country.

The department plans to cut 2,000,000 from the allowance for city carriers, and like amounts from provisions of temporary carriers, the railway mail service, and mail-bag equipment.

ARMY HEADS CONFER.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, July 16.—Secretary Weeks conferred yesterday with Gen. Pershing and Maj. Gen. Harbord, Chief and Assistant Chief of Staff, respectively, on the question of abandoning certain of the war-time encampments and other Army stations in the country. The Secretary said some of the encampments would be sold.

MONKEY BURGLAR GETS THE MILK.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

PASADENA, July 16.—The cat has been blamed for robbing the back-porch milk bottles in Oak Knoll. But the cat was innocent. M. I. Row's pet monkey has been doing it.

The monkey ran away from Mr. Row's home at 699 Oak Knoll avenue today. Prof. M. M. Parker, 610 Oakland avenue, and other residents of the neighborhood shortly thereafter discovered that their morning's milk had been purloined. Some fruit left on the back porches was missing, too.

The cat was blamed until some one espied Mr. Monkey dangling from a tree by his tail. The monkey was taken in charge by the humane officer.

Sightseers from the East, motoring by and seeing the animal hanging by his tail from the trees, thought it was a natural bit of Southern California local color.

OFFICERS RAID "LOVE TEMPLE."

"High Priestess" of Mystery Cult is Arrested.

Radical Literature Nabbed; Youth Captured.

Weird Orgies Before Altar in Shack Are Denied.

Raiding a wooden shack at 2327 Paseos Gemmelles street, above Glassell Park, late yesterday, police found a quantity of asserted Red literature and arrested Mme. Edith Maida Lessing, declared to be the priestess of a strange "love" cult, and a youth giving the name of Hartwell Bird, 18, of 221 West Second street. Both were booked on charges of suspicion of criminal syndicalism and were locked in the City Jail pending further investigation of asserted weird ceremonies before an altar at the shack.

The raid was conducted by C. C. Lawton, special investigator for the City Prosecutor, and Detectives Besner and Adams of the so-called anarchist squad, following complaints of residents of the neighborhood.

Several hundred large cards with the heading "Revolution" in large type and exhorting readers to become "Libertines," a quantity of publications called "The Scorpion," and a large number of copies of a poem entitled "Red" and addressed to "Jesus the Beloved," were found in the shack and taken to police headquarters.

Late last evening Bird was released and another young man, who calls himself Dr. Oscar Knopf, was arrested at Mme. Lessing's hilltop and booked at the City Jail on the charge of suspicion of criminal syndicalism. Detective Sergeants Posner and Adams, who made the arrest, declared that Dr. Knopf has been staying at the shack and has assisted Mme. Lessing in the distribution of the literature. He declared, the detectives said, that he was a follower of Dr. Otoman Zan-Adusht-Hanish and a believer in the Mazdaznan cult. Showing an honorable discharge from the American Army, Dr. Knopf said he had gone to the Lessing place to recuperate and enjoy out-of-door exercise.

The detectives declared they released Bird as they had found on late investigation that he has been steadily attending High School and was only a visitor at "the hilltop."

"LOVE" FLAG FOUND.

A red flag bearing in white letters the word "Love," with a blue star just above the letters, was also taken to the police station.

Mme. Lessing told the police her shack is called "Helios, a Temple of Love," but she denied that weird orgies have ever been conducted there, or that any religious ceremonies have been indulged in by her or her followers. Rather, she says, the place has been a haven for moneyless young men, particularly ex-soldiers, who have received food, lodging and clothing at her hands.

On one side of the large card which police found in great quantities appears the heading "The Liberty Call," and says:

"We will abolish competition, the armament, civil marriage, the penitentiary, the tariff, private ownership of land, purchase and sale, all sects, creeds, churches, lodges, religious associations, orders, convents, institutions of public worship."

"DIVINE MARRIAGE."

"We will establish co-operation, peace, divine marriage, protection and teaching for the erring, free trade, an equal division of profits, barter and exchange and brotherhood.

"We guarantee every mother will be taken from all labor, from the quickening of life of her child until the completion of its first year. Every child shall have all expenses paid until the voting age.

"All labor shall ride free on all public conveyances, to and from work to any place or distance. Shall be furnished food and bedding on long journeys.

"All ownership ceases at death of the individual, each portion going to the government. Each individual shall worship God in his own way."

"Make ready for the Revolution," is the heading on the obverse side of the card.

MYSTERY WOMAN.

With Mme. Lessing at the time of the raid was a diminutive woman about 45, who, according to Mme. Lessing, has the mentality of a child of 15, and is under her care pending the recovery of the woman's mother, who is ill. Police were endeavoring to learn the whereabouts of the woman's relatives.

Hartwell Bird, who says he is a senior at Hollywood High School, told the police he is not identified with Mme. Lessing's cult, but that he is well acquainted with her. Addressing him as "dear," Mme. Lessing cautioned him not to reveal the names of the printshops, where the confiscated literature had been printed. Later, however, she consented to give the police this information, which has led to another angle for investigation.

Mme. Lessing told police she is a cousin of the late Rear-Admi Robley D. Evans, United States Navy, and that she has a letter from him which shows this relationship. Police failed to find the letter in her effects, however.

TOURISTS REFUSE TO PAY HIGHER PRICES.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

INNSBRUCK (Austria) June 29. (Delayed.) The campaign of the hotel keepers and the cancellation of engaged quarters by summer visitors have proved too much for the Tyrol government, and it has revoked its "strangers' money" scheme.

This compelled all non-residents to buy the new money and pay in it for all things at a rate of exchange that would make them pay nearly ten times more than the natives. A high head tax on visitors is substituted. Summer visitors had cancelled rooms by the hundred, causing the hotel and inn keepers to hold mass meetings of protest against the scheme.

MORROW BACK FROM CHINA.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, July 16.—Col. W. M. Morrow, United States Army, former commander of the American forces in China, arrived here yesterday en route to Washington. He was succeeded as head of the American forces, with headquarters in Tientsin, by Col. W. F. Martin.

RETALIATION PROTESTED.

Congressmen Get Letters Against Any Duty on Newsprint.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

WASHINGTON, July 16.—Protests against a retaliatory provision applying to newsprint paper in the Fordney tariff bill are reaching members of Congress. While newsprint paper ostensibly is on the free list, a proviso makes it possible for the President to impose duties when any other country or province restricts in any way exportation to this country of newsprint paper, wood pulp or pulp wood.

Inasmuch as some of the Canadian provinces have restricted the exportation of pulp wood it is the contention that the proviso in the bill will not tend to secure more favorable action. If the authority should be exercised by the President it would react seriously on the publishers of the United States.

WANTED FREE LIST.

The news print paragraph is in effect quite similar to the provision proposed by the American manufacturers of news print paper. Newspaper publishers, on the other hand, urged during the hearings before the House Ways and Means Committee that news print paper be placed on the free list without any proviso whatsoever. It was contended that the news print manufacturers in this country were not in need of protection as evidenced by the last annual statement of the International Paper Company, the largest news print manufacturing company on the continent, showing enormous earnings. Comment was made by the newspaper publishers during the hearings on the fact that while a brief setting forth the position of the news print manufacturers was presented on behalf of the American Paper and Pulp Association, along with similar statements from other branches of the paper industry, officials of the news print companies failed to put in an appearance. Some of the members of the committee were anxious to cross examine the news print manufacturers relative to profits but failed to get the opportunity.

SHOULD BE DUTY.

The brief of the American Paper and Pulp Association, which was presented to the committee, declared that there should be a duty of $15 per ton on news print paper, but that in view of the fact that 40 per cent of the news print paper used in the United States is obtained from Canada, the manufacturers were willing to accept a provision which would impose a duty but with a proviso that it should be suspended in the case of importations from Canada and applied only by executive order whenever it might be shown that the Canadian provinces were maintaining or imposing restrictions that were inequitable or unfair. In fixing the desired duty at $15 a ton, the manufacturers merely set forth that the Federal Trade Commission in a report in June 1917, had stated that the cost of manufacturing news print in Canada was from $4 to $5 less per ton than in this country.

COSTS HIGHER HERE.

The only evidence that the difference in costs now amounts to $15 a ton was a general statement that in view of the increase of cost of materials "the inference is fair that a comparison of present costs of manufacture in the two countries would show manufacturing costs in the United States at least $15 a ton higher than those in Canada."

"The provision in the Fordney bill relative to news print paper is different than in either the Underwood or Payne-Aldrich acts. In both the two former laws news print was included under the heading of printing paper, provision being made that a duty should apply only on printing paper valued at more than a certain amount, the intention being that news print with a value less than the fixed amount would come in free. In the Fordney bill for the first time there is a separate paragraph on standard news print paper.

Mrs. Stillman's Counsel is Ill; Will Delay Case.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

YONKERS (N. Y.) July 16.—John F. Brennan, counsel for Mrs. Anne U. Stillman in the divorce action brought by her husband, James A. Stillman, New York banker is suffering from pneumonia and will be confined to his bed for more than a month, it was said tonight, after a conference of physicians at his home here. He is 70 years old.

Grave fears are felt by close associates of the attorney because of his advanced years, although the physicians' announcement said his chances of recovery were favorable. His illness will delay further hearings in the Stillman case, which were set for July 27.

It is thought the case will not be resumed.

VETERANS FAIL TO INDORSE CASH BONUS.

FAVOR EARLY COLLECTION OF INTEREST ON WAR LOANS TO ALLIES.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CLEVELAND, July 16.—The Rainbow Division Veterans' Association failed to indorse an immediate cash bonus for former soldiers at the closing session of its annual convention here today. A resolution was passed, however, recommending early collection of the accrued interest on the Allied war debt to the United States and the use of the money to pay the adjusted compensation for ex-soldiers.

The resolution pointed out that the Allied debt to the United States amounts to $10,000,00,000 and that $1,500,000,000 is now due as accrued interest.

A resolution was adopted demanding adequate and efficient care for disabled service men.

PAPER GLOOMY OVER DISARMAMENT MEET.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

MADRID, July 16.—El Liberal in an editorial today on the proposed disarmament conference, says:

"If the United States, Great Britain, France and Japan reach an agreement to reduce armaments, this will not change in any way the possibility of a conflict between them. The conference will be equally as ineffective as that at Geneva some years ago, and equally as sterile as the League of Nations. The danger of a new war daily becomes more imminent, and perhaps those most convinced of its imminence are the conferees at Washington."

INOUE TELLS INSIDE FACTS OF JAP ROAD!

Viscount on Way from Lisbon Meet to Tokio Spends Short Time in Chicago.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CHICAGO, July 16. — Viscount Tadashiro Inoue, advisory director of the South Manchuria Railroad, in charge of the mining and meteorological enterprises of the company, flashed in and out of Chicago today on his way back to Tokio. The Viscount headed the Japanese delegation at the International Parliament of Commerce held at Lisbon, Portugal, from May 25 to June 1. He sails from Vancouver July 21.

"There has been misunderstanding between my countrymen and yours," he said. "Americans, some of them, believe that the Japanese are dominating South Manchuria, a Chinese province, and discriminating against American merchandise. Let me tell you a bit of the history of this 500-mile railroad."

The road, according to the Viscount, was given to Japan by the Treaty of Portsmouth. It had been used by the Russians for strictly military purposes to communicate with Port Arthur. The Russians had done nothing to develop the country, which was a desolate, barren waste. After receiving the right to operate the road the Japanese government founded the present company, keeping to itself one-half of the $100,000,000 worth of shares.

The company had to raise the money. There was no production. Japanese themselves declined to invest their cash. The Chinese government turned down a share. So it was necessary to float a loan of £10,000,000 in London, with the guarantee of the Japanese government. The railroad was improved, American equipment was purchased and the country cultivated.

It is believed that the flames are now under control.

Beverly Hills.

FOR SALE—
During the past year I have built and sold the following houses in Beverly Hills:

509-515-517-607 Beverly Drive.
504-512 Crescent Drive.

At the present time I am building three more beautiful homes at 505-508-705 Crescent Drive.

Be sure and inspect 705 Crescent Drive. Look at the material and workmanship and then ask my price. You will then realize why my houses sell so readily.

A beautiful 8-room Spanish type residence on Beverly Dr., just a few blocks from the hotel. I built this for the present owners, who are living in it, but as they are returning East, they have placed a price on it that places it in the bargain class. Will be glad to show by appointment any time.

$25 FT. ON SUNSET BLVD.
COR REXFORD DRIVE.

Taken in on trade, this beautiful corner lot, just a block from the Beverly Hills Hotel. A price has been placed on it that is bound to move it, and with Beverly Hills booming as it is this should be considered a real investment.

NOTE.

Owing to my increased building business in Beverly Hills, I have opened an office, 419 CANYON DRIVE, adjoining the City Hall, where I can show a full line of plans of beautiful bungalows and larger homes.

If your lot is clear, I can finance and build for you, anything that you want in Beverly. I have plenty of ready money on hand and have an able corps of assistants that will answer any and all questions pertaining to building you a home.

A REAL CATTLE RANCH.
A REAL CATTLE RANCH.
CONTAINS NEARLY 400,000 ACRES.
CONTAINS NEARLY 400,000 ACRES.

I am authorized to offer to responsible parties on the easiest of terms, the finest cattle ranch on the Coast without exception. There are altogether, including the government range, about 400,000 acres, of which about 50,000 acres is rich level land capable of irrigation from a river running through the ranch. The soil is excellent for alfalfa, vetch, rye grasses, all kinds of grain, sugar beets, potatoes, etc. From a standpoint of feed for cattle there is nothing like it to be had. We can raise from 40,000 to 50,000 tons of hay a year, besides carrying on the range over 20,000 head of Herefords and 15,000 to 20,000 head of sheep.

A river, two railroads, State highway, transcontinental telephone and telegraph lines extend directly through the ranch. Shipping stations and corrals on both roads.

There are some 7000 head of cattle now on the ranch, but there should be three times that number.

There are excellent reasons for selling, and this great property in the hands of progressive men, will make them exceedingly large profits.

The price is $1,500,000, and it is a genuine bargain at that. There is no mortgage. I have an intimate knowledge of this property and am qualified to discuss its merits.

CARLSBAD-BY-THE-SEA.
Here is Your Dream Place.

Situated on main line of Railway and State Highway, between Los Angeles and San Diego, on a high bluff overlooking the sea. By reason of the very even climate, we grow such tender crops as Green Peas, Cucumbers, Squash, Peppers, etc., during the winter months, and as no other district has them at that season, we receive very high prices for these products. One man received $2050 cash from his crop off five acres; another received $20,000 for his Peas from 43 acres, and so on. If you want to make money under the most pleasant living conditions, be sure to choose Carlsbad. Planting of winter crops will soon begin, so it is time you got started.

FOR SALE—GUARANTEED INVESTMENT. The next best thing to owning land is to own stock in a company owning land. I have incorporated my 520 acres of land situated in the Fresno fruit district, six miles southwest of Madera, California, for the purpose of securing money with which to plant the ranch, excepting about 70 acres now in vineyard and orchard, to raisin and shipping grapes, plums, peaches, apricots and prunes. The soil is an extra good rich sandy loam. The land is irrigated by gravity water and pumping plant. There are two sets of ranch buildings. This will make one of the finest fruit ranches in San Joaquin Valley. I will sell the stock at One Dollar a share, which is its par value, and will give the purchaser a written guarantee that the stock will earn at the rate of 8 per cent a year. ROSS B. OFF-SETTING
THE STANDARD.

We have a real oil investment in Section 23 of the Famous Midway Field, Kern county.

At the present time we have two producing wells, the production of which is ample for all present needs.

But we want to go still further—therefore we have made application and have received permission to sell $125,000 of our stock at par, $1.00. Our oil rights, consisting of FIFTY ACRES, adjoins the famous Section 25, which is considered the "big noise" in the Midway Field. We are spudding in our No. 3 well and our program calls for NINE more wells. This means big dividends, especially as we have a small capitalization—$250,000.

Prompt action necessary.

PECOS COUNTY OIL FIELD LOOKING BETTER EXERY DAY.

Luse No. 1, now drilling, and Luse No. 2 and No. 3 to start drilling in the near future.

I have just returned from a 10-days' trip to Pecos county, where I closed a deal with a drilling contractor to drill my three wells.

Geologists advise me that my leases are on excellent structure, and that I should get big production in all of my wells.

Now is your greatest opportunity to make some big money by purchasing a 20 years' commercial oil lease on the structure in eastern Pecos county, and share in the production of my three wells.

I am going back to Pecos county next week to start another well.

Delay will certainly cost you money. Quick action may make you a fortune.

Our titles are absolutely perfect; locations cannot be beat, and our prices are right.

The greatest selling proposition ever offered salesmen and brokers, and the best investment for the investor.

BEAUTIFUL YOUNG GROVE.

VERY EASY TERMS.
VERY EASY TERMS.

Here is an opportunity for a couple of capable and energetic young fellows who know the orange business, to take over a fine young producing property, and practically pay for it out of the crops. There are Valencias, navels, a few peaches, figs and prunes; 30,000 grape rootings ready to set out next winter; two tractors, plows, harrows, subsoiler; motors and pumps and plenty of water.

There are lots of ambitious and responsible young men who should jump at such a chance to expand and grow, and before they know it they will be worth a hundred thousand dollars, and starting from almost nothing.

The price is $125,000 and worth it; a very small payment down, or a good piece of approved real estate put up to show good faith will suffice and you can have 10, 15 or even 20 years at 5 per cent interest and taxes to pay it out.

MINES AND MINING.

OIL SHORTAGE IS INCREASING—

No better investment can be made now than test holes in new territory. The country needs all the oil you can find, and you have a safe and sure market.

Don't resort to old-fashioned methods of drilling, with large and expensive machinery. Never forget the cost of a hole increases in the approximate proportion to the "square of its diameter."

So drill small diameter holes with the latest and most efficient portable machine ever built for territories from 800 to 2500 ft. deep. Write for particulars and circulars.

BUSINESS CHANCES.

WOULD YOU BELIEVE A MAN
IF THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT
LOS ANGELES CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Praise and indorse his output? Briefly, here are the facts:

I am a specialist in Dehydration and all forms of artificial drying of fruits and vegetables.

Until the plant in which I was dehydrating and marketing my products was destroyed by fire, my business was splendid.

Now I must build another plant and I need capital.

At the present market prices, fruits and vegetables are being allowed to rot.

Hence I can buy for next to nothing, dehydrate them and store them till next fall or winter when they will sell at a tremendous profit.

I have prepared plans for a new plant which can be operated with marvelous efficiency and economy.

I can build this plant in a few weeks and be dehydrating early in August. I do not intend to start with a big plant. I would rather begin modestly and show results.

In California there is something to dehydrate all the year 'round, so the plant need never be idle.

I have sold my dehydrated products to the biggest firms in the United States and enjoy their confidence.

Personal letters from the U. S. government and the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce will vouch for my integrity and my banking connections are without a blemish.

This is an honest, above-board bid for a fair sized working capital. There are no strings to it.

I would be pleased to talk it over with any genuinely interested man or woman between the hours of 10 and 3 any day this week.

JOHN HAGEN,
1124 TITLE INSURANCE BLDG.

INVESTMENT EXTRAORDINARY!
How would you like to own a part of a company that has averaged 373 per cent per year for the last fifteen years in dividends; that has a surplus of about 135 per cent of its capital; that is manufacturing a product that is in universal demand; that has declared its intention of issuing a 42 6-7 per cent dividend in the very near future? Obviously, the stock of this company is very seldom available, but through a very unusual string of circumstances we are able to offer 28 shares of it in blocks of 7 shares each. It requires about $500 cash to handle a block. For further details address PL, box 329, TIMES BRANCH.

BUSINESS CHANCES.

GENUINE FACTORY OPPORTUNITIES.
As our work is placing men with their money into manufacturing plants there may be a sameness in our ads, but the facts are, however, that we have varied openings, many of which are genuinely attractive. For example:
PROPOSITION NO. 62.
We have just contracted to find a man to handle the financial and sales end of an established plant making staple metal goods. The other partner will take care of production. Five or six of the largest jobbers in Los Angeles and many others on the Pacific Coast are selling this article in increasing volume. The buyer to make a reasonable investment which goes into the business for development. We have bank, commercial agency, personal references, inventory, etc. This is one of the best small factories we have ever found because it has wonderful room for expansion and is already profitable.

Here's another kind:
PROPOSITION NO. 87.
An established, prosperous manufacturing and jobbing concern authorizes us to find a sales manager in position to make a reasonable investment. About a year ago we placed a man with them and know all of the details of their organization. This is a strictly high-class opportunity, as they are making good money and constantly growing.

We are also looking for men who can qualify for positions in various other factories. Investments required from $2500 up. See us for details.

BUSINESS CHANCES.

HERE IS A SUGGESTION—
If you are expecting to purchase a business of any kind, or buy in with an established concern in the city or suburbs, come in and have a talk with us. We have a few very fine openings at the present time, requiring from $3500 to $15,000. The reason we have not as large a list to select from as some other concerns is, because we absolutely will not undertake to sell a client something that we ourselves have not first been sold on. Doesn't that look like a good and sufficient reason why you should try to deal with us when you are ready to make an investment.

BRANCH distributorships for Western States and counties are offered reliable men by large manufacturing corporation; earnings unlimited, but $2000 to $10,000 first year is conservative. Proposition is big enough for big man, but the product is in such demand that an average man with limited capital can handle and make tremendous profits. As territories are limited this must be closed immediately. MR. WISE, Western Representative, will be at 323 Stock Exchange Bldg., Los Angeles, this week, and will be glad to give you complete and convincing information.

NEW HEAD OF CITY SCHOOL.

Noted Colorado Educator Comes to Arcadia.

Ross Field Flyer Delivers Note by Airplane.

Civilians Organize to Retain Camp Hostess.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

ARCADIA, July 16.—Clark H. Reid, prominent Colorado educator, has been chosen principal of the Arcadia Grammar School, to succeed J. K. Thornton. The new head of Arcadia's educational work was former principal of the Pueblo grade schools and for the past five years has been assistant superintendent of Pueblo county. He is declared to be especially successful in handling boys and girls.

DROPPED A NOTE.

When Capt. Carl Axteter of Ross Field wished to complete the details of a dinner dance to be given in Wildwood Tavern, at the mouth of Fish Canyon, he 'planed over, flew low and literally dropped a note to Manager Newcomb of Wildwood, in which he left his final instructions for the informal military ball.

TO KEEP CAMP HOSTESS.

Rev. G. W. Thomas of Arcadia, civilian chaplain at Ross Field, is organizing a financial campaign to raise $125 a month salary in order to keep Miss Jacobus, Red Cross camp hostess, at the balloon school. Miss Jacobus has done wonderful work at the camp, according to Rev. Mr. Thomas, and now when she is doing so well the government has disallowed further pay.

The Monrovia and Pasadena churches have underwritten a portion of the amount, and an effort is being made to secure the remainder by popular subscription. "During the war," said the chaplain today, "we had every conceivable kind of camp worker. Now the tumult and shouting die and the war is over. Still there are permanently at Ross Field over 400 boys of from 17 to 21 years of age, boys to whom the influence of a fine woman such as the camp hostess is one of the most vital things in their lives.

"Since Miss Jacobus came to Ross Field she has worked wonders, and has proved the very thing the boys most need. Now, right in the height of her usefulness, the government has withdrawn her pay. The officers of the post, realizing her necessity, have guaranteed a part of her salary. The First Presbyterian Church of Pasadena and the Pilgrim Congregational Church of that city have guaranteed another part, and the remainder we are going to secure in Monrovia and Arcadia."

FORMER MAYOR DIES.

Prominent Resident of Montana Passes Away at Long Beach.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

LONG BEACH, July 16.—Charles Howard Lane, former Mayor of Butter, Mont., and for thirty years connected with the commercial life of the city, died today at 1021 Temple avenue, which has been his home for the past year. Mr. Lane was born in Massachusetts sixty-seven years ago. In Butte he was the owner of a coal and mining hardware supply company.

He came to Long Beach a year ago on account of failing health. He was a thirty-second degree Mason. Members of the family are the widow, Mrs. Eliza Lane two daughters, Helen and Annabel, of this city; a son, Roger O. Lane of Butte, and a sister, Mrs. Bessie Daniels of New York. Funeral services will be conducted at the Holton & Son chapel at 10 a.m., Monday, by Rev. George M. Rourke. Burial will be made at Sunnyside Cemetery.

STOP BRUSH FIRE.

Fighters Prevent Blaze From Entering Ganesha Park.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

POMONA, July 16.—A serious brush fire, which for a time threatened to eat its way over the top of the San Jose Hills and burn over the south slope into Ganesha Park, Pomona's famed garden spot, was extinguished late today after a fierce battle by a large force of men under the direction of Park Superintendent J. M. Paige.

The fire was caused by a beesmoker which had been put down on the ground by a beekeeper. At one time during the fire three of the fighters were trapped by the flames, but managed to escape by a slight shift in the wind. The fire was fought with wet sacks and by cutting a fire break about the burning area. About one hundred acres were burned over before the flames were confined. Burned fence posts and telephone poles was the principal damage.

KNOW THE TOWN BACK IN IOWA.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

LONG BEACH, July 16.—Back in old Iowa the simple initials "L. B." on a letter do not mean Long Beach, N. Y., or Long Branch, N. Y. They mean Long Beach, Cal. Here's proof. On the 10th inst. a letter was mailed at Grinnell, Iowa, addressed as follows: "John Rapson, 226 Obispo, L. B." There was no other mark on the envelope. Four days later the letter was delivered to J. W. Rapson, 312 Obispo avenue, Long Beach, Cal., for whom it was intended. Not only was the name of the State entirely eliminated and the name of the city considerably abbreviated, but the street address was wrong and J. W. Rapson became merely John Rapson. However, the letter came through without delay and was delivered just as promptly as though it had been completely and correctly addressed.

WOMAN TO ANSWER TO MURDER CHARGE.

COURT PERMITS DEFENDANT TO FURNISH BAIL FOR APPEARANCE.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

LONG BEACH, July 16.—Mrs. Julia Lee Johnstone, 25 years old, who shot and killed her husband, Thomas P. Johnstone, 45, in front of their Los Cerritos home a week ago, was bound over to the Superior Court for trial on the charge of murder, by Justice S. H. Underwood today.

John L. Richardson, Mrs. Johnstone's attorney, asked the court to admit the woman to bail on account of her state of health. Justice Underwood consented, placing bail at $5000, which relatives are endeavoring to raise this afternoon.

At the preliminary hearing today counsel for Mrs. Johnstone indicated that her plea will be self-defense. During the hearing the point of Mr. Johnstone's position in the automobile when the fatal shot was fired was established as being a half standing one. This is taken to indicate that efforts will be made to show that Johnstone himself might have been reaching for a revolver with which to shoot his wife, whom he had threatened on previous occasions, it is claimed.

PROTEST ASSESSMENTS.

Ranch Owners Claim Ventura Taxes Are Too High.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

VENTURA, July 16.—In groups of twenty-five, the Board of Supervisors is having appear before it protestors, against the assessments recommended by the advisory board to the Assessor. Especially in the Camarillo and Oxnard section a marked increase was recommended by the advisory board.

Yesterday Superintendent Noble of the American Beet Sugar Company at Oxnard told the board why the recommended increase, so far as his company is concerned, was all wrong. Adolf Camarillo, owner of the big ranch at Camarillo, was another who was there with his attorney to offer objections. Richard Bard took the stand in behalf of the Berylwood Investment Company, which is among the other properties which it is claimed are paying a disproportionately low tax. The other twenty-two were smaller ranch owners, but owners of valuable holdings.

Twenty-five more will have an opportunity to present their side of the case to the board tomorrow.

COURT HOLDS PROXY MARRIAGE ILLEGAL.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

RIVERSIDE, July 16.—What is said to be the first case of the kind tried in the United States under statute 78 of the civil code, was that brought before Judge Hugh H. Craig of the Superior Court today, under which the court was asked by a woman whether or not she was married. The name of the woman is Budik, and she resides in Germany.

Hoping to get out of Germany during the course of the World War, she conceived the idea of marrying an American. She was married by proxy to Frederick Schott in Los Angeles and sought through Attorneys Sarau and Thompson to have the status of her marriage determined. The court ruled that a marriage had not been performed.

CANNED FISH FATAL.

Spoiled Food Causes Death of San Jacinto Woman.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

RIVERSIDE, July 16.—Mrs. Lida Lemens of San Jacinto is dead at the Riverside Community Hospital from botulinis poisoning, caused by the eating of canned fish. As a result, physicians are warning the public against using canned goods found to have a peculiar odor.

The can of fish was taken to San Jacinto by a relative of Mrs. Lemens, who said she noticed the contents had a suspicious odor. After tasting the fish, Mrs. Lemens decided it was spoiled and threw it to the chickens. Of the flock of 200 seventy-five developed "limberneck" and died. Soon the woman began to develop symptoms of poisoning, rapidly growing worse, dying in great agony.

RUG BURGLAR.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

ONTARIO, July 16.—To determine whether the burglar who ransacked her bungalow home, 220 Monterey avenue, during her temporary absence, was a budding furniture dealer or some one about to set up housekeeping for himself, was the puzzle confronting Mrs. Minnie Canawan Renfro tonight, when she returned to find practically every rug removed from the floors of her house.

The burglar gained entrance by a rear door and carried away five valuable rugs of various shapes and sizes, two bed spreads, four sheets and several pillow slips.

Conference Discusses Plans for Increased Electric Power.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

PASADENA, July 16.—When joyriders abandoned the automobile of John F. Mitchell of Alhambra, which they had stolen while Mitchell was attending the theater here, one of them inadvertently dropped in the car a book of street car tickets with a name on it.

With this as a clew Officers Lee Culver and Harry Thomas within a short time had under arrest Vance Phillips, Arthur Eddington, Clarence Overstrom and B. H. Staats, youthful sons of respectable Pasadena families. The book of street car tickets belonged to one of them. Chief of Police C. H. Kelley said today the boys admitted to him they took the car for a joy-ride. It gave evidence of hard driving.

The lads are held on a felony charge, taking and driving a car without the owner's consent, and will be arraigned before Justice of the Peace Raymond G. Thompson on Monday.

The police recovered two other stolen automobiles today. The four lads under arrest have not been connected with the other cases. One was a small car stolen from Fourth and Main street, Los Angeles, yesterday and owned by M. Dignal, 334 Parke street. The owner of the other car has not been learned by the police. Both cars were stripped of fittings.

HIGH VALUATION.

Assessed valuation of Pasadena for the fiscal year of 1921-1922 will exceed $80,000,000 in the opinion of Pasadena city officials. This will be the highest valuation ever placed upon property in this city.

A conference of Southern California cities upon the subject of joint development of hydroelectric energy will be held next Friday in the rooms of the Pasadena Chamber of Commerce. The plans are for an extension of the resources of electric energy for the municipal plants.

LOSES IN RACE TO SAVE MAN'S LIFE.

BROTHER ENDS IT ALL BEFORE RELATIVE ARRIVES FROM CLEVELAND.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SANTA BARBARA, July 16.—Arnold Jenson, photographer, committed suicide this afternoon by shooting himself through the head. He had scribbled a note to his wife saying: "Sweetheart, think as kindly of me as you can. In my condition of health I cannot make you happy. Good-bye, love." This was found on his desk by which, in a chair, he sat to fire the fatal shots. He had been home for lunch, had stopped at his physician's office on the way down town and from there had gone direct to a gun store and secured a 38 caliber revolver and box of shells. With these he went back to his studio and ended his life.

Two minutes after he plunged to the floor lifeless, C. W. Darby of Los Angeles, a family friend, walked into the studio to inform the photographer that his brother Charles was coming from Cleveland, O., and would arrive in Santa Barbara Sunday night. The brother, who has judged from letters written by the photographer that he planned suicide, had started at once for Santa Barbara, and on the way had wired Darby asking him to hurry to Santa Barbara and cheer Arnold with the news that he, Charles Jenson, was coming.

EAST IN GRIP OF HOTTEST SUMMER.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

REDLANDS, July 16.—Weather conditions in the East have for the past month been unbearable, according to Prof. A. Haven Smith, principal of the high school here, who is at Mapleton, Pa., called there by the serious illness of his father.

"Temperature and humidity have been around 90 most of the time since we came," he writes to friends here. "It has almost unnerved us, but when we say we have 100 often in California people look at us pityingly. They don't know. Lemons have been 8 and 10 cents each since we arrived here; surely the growers can afford to pick and ship the lemons now."

Prof. and Mrs. Smith went as far as Amarillo, Tex., in automobile and they found the dirt roads in many places at this time of the year better than the paved highways.

He had been working on a scaffolding about a tank. His body was found on the ground, and it is believed he fell backward, breaking his neck. An inquest will be held Monday. Mr. Moody was 36 years old. He leaves a widow, two children, his mother and a sister, who live in Chino, and two sisters who live in Ontario.

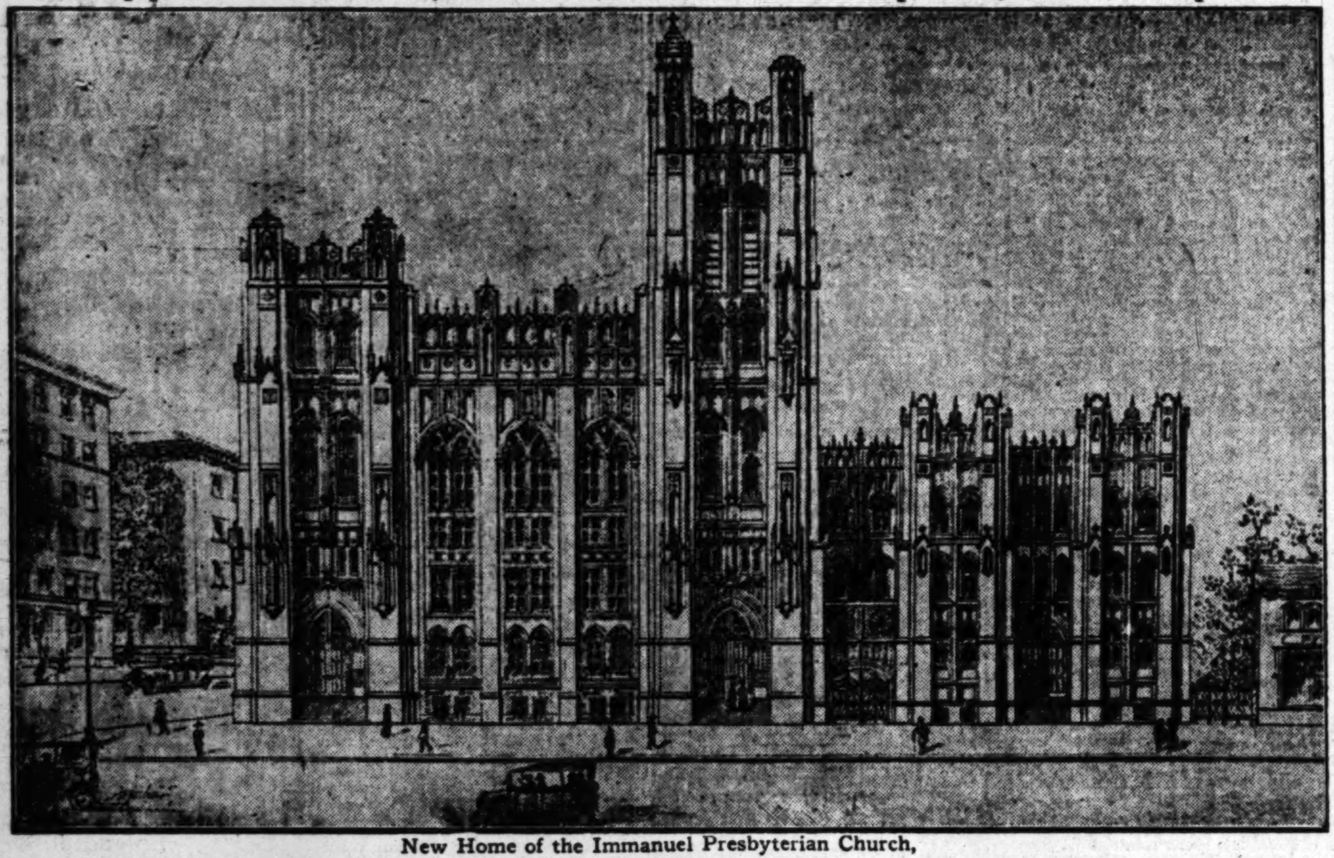
Approved Plan for Magnificent Temple of Worship.



New Home of the Immanuel Presbyterian Church,

To be erected at the southeast corner of Tenth and Figueroa streets. The structure will cost about $500,000, exclusive of the equipment and site. C. F. Skilling is the architect.

FINE CHURCH TO RISE SOON.

Immanuel Presbyterian Will Build New Half Million Dollar Home.

The present site of the Immanuel Presbyterian Church, at the southeast corner of Tenth and Figueroa streets, is to be improved in the near future with a new building, which will rank among the finest of its kind in the city, according to an announcement made yesterday by Architect C. F. Skilling, who for several months has been engaged in preparing plans for the structure. These plans have been approved by the building committee of the church, and the erection of the first unit, which will house the Sunday-school, will be started immediately upon the return of Mr. Skilling from a trip through the East, where he will make a study of church building and equipment.

About $500,000 will be spent on the building, exclusive of the equipment. The principal feature of the building is to be the great auditorium, which, together with a balcony extending around three sides of the room, will have a seating capacity for about 2500 people. Provision is made in the plans for the addition later of a second balcony, when it is needed, increasing the seating capacity to more than 3000.

The new church will be of class A steel and concrete construction, with the exterior and the interior carried out in the English Gothic style of architecture. Terra cotta will be used extensively in the exterior finish, while the interior throughout will be finished in hardwoods. The church property has a frontage of 212 feet on Figueroa street and 166 feet on Tenth street, and the greater part of the site will be covered by the new building.

The Sunday-school-wing of the building will be situated on the Figueroa-street frontage, and will be separated from the main building by a twenty-four foot court. This structure, to be three stories in height, will contain an auditorium to accommodate 500 people, a large number of classrooms, banquet room, kitchens, ladies' parlor, studies for the pastor and two assistant pastors, the financial manager's office, and about ten special rooms.

MEMORIAL CHAPEL.

A portion of the Tenth-street frontage will be devoted to a small memorial chapel, which will be the most elaborate and richly decorated portion of the building. A great memorial pipe organ of ninety stops, to be the largest in the city, it is claimed, is included in the plans, the sum of $50,000 having been subscribed by a member of the church for this purpose. The organ, together with an echo organ at the rear of the main auditorium, will serve both the church proper and the memorial chapel, the music being admitted to the chapel through an ornamental grill. The great central tower, located on the Figueroa-street side, and rising to a height of 150 feet, will contain the chimes.

The basement of the Sunday-school wing will be used as recreation rooms for the younger members of the church. The equipment will include an elaborate ventilating system for cooling and washing the air, and three automatic elevators, one of which will run to the top of the main tower.

The Immanuel Presbyterian Church was organized about thirty-two years ago by Dr. William Chichester in the old Hanna College, now known as Abbotsford Inn, at the corner of Eighth and Hope streets. This building is at the present time being wrecked to make way for the fine edifice to be built by the First Methodist Church at that location.

The church was originally a colony of the old First Church at Second and Broadway, which was

NEW CENTER OF BUSINESS DEVELOPING.

Fine Structure Planned for Western Avenue and Santa Monica Boulevard.

Considerable activity is reported in the new business section which is developing at the junction of Santa Monica Boulevard and Western avenue. Several modern business structures are now under way in this vicinity, and plans are now in course of preparation for others to be erected in the near future. Construction has been started on the fine theater building, to cost about $100,000, which is being built by J. C. Allen for the Turner, Dahnken and Langley interests. This theater, to be located on Santa Monica Boulevard, just west of Western avenue, will have a seating capacity for about 900 people. The lobby will be flanked by stores on either side, and the second floor will be devoted to offices. The exterior is to be finished in travertine stone, and equipment will include a modern heating and ventilating system, and a fine Hope-Jones pipe organ. Plans for the structure were prepared by Frank Rasche, designer and builder. Another important improvement for the district is the new Robinson Building, on the east side of Western avenue, south of Santa Monica Boulevard. This building, of brick construction, will contain two stores on the first floor, with apartments and offices above.

Other improvements to be made in this neighborhood in the near future include the two-story brick store building to be erected by Mrs. K. H. Dunn, who recently purchased a fifty-foot lot opposite the new Paramount Theater from A. Z. Taft, Jr., for a consideration of $10,000. F. A. Rentzel and Will C. Triesch have purchased from Joseph Green a fifty-foot lot on Santa Monica Boulevard east of Western avenue, and plans are now being prepared for a two-story brick store and office building to be built by the new owner.

The Taft Realty Company reports the sale of the corner of Oxford and Santa Monica Boulevard to C. D. Smith, who will improve the property with a modern store building, and also the sale of sixty feet of frontage on Western avenue, immediately south of Santa Monica Boulevard, to Howard M. Ley for the erection of a building to contain four stores.

CONTRACT AWARDED.

The contract for the one-story brick garage to be erected on Central avenue, near Fifteenth street, for the People's Realty Company, has been awarded to L. M. Blodgett at $9000.

Buys Business Property on South Figueroa.

Announcement was made yesterday of the sale of the property at 740-744 South Figueroa street by Albert Geyer, Carrie Geyer and Emma Geyer Dunkerly, heirs of the Caroline Geyer estate, to Mrs. Gladys Vivion Smith for a consideration of $1300 per front foot. The property is situated on the east side of the street, and has a frontage of fifty feet, with a depth of 165 feet. The present improvements consist of a frame four-family flat building erected nineteen years ago by the Geyer estate, which acquired the site at that time for a consideration of $125 per front foot. The property was purchased by Mrs. Smith as an investment, and will later be improved with a modern business building, it is stated. The transaction was handled by Joseph R. Schiller, realty broker.

DORMITORY BUILDING.

Robert H. Orr, architect, has prepared plans for a dormitory building to be erected for the College of Christianity on North Vermont avenue. The structure [illegible] an estimated cost of about $60,000.

The Garden City Company will erect a filling station and accessory sales building for Garland & Jones at Sixth street and Manhattan Place. Pierpont and Walter Davis are the architects for the building, which will cost about $10,000.

GREAT WOOLEN MILLS TO RISE NEAR THE HARBOR.

Reconstruction on Larger Scale of Plant Burned Last April to be Started Immediately.

All financial arrangements have been completed and building contracts have been let for the construction on an enlarged scale of a woolen textile mill to replace the plant of the Golden State Woolen Mills, which was destroyed by fire last April. The plant and equipment of the new mills will involve an expenditure of about $00,000, and, its capacity considered, will give Los Angeles and Southern California one of the most complete and efficient woolen mills and organizations in the United States, according to Clarendon B. Eyer, the president.

The general and sales offices of the Golden State Woolen Mills will be established in Los Angeles, and it will be to all intents and purposes a Los Angeles enterprise, although the mills will be built on the site of the former plant between Long Beach and Wilmington and near the head of the Long Beach channel of Los Angeles Harbor. The shore suburbs will get the benefit of the large payroll distributed weekly to the big staff of high-class labor, due to the far-sighted action of the Long Beach banks in giving their support to the enterprise and dissuading the principals from carrying out an idea of rebuilding in Los Angeles city proper.

Contract for the new buildings has been awarded to the Austin Company, whose system of steel, glass and brick industrial construction will be embodied in the structures at a total cost of about $150,000. Additional land has been acquired by the company, now totaling six acres, most of which will be under roof, when the new mills are added to the warehouses and other auxiliary buildings, which were not destroyed at the time of the fire.

CALIFORNIA WOOL.

The new mills will be one story in height, steel frames, brick walls where glass is not used, steel roofs of saw-tooth style with ample ventilation and lighting, and the general dimensions will be 410 by 305 feet, wherein will be embraced a steam power plant for the generation of its own electric motive power, this system being used because of the need for the steam in the cleaning of the wool, and in the dyeing department. An overhead continuous blower system will carry the wool through all the operations, from the warehouse through the cleaning, drying and spinning departments. There will be 110,000 feet of cement floor space. Buildings will comprise a raw material warehouse, washing, mixing and picking department, carding department, spinning mill, weaving or loom mill, dry and wet finishing and shipping departments.

California wool almost exclusively will be used in the Golden State Woolen Mills, although supplies of western wool are available from Arizona, Nevada, Utah, Oregon, Washington and Idaho, sufficient for almost unlimited expansion of this and other woolen mills to come. Woolen fabrics come under two general heads—cassimeres and worsteds—and the new plant will be confined to the production of the former. There are good prospects, says Mr. Eyer, for the early establishment of mills here for the weaving of worsteds also, in response to his efforts among eastern weavers, to whom he is setting out the advantages of Southern California as a woolen mill center with the western and trans-Pacific markets for distributing and consuming territory.

THE PRODUCT.

The new plant will have sixty looms and ten sets of cards, all of the machinery and equipment being the most modern and efficient type. It will have a capacity of 75,000 yards monthly, and provision will be made for largely increasing this capacity. For its size, Mr. Eyer declares this will be the equal of any woolen mill in the United States, and with its economies in wool costs, its lower production costs due to efficiency of the highest paid labor in the industry, and in the high quality of its products, will compete with the world's leaders.

Under the general heading of cassimeres, the main product of the Golden State Woolen Mills, will be high-grade all-wool suitings for men's and women's garments. These will be turned out in unlimited variety of patterns and colors and every style of finish, from the smoothest uniform cloth or broadcloth to the roughest tweeds, and the California woolens from these mills have already established a reputation for quality, design and stability of coloring, that has given them precedence in the clothing centers of the East, and also among makers of women's suits and women's tailors.

Overcoatings will also be a staple line; but in the case of these, as well as in the matter of suitings, there will be a change, in the way of specializing on weights, weaves, finishes and colorings specially adapted to California climate and demand, with the idea of catering first to the growing western population, which can take much more than the product of this mill.

Robes and blankets will form another line which will be fully covered, including automobile and steamer robes in great variety. Khaki army and steel-blue navy blankets now in demand for outings, will form a special product, supplemented with other styles of bed and camp blankets of various weights and colors.

The Golden State Woolen Mills will have its own agents in New York and Chicago, and will take care of its western and export sales from the Los Angeles offices. Trade with China, South America, the Hawaiian and Philippine Islands, which had secured footing before the fire, will be fostered on a more extensive scale, in line with the growing importance of Los Angeles in world trade.

GROWTH OF INDUSTRY.

This industry was established here only six years ago, and its business has grown from $166,000 in 1915, to $1,500,000 at the present time. Over $500,000 in orders were on hand at the time of the fire and the urgent portion of this business is being taken care of by the leasing and operating of a small mill at Santa Ana, for such portions of the orders as were adapted to its mechanical limitations.

Clarendon B. Eyer, president of the company, in reference to the enlarged scope of the woolen mills, expressed himself in the most enthusiastic terms regarding the advantages of Los Angeles in the manufacture of textiles and the commodities made from them.

FORESEES ADDITIONS.

"Undeniably, with the best of wool grown west of the Rockies and cheaply available, we have a 5 to 7 cent advantage in price. We have more productive labor because of the climate that makes every working day fully productive. We have the best labor in the country and it is the best paid, because it earns

ZONING WORK IS TO BE EXTENDED.

Will Provide for the Future Expansion of City.

Supervisors Pledge Aid to Planning Commission.

Subdivisions and Highway Systems Affected.

To co-ordinate the work of the City Planning Commission with the development of the county, and to bring about the proper improvement of the area outside of the city limits, but immediately contiguous to the city, arrangements have been completed between the commission and the Board of Supervisors through which these two bodies, working together, can devise means to provide adequately for the development of the entire district adjacent to Los Angeles. To further this plan, County Supervisors Cogswell and Woodley have been appointed to meet with the City Planning Commission, as well as with officials of the various communities within the county, to lay plans for zoning, preparing subdivisions which later may become part of the city, and the development of a system of major streets and highways so that the future development of the city will be unhampered. The movement will be a co-operative one, designed to permit the harmonious and adequate development of the entire territory from Monrovia westward to the sea.

"The city of Los Angeles," says G. Gordon Whitnall, secretary of the City Planning Commission, "for almost a year now has been grappling with some of the problems arising out of the lack of foresight in the past years.

"Prominent in this work has been the revision of all zoning legislation and the extending of it to include newly acquired territory. Of even greater importance has been the consideration given to the creation of an adequate highway system within the confines of the city. The acceptance of hundreds of new subdivisions both within and without the corporate limits of the city has also presented numerous problems.

"In dealing with the subject of zoning, experience demonstrated that the existence of arbitrary boundary lines prevented carrying the safeguards of zoning to certain territories equally entitled to such protection but outside the jurisdiction of the city. In the case of adjoining municipalities, it was demonstrated that great danger existed in the possible conflict of regulations imposed by different cities. Of peculiar interest was the discovery of the fact that, with Los Angeles zoned, adjoining cities which were unzoned would in effect be placed in the same category as the unrestricted area of Los Angeles. That these incongruous conditions might be obviated, it was early recognized that a unified effort on the part of all municipalities within the Greater Los Angeles district as well as county territory should combine under some plan in the administration of these zoning problems.

"The same necessity presented itself in the matter of subdivisions. Of prime consideration in accepting subdivisions is the matter of regulating street layout. It is readily conceivable how two adjoining cities might exercise their control very wisely within their own limits and at the same time make no provision for an adequate connection where their boundaries join. This planless method is even more apt to occur where municipalities at present are entirely separated but in the future undoubtedly be physically connected by solidly built up territory. Here again the need was recognized for a unified planning in the acceptance of subdivisions.

HIGHWAY SYSTEM.

"In the third subject, that of highways, the need for a unified program of development is even more apparent. Great systems of radial and connecting highways upon which the greater community is becoming more and more dependent can be very largely crippled by the unintentional lack of co-operation on the part of isolated governments when they do not provide for these links in such systems as may necessarily traverse their area. Probably no communities would wish to be eliminated from the benefits of such major traffic highways, but unless they have the means of being consistently acquainted with the plans of their municipal neighbors it is more than likely that they might lose much of their opportunity. For this reason also it has been felt that a co-operative movement in matters of city planning should be immediately instituted.

"That this apparent need might immediately be brought to an issue, the conditions were recently presented to the County Board of Supervisors with the suggestion that the board having jurisdiction over all of the district would be the proper body to call into conference representatives of the various municipalities in the Greater Los Angeles district, including also the county itself, through the Board of Supervisors. It was pointed out, with the flood of population flowing into Southern California, it is highly essential that everything possible be done to develop the district physically so as to permit it best to accommodate the growing population in all of its needs.

"There is little question but that the district west of Monrovia and south of the mountains to the ocean will in a very short time become built up solidly as a single city. That this development might be both orderly and adequate to take care of all future needs, it is absolutely essential that the various municipalities now within the confines of this district all work enthusiastically toward the same program. The communities cannot afford to further delay the creation of such a program and it was for this purpose and the further idea of carrying the program into effect that the suggestion for the creation of a Regional Conference was presented to the Board of Supervisors."

GROWERS OPTIMISTIC.

Outlook for Fruit Crop in Yucaipa Valley This Year is Good.

Yucaipa Valley's fruit crop this year, according to Carlin G. Smith, is growing under the most favorable circumstances in its history. The cherry crop is about picked, and the growers received an average of 15 cents per pound on the tree. The peach crop is just starting to move and the growers are receiving $1.50 per lug, f.o.b. Yucaipa.

L. A. Belden and William H. Hoefener, sales managers of Carlin G. Smith's 1000-acre tract, report that the apple crop in this tract is the best in the history of the valley. The rapid growth of the fruit has caused a large number of props to be used, and thinning is now under way. The entire fruit crop is three to four weeks earlier than usual, and growers optimistic.

Recent sales made in the 1000-acre tract at Yucaipa Valley, are reported as follows: To Irvin Thoades, nine acres, $300 per acre, to be planted to peaches and cherries; John T. Cunningham, twelve acres to be improved immediately, for $3324; Frank G. Davis, eight acres to be planted to apples, $2334; L. E. Garnet, ten acres, $1800.

BUILDING ON EAST NINTH STREET LEASED.

Through K. J. Wilson of the sales and leasing department of the W. Ross Campbell Company, the premises at 761 East Ninth street, owned by the United Cleaners & Dyers, Inc., have just been leased for a period of years to the Southern Pacific Picture Framing Company. The building, which is two stories in height, contains a store and loft. The new tenants, who have already taken possession, will conduct the business of picture framing, which they have, for several years, carried on at 841 South Los Angeles street.

TO OPEN NEW TRACT.

Fifth Unit of Belvedere Gardens Will Be Placed on Market Soon.

Another complete subdivision has been added to Belvedere Gardens, according to an announcement made by the Janss Investment Company. Four tracts are now comprised in this property, and plans are being formulated for the preparation of a fifth tract. Representatives of the Edison company and the Southern California Gas Company have made a census of Belvedere Gardens and reported that within the two months since the property was first opened, at the end of the Stephenson-avenue car line, 126 families had become residents. On the basis of this showing, the electric corporation is extending its wires into Belvedere Gardens, and the gas company will lay its mains as rapidly as possible.

Water is provided by the Belvedere Water Company, which is augmenting its supply by the development of new wells and the building of a reservoir with a capacity of 221,000 gallons. Many Elks were visitors at the Janss branch office at Belvedere Gardens, stopping on their way to and from eastern and southern points, reached by way of Whittier Boulevard.

Mr. Dean, who was 83 years old, came to California in 1849, served during the Civil War with the Eighteenth Michigan Volunteer Regiment, and later made his home in this city with his son.

RUBBER MAN BANKRUPT.

W. A. Jackson, doing business as the W. A. Jackson Rubber Company at 934 South Hill street, filed a petition in bankruptcy in the U. S. District Court yesterday, giving his debts as $5554.11, of which $3000 is secured. The assets are returned as $2850, of which $2800 is the alleged value of the stock in trade.

WEST LEADS COUNTRY IN FINE SCHOOLS

Architects Should Join in Better Building Movement, Says Local Leader.

"A beautiful school building can do more to develop a real love of architecture in its students than any books ever written."

So declares Howard Frost, president of the Los Angeles Pressed Brick Company, in a communication addressed to leading Southern California architects and builders urging participation in the national "better building" movement. Mr. Frost, who is taking a leading part in this movement, contends that California has advanced more rapidly than any of the other Western States in respect to the structural character of its educational buildings, because the authorities responsible for them realize that greater economy may be practiced through the erection of more enduring structures. This is notably so in Los Angeles, he says.

"The influence of a fine example of either scholastic or commercial architecture is none the less strong though exerted subconsciously," he points out. "The intelligent public is beginning to appreciate the advantage of living and working in an environment of finer buildings, constructed of better materials and designed from more attractive architectural models. The city which lacks this advantage is a loser in every way.

The better-buildings movement, which was organized among architects, builders and property owners in the larger cities of America, is in harmony with the aims of the Allied Architects' Association of Los Angeles recently formed by thirty-three of the leading members of that profession. It is intended to encourage the construction of better schools, banks, theaters, commercial structure and public buildings and to discourage flimsy, poorly designed structures of short-lived materials.

Exchange Spring Street Building for Cannery.

W. J. Kelly, local realty broker, yesterday announced the exchange of the two-story building at 118 to 121 South Spring street for W. W. Paden to Daisy M. Degelman for $150,000. The building located on the west side of Spring street, has a frontage of 100 feet, with a depth of 150 feet. As part payment Mr. Paden received a completely equipped canning plant, valued at $90,000, on the deep water channel at Wilmington, opposite the Catalina Island boat pier. The difference was adjusted with cash and a mortgage. The Spring-street property was taken over by Mrs. Degelman as an investment. Mr. Paden acquired the property about a month ago, according to Mr. Kelly, from the Roeder estate.

More Than Fifty Houses Are Sold in Twelve Days.

Evidence of a growing conviction among the people of Los Angeles that "now is a good time to buy or build homes" is contained in the report from the sales department of the Los Angeles Investment Company, which shows that in the first twelve days of July the company sold fifty-three houses and fifty-five lots in its various tracts in the southwestern part of the city. This breaks all previous company records.

W. H. Harrison, vice-president and general manager of the company, points out that the company's enlarged and comprehensive building program for 1921 is chiefly responsible for the increasing buying activity in the various subdivisions of this concern. The increased sale of lots, Mr. Harrison says, has been stimulated by the policy of the company which permits the building of company homes in one of the new southwestern tracts.

At a recent meeting of the officers and directors of the company Dan Murphy was elected second vice-president and director to succeed T. E. Gibbon, deceased. Mr. Murphy, for twenty-five years, has been identified with large industrial and financial affairs in Los Angeles and Southern California. He is a heavy stockholder in the company and his knowledge and experience in industry is expected to be a tremendously important factor in carrying out the expansion of the company's home-building activities.

BUSINESS SITE SOLD.

Ontario Man Will Improve Downtown Corner with New Structure.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

ONTARIO, July 16. — Among recent realty transactions of interest is that just closed, in which Dr. A. M. Witham, Ontario optometrist, purchased from Mrs. Ella Brown a business site at the northeast corner of Euclid avenue and B streets for a reported consideration of $10,000. The property has a frontage of forty-six feet on Euclid avenue and eighty-four feet on B street. The new owner is to be given possession of the property November 1, when the old frame structures now occupying the site, will be torn down and a modern business block erected. The property is one of the few remaining business corners of the Euclid-avenue business district not already occupied by modern structures.

NEW BUSINESS BUILDING AT WALNUT PARK.

Theater, Office and Stores in Structure to be Erected in Suburban Community.

Construction will soon start on the most ambitious commercial structure erected up to this time in the Walnut Park section of Los Angeles. It will be a modern pressed brick store, office and theater building of two stories and basement, with a frontage of 122 feet on Long Beach Boulevard and 160 feet on Florence avenue, at the hub of the new business district which will serve Walnut Park. The building will be erected for Sanders & Feaster of Huntington Park, at an estimated cost of $175,000 for structure and equipment. Architect A. H. McColloh prepared the plans.

Colored enamel brick manufactured at the plant of the Los Angeles Pressed Brick Company will be used for the exterior trim. At the entrance of the theater portion of the building will be an ornamental wrought iron and glass marquise. The theater will have a seating capacity of 1100, and will be equipped with a typhoon ventilating system and a $40,000 Wurlitzer pipe organ of the latest type. It will have tile floors throughout and hardwood interior trim. It is expected that one of the stores will be occupied by a drug company and another by a branch of one of the local banks.

The construction of this building will mark the initial step in the establishment of a new business center to meet the needs of the south portion of Huntington Park, Walnut Park, Cudahy, South Gate Gardens, Lynwood and the northern section of Compton. Rapid residential development within the past year has necessitated this improvement.

TO DEVELOP BIG TRACT IN PANAMA.

Syndicate of Local Men Closes Deal for 8000 Acres on West Coast.

Grant McCartney, president of the American Panama Development Company of this city, yesterday announced the purchase from S. V. Oballia of an additional 8000 acres of land in the Province of Chiriqui, Republic of Panama, which now makes that company's holdings on the isthmus total nearly 12,000 acres. Mr. McCartney also says that this corporation is investigating immediate options which involve a further addition of another 61,000 acres in Chiriqui.

The newly purchased area lies just west of David, the provincial capital of Chiriqui, extending along the harbor of Charco Azul, the main port of Panama on the Pacific Ocean west of the canal, and lies directly on the railroad of the Panama Sugar Company, which runs through to the main docks of the big harbor.

Practically a year's time in the development will be saved by the fact that over 1100 acres of the new tract are already cleared for planting. This section will be immediately placed under the supervision of I. P. Lorio, plantation manager in Chiriqui for the American Panama Development Company, who will start the planting of sugar cane within the next three weeks.

B. H. Nymeyer, general manager of the corporation, will leave Los Angeles about August 1 to superintend the erection of a big sugar mill on the new tract and to supervise the clearing of the remaining 7000 acres of its commercial mahogany and other valuable woods.

The American Panama Development Company, which has undertaken and financed this project, is constituted solely of Los Angeles capitalists, who are endeavoring to attain West Coast supremacy in Panamanian industries and the marketing of its two main constituents—sugar and valuable lumber.

New York capitalists states Mr. McCartney, have been mainly responsible for the development of the Atlantic Coast regions and it was their threatened expansion to the Pacific Slope, which furnished the impetus to the formation of the local corporation for the development of all areas on the West Coast of Panama in and around the ports shipping to New York, Louisiana and Los Angeles markets.

HOLDS PLACE ON WHITE SPOT MAP.

Marked Progress Shown by Santa Ana During the Past Two Weeks.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

SANTA ANA, July 16.—Santa Ana has maintained her place on the "White Spot" map during the past two weeks, a number of important projects having been launched here since the first of July.

Twenty building permits were issued during the week, aggregating $31,140. The Chamber of Commerce has decided to become incorporated in order to broaden its field of usefulness. The Southern Counties Gas Company has announced plans to spend $100,000 in Orange county improvements this fiscal year.

Five delegates, probably the largest delegation from a similar-sized city going such a great distance, are attending the Chicago national real estate convention. They are Everett A. White, Linn L. Shaw, Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Pope and H. E. Fisher.

The Nicholls-Loomis Company has started construction of a modern mill, warehouse and office building on Fruit street. The old buildings at Second and Broadway are being torn down.

Contractors are pouring concrete on eight-inch pavement on Main street, between First and Fourth, and work has been started on repaving all of North Main street from Fourth to the city limits.

L. A. Schlesinger, former theater owner here, has paid $20,000 for two-thirds of the oil rights on the R. B. Richey thirteen-acre place near Garden Grove.

R. E. Durbin of Long Beach will lease the new hotel at Fullerton and plans to move there pending erection of the structure. C. W. Gates of Long Beach recently purchased a fine lot on North Broadway and plans the erection of an apartment-house on the site. Building operations are to begin August 1 on a two-story brick block at North Main and Seventh streets, according to Dr. John Wehrly.

Preparing for the time when big business developments will take place on Broadway, from First to Fourth, Arnold Peek has bought a fifty-foot business lot on Broadway, near Second, for his future use. Clem & Summers are preparing to open a new lumber yard on West Fourth street at Artesia within a month. The cities of Santa Ana, Newport Beach, Orange, Anaheim, Fullerton, Huntington Beach and Brea show building permits of $2,400,000 this year to date, an increase of about $800,000 over the same period last year. Earl Mathis has sold his ten-acre grove of Valencia oranges on East First street to Burr Talbert for $60,000, or $6000 per acre. Plans are nearly completed for erecting the Y.W.C.A. "hut" on the high school grounds at a cost of between $6000 and $8000.

FACT AND COMMENT.

the past week, who, while in Los Angeles, escaped a part of the long protracted hot spell, which has held the East in its grip for almost five weeks, without surcease. To the visiting Elks, particularly those who come from the hot belt, the climate which they encountered here must have seemed ideal. And were they told that during the week Los Angeles was in the midst of a hot spell, they would probably have considered the statement merely the ebullition of the inveterate booster. Suffice it to say that the claims of the All-Year-Round Club, in its paid advertising will be supported by the word of mouth advertising of our thousands of visitors of the past week, who have had a taste of what Los Angeles is like in the summertime. The Elks have come and gone, but the result of their visit will probably be apparent for months to come.

A California Achievement.

The Los Angeles delegation to the convention of realty men in Chicago this past week, although comparatively small, has apparently made an impression among the thousands of realtors, who were present at the meeting. Probably the most tangible result of the entire convention is the fact that San Francisco has been selected as the convention city for 1922, and in the course of preparations for the big assemblage next year, a closer spirit of co-operation between the real estate men of the two cities will be developed than has heretofore existed. There will, moreover, be a decided gain for Los Angeles in the holding of the convention in the Bay City, for a great many of the delegates will pass through Los Angeles on the way to or from the convention—and it is a safe presumption that the Los Angeles Realty Board will not let these delegates pass through the city unnoticed.

TO ERECT BIG HARBOR PLANT.

more. We have every advantage that any other section enjoys, and many more that are peculiar to Southern California alone. It is unthinkable that we will continue to grow our wool here, add the cost of shipping our textiles to eastern factories to be made up into clothes, then add the cost of shipping the clothes back here, when there is a population subject to the Los Angeles market that can absorb the entire product of several factories as large as the largest and best of the eastern manufacturers.

"It is inevitable that we must and will have here the leading factories for making the highest grades of ready-to-wear for men, as well as for women, and there really ought to be a scramble among the leading eastern concerns to see which can be the first to beat the others to it in the establishment of a coast plant of the first magnitude for clothing manufacture.

"When I go East this fall, I expect to be fortified with all the necessary data for presenting these facts to the clothing trade in a way so convincing, that there must follow quickly the building of branch or independent enterprises for adding men's clothing on a scale equal to the largest and best of the East, to the industries of Southern California, for I can prove that our productive efficiency is nearly 20 per cent higher than the average, and that the same should be true in the clothing trade."

The capital of the new Golden State Woolen Mills is $500,000. It is a close corporation, controlled by its active officers, who are: Clarendon B. Eyer, president; V. R. G. Wilbur, secretary and general manager; W. K. Eyer, manager of sales. Local sales offices are at 746 South Los Angeles street and administrative offices are situated in the Van Nuys Building. The plant is located at Nadeau and Lucerne streets, Long Beach.

Work on the new buildings will begin at once, under the direction of the Austin Company, and it is hoped to have the new mills in operation by the first of the year. Unfortunately, textile machinery is not made in the West, and Mr. Wilbur leaves for the East in a few days to place orders for the machinery, of which there will be fully forty carloads, to be transported across the continent.

With the construction of the enlarged plant of the Golden State Woolen Mills, the plant of the Wayne Knitting Mills, and the prospective cotton sheeting mills and silk mills, the prediction of the Chamber of Commerce that 1921 is to be signalized as "Los Angeles' textile year" seems already in a fair way of fulfillment.

CHURCH SOON TO ERECT NEW HOME

then known as Fort street. Soon after the organization of the Immanuel Presbyterian Church, the First Church removed to Twentieth and Figueroa streets, where it is now located. Pending the erection of the present structure at Tenth and Figueroa streets, the Immanuel Presbyterian Church held services in Hanna College for about two years. The present church building has been in use for almost thirty years.

Dr. Herbert Booth Smith, pastor of the church, has held that office since 1916. Since the foundation of the church, its growth has been steady and consistent, and during the past year, the increase in membership has been rapid, more than 500 new members being received during this time. The church now has a total membership of approximately 3000.

Through a drive conducted a year ago, about half of the funds necessary for the erection of the new building was subscribed, and the remainder is assured, it is stated. Sufficient funds are in hand to start work immediately on the Sunday-school building, and the remainder is coming in at a rate which insures the erection of the remainder of the structure, it is stated. R. W. Poindexter is the chairman of the building committee, composed of about 100 of the church members, while C. M. Stowell is at the head of the plans committee.

New Stores For Western Avenue Site.

Work has just been started on a group of three new store buildings on the east side of Western avenue south of Melrose avenue for J. Harvey McCarthy, local realtor, and one of the prime movers in the business development of the Western avenue section. The improvements will represent an expenditure of approximately $60,000. The building is designed in a modified style of Italian architecture. Architect Aleck E. Curlett prepared the plans, and the De Luxe Building Company has the building contract.

The rapid growth of the Western avenue district in this vicinity within the last two years necessitated this improvement, according to Mr. McCarthy, who is building for investment. All three stores have been leased to retail firms.

-and a defective chimney started it

Are you one of these unfortunates?

EVERY day, week in and week out, a cherished home goes up in flames—homes that are costly and direly needed in these times of house shortage. A large percentage of these fires are caused by defective chimneys and flues. Are you certain your home is safe?

Flue Lining Is Insurance

and even though the brick in the chimney should fall out this fire-clay lining confines the sparks and flames which belch up your chimney. The average yearly loss in the United States from fire caused alone by defective chimneys and flues, amounts to $11,330,183. To sink it still deeper home, the fire losses in our own California from the same defective chimneys and flues amounts to $435,193 yearly. Surely you cannot afford to chance a contribution to this terrible toll by fire. It is a toll due alone to lack of foresight and preparedness. Fire clay flue lining will protect home and family and the cost is negligible.

We welcome inquiries concerning the cost and installation of flue lining. We wish to aid wherever possible in checking this huge waste.

BIG EXPOSITION IS NEXT EVENT.

Four Weeks of Preparation Only Remain.

Manufacturers Concentrating on Trade Show.

Carnival of Buying and Selling Comes Next Month.

With the Elks' Reunion and the impressive carnival in their honor now a memory, the next big event of general importance in which the entire city, and in fact all of Southern California, will join in telling the world about the why of the white spot, is the first annual Industrial Trades Exposition, which will be staged in the New Terminal Building at East Seventh and Alameda streets, beginning just four weeks from tomorrow and continuing for the week of August 15-20, inclusive.

Amusement and pleasure will not be lacking for the big Exposition, but serious business will be the chief motive of the great body of the city's guests and of their hosts as well. The entire West is to be given an object lesson in industrial, commercial and economic independence of the East and the traditions that have upheld much of the trade of that section with the Mountain and Coast States are to be wiped out, by demonstrating that Los Angeles, supported by all of Southern California, can make the same things for less money, can deliver them for less freight and in shorter time, and can furnish many things the East knows nothing of.

Not only will the local factories sell more goods during Exposition week than in any week of Los Angeles' history, but the foundation will be laid for permanent business connections that will mean new records of production and selling in all the future.

Responses are coming directly to the Chamber of Commerce, indicating genuine interest throughout the West and promising a large attendreport acceptances from hundreds repore acceptance from hundreds of their customers and leading hotels are already making reservations for buyers and their families, for all of whom a typical California good time is being prepared, in the way of mountain, valley, Orange Empire Oil City and seaside touring and entertainment, while the providers are getting familiar with the factories and their output.

While the Mountain and Coast States will furnish the crowds for the Exposition week, there will be delegations from practically every State in the Union, and foreign lands will also send their buyers to see what Los Angeles is producing. The recent foreign-trade convention at Cleveland brought many promises of business visits, which will materalize during the Exposition period, and the Realtors' convention at Chicago last week will be effective in crystallizing attention on "The New Industrial Giant" through the delegations from all sections of the country. All the Asiatic and Pacific Island consulates are spreading the news of Los Angeles' evolution into the industrial ranks as the tenth American city in production, from which is expected a strong representation of the trans-oceanic commercial interests.

SEEN AT WORK.

Already there are a number of interesting features promised in the way of actual working machinery within the exposition building.

The Federal Board for Vocational Training will show the work being done by the government in rehabilitating the maimed soldiers and fitting them for a place of usefulness and self-support in the industrial world. I. Colodney, Educational Director of the Division of Rehabilitation, has arranged to have a number of men engaged in the occupations in which they have been trained, showing how the government's system of training overcomes almost entirely the loss of limbs, or arms, or sight or other handicaps and makes apparently dependent men useful and capable of earning high salaries or wages.

This will be the first public exhibition on the Pacific Coast of the government's plan to salvage the large amount of fine physical and mental force that has been impaired in the service to the country, and will give many employers an opportunity to offer suitable work to men rehabilitated and made efficient in many vocations. During each day and evening of the Exposition some of these men will be engaged in operating various machines, factory and office devices, and it is asserted will do better work in some cases than those specially favored mentally and physically.

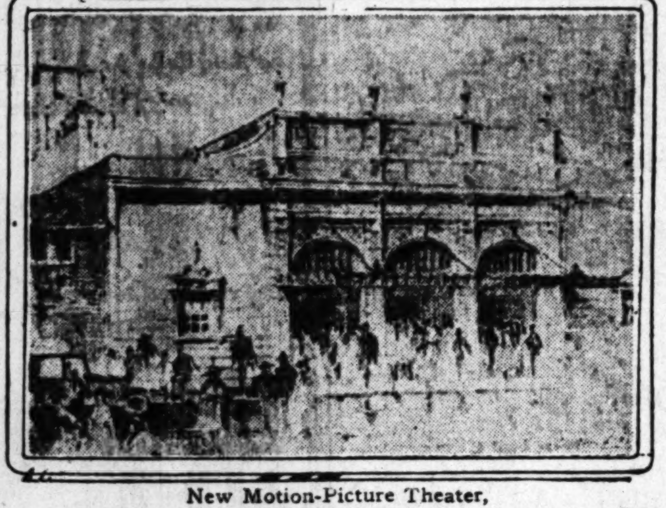
Clay working in many of the ceramic branches will be shown in operation, not only in the handling and manipulation of the clays, but in the preparation and mixing of the various components, necessary for different kinds of clay products. This feature will be under the auspices of the free public research laboratory established by the Alberhill Coal and Clay Company, whose engineers will be on hand to show what precedes the molding and spinning of the clays, before they get into the hands of the potters.

The making and grinding of optical lenses will be shown under the auspices of the manufacturing opticians of this city, which is the seat of not only a considerable optical grinding business, but some of the latest grinding machinery has its origin in this city.

The processes that have revolutionized the modern power laundry business will be shown in operation by a group of laundry owners. The weaving of reed and rattan furniture will be demonstrated by a group of young women operatives. Wood carvers will show the application of their art to the production of fancy furniture. Tin cans will be turned out at the rate of 200 or more a minute. Other lines will also show plants in actual operation and there will be much of genuine interest to the general public as well as to the buyers.

A series of lectures for the general public will go into the details of home building for the Southern California climate, especially aimed to assist those of modest means to get the most for every dollar in the way of domestic comfort, and other lectures will cover many of the points of distinction and eminence that make for the joy of living in the Southland.

Fine Playhouse for Alhambra.



New Motion-Picture Theater,

To be erected in near-by community for O. H. Schleusener by Walter Temple; Walker & Eisen, architects.

Fine Theater to be Built at Alhambra.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

ALHAMBRA, July 16.—Construction is to be started soon on the new theater to be erected on the north side of Main street, between Third and Fourth streets by Walter P. Temple. The general contract for the building, which with equipment, will represent a total investment of about $60,000, has been awarded to the Darrell Condley Company of Los Angeles.

The new theater will have a frontage of sixty feet on Main street, with a depth of 140 feet, and will have a seating capacity for about 850 people. The exterior will be finished, according to the plans prepared by Architects Walker and Eisen of Los Angeles, in cut stone, and the interior will be handled in the Egyptian style of architecture. Plans include rest rooms and lounge rooms for both men and women. The house will contain a full stage for dramatic performances, with fly galleries, orchestra pit and special lighting apparatus. A Wurlitzer pipe organ is also to be installed. A feature of the new theater will be made of the ventilation, the air, through the installation of a typhoon system, being completely changed every two minutes. O. H. Schleusener has leased the building and will operate the theater.

STORES AND FLATS.

George E. Talbert has the contract for the two-story frame store and flat building to be built at the corner of Hillhurst and Avacado avenues for Charles Frier. Plans were prepared by George M. Pardee.

why wouldn't they?

—why wouldn't the big business interests of Los Angeles "lay off" their building activity if they thought there was a chance to save money by waiting?

You can bet your bottom dollar they would. If they saw their way clear to save money by waiting—you know they'd wait!

They've got all the data and statistics at their finger tips—they've figured it all out in cold dollars and cents—they know they'd gain nothing by waiting—that NOW is the time to build!

Some folks have been figuring on building a home of their own, but have been waiting for prices to come down. But men who are regarded as authorities say that building prices are as low as they're going to be.

Everywhere you go you'll see business and industrial building going ahead.

Wouldn't they wait if they thought it would pay them to wait?

NOW* is the time to BUY or BUILD Your Home

"It's not a home—unless you own it."

JAPAN'S TRADE WITH THIS PORT

Consul to Kobe Tells Local Traders Facts.

Goods This City Can Ship to Mikado's Country.

Imperative Need of Personal Representation.

Erle R. Dickover, United States Vice-Consul to Kobe, the chief industrial port of Japan, will soon leave for his post, from this port. Meanwhile he is visiting among Southern California friends, and making his business headquarters with the foreign trade department of the Chamber of Commerce, through which appointments may be made for personal interviews.

As a native of Long Beach Mr. Dickover is naturally interested in the increase of trade with his Japanese station. He is making a superficial survey of local conditions and expresses himself as impressed with the big results possible to secure through energetic efforts properly directed.

COMMODITIES NEEDED.

"After a brief survey of the industries of Los Angeles," says Mr. Dickover, "it appears to me that the trade of this district with Japan is capable of considerable expansion.

"There is a large market in Japan for the following lines, all of which are produced in or near Los Angeles: Aluminum, asbestos products, chemicals (especially heavy or industrial chemicals,) drugs, dyestuffs, iron and steel products (including bars, rods, angles, rails, pipe, plates, sheets, tin plate, wire, bolts, washers, nails, reinforcing steel, ribbons, billets, pigs, etc.,) leather and leather products, machinery (especially iron and woodworking machinery, but including machinery of almost all descriptions,) petroleum products, (gasoline, kerosene, lubricating oils and greases,) tools (especially machine tools) and zinc products.

"There is a smaller market for such lines as asphaltum, automobiles and parts, belting, building paper and other construction materials, canned and preserved fruits and vegetables, confectionery, dental supplies, engines, flavoring extracts, hardware, ink (printing,) bearing metals, paints, paper, stoves, metal windows, etc.

"It should be remembered, however, that such goods will come into competition not only with similar goods from other parts of the United States, but also with goods from Germany, Great Britain and other parts of Europe.

"In foreign trade, of course, the factors which make Southern California a favored spot on the earth's surface do not apply, and the manufacturers of Los Angeles must compete in foreign markets on the basis of price and quality only. From the superficial survey which I have made, it appears that local industries are somewhat handicapped by high producing costs, which must be lowered before they can compete abroad with the industries of Europe and the eastern part of the United States.

PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES.

"The principal handicap to the expansion of the trade of Los Angeles in Japan, however, is the lack of representation. By representation I do not mean representation by chambers of commerce or similar organizations, but representation by business men themselves. In Kobe we have branches of trading firms from every important foreign trading center of the United States, including New York, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Seattle and Portland, but not one Los Angeles trading firm is established in either Kobe or Osaka and, as far as I am aware, there are none in Tokio or Yokohama.

"Without such direct representation by business men abroad, it is extremely difficult to introduce your goods, as inquiries for American goods are naturally sent by merchants to the more well-known producing centers. Los Angeles needs business men abroad to push the sale of Southern California products."

TO BUILD SUBSTATION.

Edison Company Buys Tract Near Porterville for Power Plant.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

PORTERVILLE, July 16.—For the purpose of providing for future power, the purchase of nearly five acres of land north of the power line just outside the city limits of Porterville has been reported by the Southern California Edison Company officials.

Plans for the erection of a substation on this ground will be made within a short time. Other plans of the company contemplate the conversion of the substation on Mill street into an office building and storeroom. This plan is directly connected with the 1922 budget whose expenditures call for expansion of company interests, totaling high into the millions of dollars.

BIG VINEYARD AT STRATHMORE SOLD.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

STRATHMORE, July 16.—One of the largest realty deals in this section for some time is that of an eighty-acre vineyard two miles east of Strathmore, formerly owned by Mrs. Sarilla Schoning of Hollywood and her brother, D. A. Shelden of Strathmore, which was transferred to J. W. Porter and Charles S. Haycraft of Fresno, and J. W. Porter, Jr., of San Francisco. These same parties recently purchased the 70-acre vineyard belonging to Frank Topham, in El Mirador. The consideration, while not given out, is understood to have been a very substantial figure. The sale was made by the Fox Ridge Realty Company of Lindsay. The new owners are vineyardists of long experience in Fresno county.

REDLANDS HOME SOLD.

Tract for New Public Park Is Deeded to City.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

REDLANDS, July 16.—Harry C. Deming has sold his beautiful home place on West Fern avenue, consisting of a bungalow and several lots, to William Vail. Mr. Deming has given possession and plans to go to Los Angeles for a time. He owns the Deming Hotel and a business block here. The city of Redlands has just received a deed from K. H. Wells, formerly of this city, but now of Hollywood for what is known as Pepper Park on East Central avenue near the intermediate school building. The city plans to improve the property for a park for that section.

SEVENTH-STREET STORE LEASED BY I. MAGNIN.

I. Magnin Co., now occupying a portion of the store at 327 West Seventh street, has closed a seven-year lease on the remainder of the first floor of the building, and will take possession of the property about August 1. The Emerson Shoe Stores, represented by Morris Mandel, which at present occupies the premises just leased by I. Magnin & Co., will remove to its new location at 746 South Broadway, upon which a long-term lease involving a consideration of $250,000 has been taken. The leasing of the Broadway location was handled by R. O. Brown of the W. Ross Campbell Company.

INDUSTRIAL BUILDINGS IN BIG LEAD.

Austin Company Enlarges Coast Offices; Southern California Tops List.

The Austin Company, which removed its Pacific Coast headquarters from San Francisco to Los Angeles, last January, because Southern California had become the center of coast industrial construction, in which form of building this company specializes, has now consummated the headquarters establishment at this point by removal to larger quarters on the third floor of the Pacific Electric Building.

Within the past week the staff of engineers and draughtsmen has been brought to the new office from the northern city and under the management of John Harnish, who heads the Pacific Coast organization, they are now at work on plans for no less than a dozen new industrial establishments, which are either under contract or in the earlier stages of preparation.

More industrial construction is either actually under way or under negotiation in Los Angeles and Southern California, than in all the other Coast States cities combined, according to Mr. Harnish, who quotes this fact as establishing the soundness of the judgment on which was based the removal of his company's headquarters to Los Angeles.

Greater efficiency of labor in Los Angeles is the leading factor behind the fact that industrial building is cheaper here than at any other point in the country. Brick in the wall here costs only 60 per cent of the average cost throughout the country, says Mr. Harnish, and it is entirely within the truth to say that the average saving in building costs here is not less than 20 per cent.

Mr. Harnish is also enthusiastic in his praise of the spirit of co-operation which is so evident in the functioning of the Chamber of Commerce and the Industrial Section of The Times, which he mentions as having direct bearing on the developments now so marked a feature of the new industrial spirit of the Southland.

Already finding it necessary to call in outside help for the building plans now under way, Mr. Harnish declares that it foreshadows a tremendous activity when the general situation throughout the country becomes relieved and production gets back on an even keel. His company is in touch with a large number of industrial projects among eastern producers that involve Pacific Coast branches, which will materialize when the financial world gets over its present depression.

NEED FIVE YEARS TO SOLVE HOUSE SHORTAGE

CITY'S GROWTH IN POPULATION NOW IN EXCESS OF HOME BUILDING, IS CLAIM.

From four to five years will be required for Los Angeles to overcome the house shortage at the present rate of home building in this city, according to conservative estimates of members of the Forward Los Angeles Movement, an organization of business men formed to encourage home building and home buying in Los Angeles.

It is claimed by Forward Movement experts that by taking the first six months of 1921 as a basis of calculation, when permits for nearly 6000 homes were issued, this number will have to be increased at least one-third in order to reach a normal condition in four years. The city's population is estimated to be increasing at the rate of 50,000 a year, and, therefore, it is becoming apparent, say Forward Movement experts, that there will have to be a considerable speeding up of home-building to keep pace with the city's growth.

Members of the organization also point out that in most calculations relative to the home shortage due consideration is not given to the phenomenal growth of manufacturing in Los Angeles. In 1920 the weekly pay roll in manufacturing alone in Los Angeles jumped to $4,216,071, as compared with $2,747,501 in 1919. The manufacturing output in 1920 reached the huge total of $788,652,885, as against $618,772,520 in 1919, and estimates for 1921 indicate that this year will show some substantial gains in spite of readjustments.

Since Jan. 1, 1920, it is estimated that approximately 600 new industries have located in Los Angeles, of which more than 150 located here in the first six months of 1921. Even the most enthusiastic and earnest members of the Forward Movement say that the matter of home buying or building is something that each family must figure out to its own satisfaction, but the organizations feels that it is doing a public service in urging upon Los Angeles families in a position to buy or build homes the necessity for action.

MOUNTAIN CLUB.

Architect Alfred F. Priest has prepared plans for a mountain club building to be built at La Crescenta for George Mills. The building will be 40x106 feet, with cobblestone retaining walls and pine exterior and interior trim.

NEW GARAGE LEASED.

The rental department of R. A. Rowan & Company reports the leasing for ten years of the new garage to be erected in connection with the projected store building at Ninth and Alvarado streets, to D. K. Hof and H. M. Osborne, for a total consideration of 47,500. A filling and accessory station will be located on the Ninth-street frontage, and a modern machine and repair shop will also be established. The lessees were formerly located at Seventh and Lebanon streets.

DAILY TRADE TALK.

Week in Review; Business and Traffic; News of the Busy Marts.

BY CHAPIN HALL.

It was a strenuous week for business men, although little strain was put upon business itself. In spite of frequent suspensions for parades and other incidental convention activities and notwithstanding the Saturday holiday there was a brisk retail trade throughout the week which naturally found its most complete expression in articles distinctive to the geography of the country. It is gratifying to record that there was no apparent attempt on the part of restaurateurs or shopkeepers to advance the already sufficiently high rates and profiteer from the thousands of guests.

While the weekly bank clearings and deposits are high there was little attempted in the way of new commitments. Only a few bond offers of minor importance were advanced, the stock market had the quietest week of the year, and between convention and vacations matters along the "street" were distinctly quiet.

In wholesale circles the same condition prevailed although there is evidence of early improvement and inquiries for fall delivery are being received in increasing numbers. The building program is well sustained, and while the prospects are for a few weeks of comparative quiet in some lines there is frequently expressed assurance that there is no more than a seasonal slowing down to be expected and that a business revival of parts may occur contemporaneously with the opening of the trade exposition next month.

LITTLE PRICE CHANGE.

Commodity prices have shown little change and the same is true of food costs. Dairy products are on a rising scale, and the middleman still seems to be "getting his." Apricots, for instance, which are 1½ to 3 cents in the grove, are around 8 cents in the Los Angeles markets, a range which is too wide for reasonable explanation.

At large, business conditions continue to change slowly, but each month shows some improvement. The country appears to be economically sound, and optimism is the prevailing keynote. It is a good time to again recall the advice once given by J. Pierpont Morgan to his son: "Be a bull on the future of the United States."

Government reports indicate a general reduction in the cost of living of 16.9 per cent during the past year, but the drops have not been even, and the man with the low-priced commodities has frequently suffered because the prices of things he had to buy have not declined at the same rate as the things he had to sell.

California crops as a whole are better than the ten-year average, and according to the Porterville Pioneer bank summary, conditions are so shaping themselves that better prices for farm products should develop with succeeding months.

COMMODITIES.

Reports from the department stores of the Pacific Coast, which handle most of the common commodities used by the general public, show that the average prices of all their goods have declined 14.2 per cent during the past year. Farm products, which began to drop a year ago, however, have shown much sharper declines, and figures on the first six months of this year tell the story of what has happened to the rancher. For example, wheat on January 1 was selling on a basis of 171 per cent as compared with the five-year average price just before the war. By a steady series of declines the price was down to 123 per cent by May 1, a drop of forty-eight points.

During the same period barley went down twenty-nine points, potatoes seventy points, hay thirty-eight points, butter seventeen points, cotton eighteen points, hogs nineteen points and beef cattle fourteen points. Present prices on barley, oats, cotton, potatoes, wool and horses are below the prewar five-year average price. Retail prices on dry goods, clothing, house furnishings, hardware and other department store commodities are still much above the prewar levels.

Evidence accumulates of increasing business in the commercial world and while it is still discounting the future is also beginning to cash in heavily on the present. Many of the readjustments entered upon within the last year have been completed and a foundation laid for a sane and stable revival of business. Considerable constructive work is already being done on this basis, one of the most significant facts being the improved credit situation.

BANKING SITUATION.

The ratio of gold and other lawful reserve money to deposits and notes outstanding held by the Federal Reserve banks is in excess of 60 per cent whereas a year ago it was less than 42 per cent. This improvement in the technical position of our banking situation is due largely to the inflow of gold from abroad which has increased holdings of the Federal Reserve system to more than $2,400,000,000 and the total stock of gold coin and bullion in the United States to more than $3,175,000,000, the largest in the history of the country.

There has also been a reduction of more than $1,000,000,000 in loans and invested assets of the Federal Reserve banks since November 5, 1920, when the peak was reached. As the low rate of 42 per cent was a forerunner of the business depression is it not fair to assume that the higher ratio is harbinger of sounder conditions?

When all is said and done Charles M. Schwab sums the matter up in this succinct phrase: "The world is five years in arrears in production, and the industrial machine must be set going again. We hear this and that theory of how to meet the situation, but we cannot pay the war bill by artificial means. We must settle down to work and produce for one another."

OUTGROWING PARADES.

The suggestion advanced yesterday by an inspector of police that the business district of Los Angeles should never again be closed as it has been during the past week found ready response in most quarters.

Even the retail merchants realize that such vast crowds as assembled on Broadway and other down-town streets Thursday and Friday are little stimulation to business. Certainly no such stimulation as offsets the property risk involved.

Los Angeles is too big to shut up able, and the ordinary routine has able, and the ordinary routine has been seriously disjointed. There is nothing inhospitable in such a declaration for guests and onlookers can be more comfortably and safely entertained and protected on other streets, Figueroa or Wilshire, for instance, where there is plenty of room for any number of persons and through which the pageants may wend their glorious way without delays and in perfect safety.

Had a serious fire broken out in the congested district during any of the parades or had any other untoward incident occurred resulting in a panic the loss of life and property might have been appalling.

Insurance companies and business interests generally are much interested in the proposition to keep Los Angeles' main business arteries open at all times, and if the Council heed the voice of wisdom there will never again be permitted the potentialities for tragedy such as put fear into the hearts of police and fire officials and other thinking people during the festivities of the week.

TRAFFIC PROBLEMS.

Another thing which the week has borne in upon us is the rapidly approaching crisis in the problem of traffic. It is probable that no great crowd was ever handled better than that which surged through our streets last week, but the fact remains that this city has outgrown her arteries, and when the normal resident and average transient population is augmented by 50,000 additional guests and several thousand itinerant automobiles the jam is terrific. Visitors from Philadelphia and New York say that it is worse than anything those cities have to contend with. Whatever the answer may be the business and civic leaders of the community will soon have to find an answer if the requirements of a rapidly growing population and expanding business district are to be met with anything approaching adequacy.

HE'S LOOSE AGAIN.

The official tail twister employed by San Francisco newspapers to bait Los Angeles is loose again. This time he tells of a "tremendous uprising, apparently extending all over Southern California, against the tyranny of Los Angeles which is alleged to be confiscating the Colorado River to its own selfish ends."

This inspired writer says that a declaration of independence is being drafted, and further, "the particular grievance which finally aroused those hitherto patient and much enduring communities is the alleged fact that Los Angeles, having gobbled up all the sources of power there are, proposes to deliver the entire undiminished product into the city of Los Angeles and not allow a wheel to turn elsewhere in all the vast Angeleno domain."

Well, Gee Whiz!

SUMMER SPORTS.

Among members of the City Club who, for business or other reasons, are unable to daily beside some cool stream high up among the Sierras, consolation is found in the new, though somewhat touching indoor sport, termed "Goblet Fishing." Each participant draws a glass of tapwater in which, as is well known, numerous little animals can be seen swimming around. The member who finds the least number in his glass wins.

THE COUNTRY OVER.

Georgia's Cheapest Cotton Crop; Better Missouri Conditions; Crops and Autos.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

ATLANTA (Ga.) July 16.—The cotton crop that will be picked this year will be the cheapest crop raised in the South since the Civil War. While it is feared that the crop will be small, owing to unfavorable weather conditions and the ravages of the boll weevil, these losses will be more than offset by the economies practiced by the farmers in its cultivation. Trade in naval stores, with steadily advancing prices, has helped business in the Yellow Pine Belt of the South. There has been an increasing demand for turpentine and rosin.

ST. LOUIS (Mo.) July 16.—Although trading is increasing slowly there are more substantial and sentimental indications of betterment in this section than at any time since the depression began. Business men, financiers and farmers feel that the danger point has passed. They seem to be less concerned as to whether the revival will come now, in the autumn, or next spring, as business and agricultural interests are finding bases on which they believe they are safe in laying their plans. Business men believe commerce will be fair this autumn with liquidated prices, the volume of business increasing constantly thereafter.

DETROIT (Mich.) July 16.—Prolonged hot weather has advanced crops in Southern Michigan and farmers have sent out calls for laborers. This has relieved the unemployment situation in the cities to some extent. Employmtnt in plants here showed a slight increase for the week, and motor production continues at about the same level with indications of relaxation rather than stimulation, during the remainder of the summer. Retailers are clearing summer goods with sales and stocks of hot weather merchandise are practically exhausted.

Wheat Finish Nearly at Its Lowest With Loss.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CHICAGO, July 16.—Weakness and lower prices for wheat and strength and a good advance in corn and oats attracted attention in the grain markets today. The finish on wheat was nearly the lowest, with losses of 1 to 2 cents, while corn was up 1½ to 2 cents, oats 1 to 1⅜ cents, and rye unchanged to ⅛ cent lower for the day. The most sensational news came from Russia, but it was like the crop news from the Northwest and had little effect.

It was a construction week in all grains, with broadening trade and a close well toward the best figures. Net gains for the week were 1¼ to 1⅜ cents on wheat, 3⅜ to 5 cents on corn, 4⅜ to 5⅜ cents on oats, 13¼ to 16 cents on rye and 6 cents on barley. Provisions moved up sharply, lard gaining 90 cents to $1, and pork 35 cents, compared with a week ago.

The foreign situation in wheat needs watching. Cables from Russia were the most alarming of the season. Drought and famine prevail in Central and Southern Russia and crops have been lost owing to intense heat. This removes Russia from the export class for this season, as had been expected by many close students of the wheat situation.

Black rust and blight reports from Manitoba and north Dakota, sent in by Snow and LeCount, were regarded as bullish, but the trade has had bad reports all week and is getting tired of them, so that only the most sensational count as a strong constructive price-making factor.

Traders on the whole, while favoring higher prices, were more intent on obtaining profits than on making new commitments, and a general selling movement was on, with September selling by the largest seller of Friday, while commission houses furnished the buying. A good business was on with buying of December and selling of September at 4 cents difference, and selling of September and buying of July at 1½ cents discount for the July. At the top July was $1.32, while the finish was $1.29 to $1.29½. September touched $1.36¼ and reacted 2½ cents, and December, after selling at $1.37½, was off 2½ cents at the finish.

Seaboard houses were good buyers and there was a fair export trade, with no figures mentioned. Export inquiries here were numerous, but no sales were reported although millers took 21,000 bushels. Primary receipts, week at 22,000,000, were the largest at this time in more than five years, and 6,814,000 bushels more than last year's.

Local traders with corn were active. The finish on July corn was 63½ cents, September 63¼ cents, and December 62½ cents, or a light recession from the top. Crop news was not especially changed from that of late, with reports mixed. News was not necessary, when the large volume of local buying was considered, as it made the market during the week strong.

An active business was on in oats, with an advance to the best prices on the present upturn, all futures being about 40 cents.

Rye was hard to buy and July sold at 3½ cents over wheat, an unprecedented condition at this season. Top prices were not entirely held.

GAIN OF 6 TO 16 POINTS: WIRE AND SPOT HOUSES SELL SOME BETTER.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NEW YORK, July 16.—Cotton prices started 4 to 9 points higher on buying by Wall street, based on bullish week-end statistics and improved textile situation. Wire and spot houses sold on better weather news from the belt, and this coused values to ease a little at the opening.

The market was quiet but firmer late in the morning on coverings and a little trade buying. The close was within a few points of the best, with tone firm at a net advance of 6 to 16 points.

Who Buys Bonds?

A District Manager

The district manager of a large eastern manufacturing concern is a client of ours. He answered an advertisement last spring in which we pointed out the exceptional opportunities available in bond investment.

This man must be out of the city a great deal and so transacts most of his business with us by mail. His orders usually read something like this:

"I notice you offer an issue of $1,500,000 First Mortgage Serial 8% Sinking Fund Gold Bonds for Babbitt Bros. Lands, Inc. I [illegible] studied the circular you sent me and [illegible] terms. The margin of safety is certainly [illegible] enough and their record of earnings is [illegible] I want three $1000 Bonds. Send [illegible] and I will forward check. Hold the [illegible] for me until I call for them."

This man is an experienced bond-buyer. [illegible] able to offer him a wide selection of [illegible] tractive securities and he relies upon our [illegible] mendations for assurance of safety.

Your answer to this advertisement may be your first step toward becoming a satisfied client of Blyth, Witter & Co. If you have money to invest it will pay you to send for a copy of "Investment Opportunities of Today" and ask for our recommendations.

The 6% Serial Bonds of the Laguna Irrigation District, due July 1, 1923, and 1932, inclusive, are now being offered for conservative investment. Note these important points:

2. Assessed valuation by official county records is $1,255,012.20, while the actual value is conservatively appraised at over 14 times all bonds authorized and outstanding.
3. Bonded debt per acre is but $7.16, which with one exception is the lowest debt per acre of any irrigation district in California.
4. This issue is a direct obligation of the district and is entirely exempt from California property tax and all Federal income taxes.

NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, July 16.—Barely 115,000 shares were turned over in today's stock market—the smallest daily total of the year.

Price movements were in keeping. Standard shares drifted idly within fractional limits. Short covering retrieved most small losses, except in the case of Atlantic Gulf common and preferred. The news indicated additional industrial readjustment. The International Harvester Company announced another cut in prices of tractors. Tool-steel schedules also were revised downward.

Trade reviews by commercial agencies emphasized buying for immediate needs pending more light on crop prospects. Wholesale distribution of merchandise increased with better collections.

Actual loans and discounts of clearinghouse banks for the week contracted slightly more than $55,000,000. Net demand deposits increased $35,000,000, and cash holdings were reduced by nearly $21,000,000, leaving excess reserves at little more than $13,000,000.

Government bonds, including Liberty issues, were steady, but rails, industrials and internationals were featureless on nominal dealings. Total sales, par value, were $3,125,000.

FINANCIAL AND TRADE REVIEW

The record is held at present by C. W. Sirch, who counted only sixteen in one glass. Although these animals, resembling small fish, are found in our city water in our homes, it is remarkable that they are borne to the thirteenth floor of the Chapman Building, home of the City Club.—[City Club Bulletin.

RENEW INVESTMENT.

Southern California Cities Service Company stockholders will be interested in the information which came from Dow, Jones & Company yesterday to the effect that Sir Edward Mackay Edgar, of Sparling Company, Ltd., of London stated just before he sailed for home, that he had concluded negotiations with the Cities Service Company, as a result of which his firm will renew its investment in that company.

BEG PARDON.

In discussing the consolidation of the Metropolitan and Southern California Loan Associations, the name of M. S. Hellman was inadvertently omitted as one of the vice-presidents. Mr. Hellman held a similar office in the Metropolitan and has been active in the upbuilding of that association.

LOS ANGELES STOCKS.

There was a moderate burst of activity in the closing session of the week, and some strength manifested in a few of the leaders. Union Oil sold up to 134.00, but the Delaware company was soft at 19.12½. General Petroleum was down to 86.50. In the industrials a scattering barrage of Edison went over around 93.50; Globe Grain & Milling, 46.00, and Goodyear preferred at 50.25 Los Angeles Investment was strong at 80 cents, Republic Petroleum around 31 cents and United Eastern at 2.38. The day's trading was in line with that of the rest of the week, and was decidedly innocuous.

TICKER TICKS.

Bradstreet's says continued downward trend does not seem to carry the depressing influence attached to it in previous periods.

National Conduit & Cable Company in receiver's hands.

Cities Service Company declared regular monthly dividends of 1½ per cent on common, and also half of 1 per cent on both classes of preferred, all payable in scrip.

Bradstreet's reports 310 commercial failures in the United States for the week, against 256 in the previous week and 139 a year ago.

Dun's review says it is possible to discern progress in some lines and current readjustments of one kind or another are regarded as shaping the way for the anticipated revival.

Average price twenty industrials 67.25, off .60; twenty rails 70.32, off .64.

Books will be opened for subscriptions to such amount of capital stock as present stockholders have consented to have offered to the public in the San Fernando Oil Corporation

which, in addition to its large holdings in the new San Fernando field, where its drilling well No. 1 has encountered enough oil sand and shale to warrant the belief that this company will develop a new oil field, has just secured a lease on only 540 yards from the Big Shell Gusher. The Signal Hill Syndicate well, only 125 yards from our line, struck the regular formation at about the same depth as the Shell well.

(The Signal Hill Syndicate, by the way, sold out, we understand, in three days its entire capital stock—about the same number of shares as we have left for present stockholders and public combined—and that stock, we are informed, is now being held at double the sale price. It sold at the same price at which our stock is being offered.)

The Signal Hill field bids fair to become one of the most prolific Gusher fields in Southern California and the San Fernando Oil Corporation is getting in at the very beginning and not after the flush production will have been drawn off.

There is no promotion stock in San Fernando Oil Corporation—every share being sold at par for cash and going into development.

Stock to Sell at Par, 10 Cents Per Share

These are the successful men who are managing the San Fernando oil Corporation:

W. Nelson Shell, president, Los Angeles.

Secretary and Manager Pac. Wood & Coal Company.

F. C. Noel, secretary, Los Angeles.

F. M. Strobridge, director, Los Angeles.

$630 on Every $100 Invested
You put yourself in a position to be a success

When you invest with people who merely hope, their position is no better than yours—and yours no better than theirs.

George Anderson is a successful Breckenridge Oil Producer.

Over $630 on every $100 invested is what George Anderson actually paid investors on his one well successes, Block 41 and Y.M.C.A. in BRECKENRIDGE. Gonzolus paid $1000 per month on every $100 invested. George Anderson knows how to choose producing oil property. He is now drilling his biggest proposition

HELLENIC OIL SYNDICATE

With 20 times as much acreage and 4 times as many wells as Block 41 or Y.M.C.A., or Gonzolus. Mr. Anderson believes he will pay Hellenic investors more money than ever before.
Hellenic is surrounded by big companies and big production.
Only 1500 units to share in Hellenic's oil.
It is being conducted on the famous Breckenridge unit plan where you buy oil and not stock.
Unit holders will be paid for their share of oil every 30 days just the same as George Anderson is paying now on his other winners.

A Full ⅞ of All the Oil

Goes to unit holders, less only the bare operating-expense after wells are producing. 7 barrels out of every 8; 14 out of every 16, etc. Hellenic's first well is drilling below 1600 feet. We have Hellenic units at $100 each. Call in person or send check for the amount of Hellenic's oil you want to own.

OPENINGS FOR FOREIGN TRADE.

Commerce Chamber Busy in Maritime Matters.

Argentine Representation by Local Firms.

Eyes of World Appear to be on Los Angeles.

From far Egypt, European points, Mexico and South America, the export-import news of the week filtering through the channels of the trade extension bureau of the Chamber of Commerce is of great interest to the maritime interests of Los Angeles. Of special importance is the announcement of a new line of steamships between this harbor and Mexican ports, to be instituted by British capital, and the actual placing of a Los Angeles direct representative in Buenos Aires. A resume of the high spots in the week's developments follows:

Dr. A. M. Monsanto, who was a resident of Buenos Aires for many years, but who has been living in Los Angeles recently, returned to Argentina yesterday, sailing on the steamship Pallas, taking with him the representation of a number of Los Angeles firms. Dr. Monsanto is enthusiastic over the future possibilities of trade between Los Angeles and Buenos Aires. He is well acquainted with the Buenos Aires markets, and his family has been residing there while he has been in Los Angeles.

With direct steamship connections between Los Angeles and the east coast of South America, which are given by the Pacific-Argentina-Brazil line, operated by Swayne & Hoyt, facilities for building up this trade are afforded. In recent months considerable imports have been coming this way from Argentina, but Los Angeles has shipped little down there, for the reason that the Argentine markets have been overstocked. The situation is now clearing up, and there seems to be good prospects of building up trade in the future.

Among the firms which Dr. Monsanto will represent in Argentina are the Moreland Motor Truck Co., Boyle Manufacturing Co., Sunset Paint Co., Petroleum Export Co., Los Vecinos, Pacific Ready Cut Homes, Germain Seed & Plant Co., Auto Theft Signal Co., and the Oriental Incense and Sunset Perfume Co.

FROM SWITZERLAND.

Visiting Los Angeles this week is Dr. H. Robert Welti, of Berne, Switzerland, who is one of a party sent from Switzerland to study economic questions in the United States. Dr. Welti is the only one of the party who came to the Pacific Coast. He is here to obtain information relative to what Los Angeles has to sell in Switzerland and what the market here is for such Swiss products as Swiss laces, cotton goods, watches and artificial silk. He calls attention to the fact that Switzerland is the only European country which maintained the status of its exchange and is now in a flourishing condition. Dr. Welti will remain in Los Angeles until Wednesday. He is stopping at the Hotel Rosslyn.

NEW LINE.

A recent letter received at the Trade Extension Department of the Chamber of Commerce from Capt. James Irvine of London states that the Clan Line has completed its plans for a steamship line to be operated between Los Angeles and Mexican ports by British capital, and will be ready for operation within a short time. Capt. Irvine stated that Major H. S. Winter and himself were leaving Liverpool on the Aquitania for Mexico the latter part of June and Maj. Winter will come on from Mexico to Los Angeles. Immediately on the return of Capt. Irvine to London the first three ships of the line are to be started for the West Coast, and ten weeks later the other three vessels will follow.

Maj. Winter expects to make Los Angeles his home. He will have charge of the operation of the line.

IN FRANCE.

Mr. Guillaume Lerolle, general agent of the Auxiliary Society of Agriculture and Industry of Southwestern France, writes the Chamber of Commerce that he will be in Los Angeles within a short time and desires to establish trade relations with wholesale grocery houses here. He represents a considerable number of French producers of food stuff.

The Quartermaster's office of the United States Army at San Antonio is advertising for sale at auction on July 21, a quantity of army supplies, including 60,000 pairs of jersey knit gloves, nearly 12,000 blue denim hats, nearly 5000 canvas leggings, and other supplies which the Army has at San Antonio.

The Quartermaster's office at Chicago also advertises for sealed bids to be opened July 26, for approximately 650,000 yards of 1¼-inch webbing, 280,000 yards of 2-inch webbing, nearly 16,000 yards of treated duck and 8700 yards duck khaki.

CUBAN RICE.

Dr. Jose S. Saenz, Consul for Cuba, has received a telegram from the Cuban delegation at Washington announcing that the embargo on rice in Cuba has been lifted. The port of Havana was so overloaded with rice last year that there was no way to unload it and many months have been required to clear all the surplus stock, but this has been done to the extent that Cuba is importing rice once more.

IN EGYPT.

The National Inquiry Office of Egypt, located at Cairo, offers its services through the Chamber of Commerce of Los Angeles to Los Angeles manufacturers and exporters who wish to obtain detailed reports on prospective buyers in Egypt and the Levant.

IN HILLHURST PARK.

William Mead, owner of the Hillhurst Park Tract, at the head of Vermont avenue, reports the sale of a large lot, with a frontage of 140 feet on Aberdeen avenue, and a depth of 300 feet, to Charles Seyler, Jr. The property extends from Aberdeen avenue to the boundary line of Griffith Park. Plans are now being prepared by the Frank Meline Company for a home of Italian architecture to be erected for Mr. Seyler on the property. Other recent sales in the tract are reported as follows: To H. A. Van Norman, superintendent of the Aqueduct, lot on Commonwealth avenue; Walter C. Hearn, assistant manager of the Mason Opera House, lot on Commonwealth avenue; Harry G. Cubbison, two lots on Commonwealth avenue; George R. Fargo, lot on Commonwealth avenue; Frank L. ORANGES.

LOS ANGELES, July 16.—The market on Valencias eased off toward the close of the week. The demand is a little lighter, particularly on small sizes. The expected cut in shipments failed to materialize because of the anxiety on the part of some growers to clean up on their remaining fruit. This brought total shipments for week up to 825 cars as against 583 cars the previous week. Shipments are now narrowing down to a few of the larger organizations in the field. Careful regulation will hold back the remaining supply of Valencias. It is expected that less than 100 cars daily will move during August.

All markets have been cleaning up in good shape. Decreasing shipments and consequent lighter offerings are expected to result in healthier market conditions by the middle of next week.

F.o.b. quotations continue on a basis of $3.75 per box for Orange county and $3.50 for outside districts.

The market on grapefruit eased off considerably the past week. Delivered prices are now on a basis of $4.50 to $5.

Growers report that orchard conditions have seldom been better than at the present time. The June drop has been normal, and unless unusual conditions should develop from this time on, a fine crop of fruit will remain on the trees. The heat of the past week is putting a finishing touch on the drop. The small fruit that would have eventually fallen off is coming off more rapidly, but none of the large, healthy fruit is falling.

Many growers believe that navels are advanced beyond the stage where the large, healthy fruit is susceptible to heat. From the present outlook they look for a bumper crop for the season of 1921-22.

LEMONS.

Excessive heat throughout the greater part of the Middle West and eastern markets has caused lemon prices to soar.

F.o.b. quotations are on a basis of $8.50 to $9 per box on best stock. Demand is active.

There are approximately 110,000 boxes of foreign lemons on hand and available within the next thirty days.

WEEKLY FINANCIAL REVIEW.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, July 16.—Developments of the week in the financial markets were not lacking in constructive features, but these were neutralized or offset by industrial conditions which precipitated further liquidation.

The statement of the Lackawanna Steel Company for the second quarter of the year disclosing an enormous shrinkage of earnings as compared with the 1920 period and further reduction of the operations and wages by other steel producers rendered those issues especially vulnerable to selling pressure.

Oils became more unstable Mexican conditions, but rallied partially on publication of President Harding's statement strongly disapproving the proposed import taxes in the tentative tariff schedule.

Rails, which manifested improvements during the previous week in connection with Secretary Mellon's plan to fund their obligations, fell back on reports that the necessary Congressional appropriations might fail.

Enormous sums of money were released from investment sources, but the demand was sufficient to keep call loans at 6 to 6½ per cent. The lower rate also applied to the time loans, although slight concessions were made where Liberty Bonds served as collateral.

Several new corporate offerings found a ready market, although subscriptions to the French loan promoted several months ago by a country-wide syndicate, were still obtainable.

An interesting feature of the international credit situation aside from the weakness of British and most other European exchanges, was the announcement that powerful European interests had started negotiations here for large loans. Estimates of this project range from fifty to one hundred million dollars and the proceeds are to be used primarily for the purchase of grains, cotton and copper.

LOS ANGELES OCEAN TRADE

Steady Growth of Port's Position is Indicated by April Report.

The latest report from the Board of Harbor Commissioners, on the tonnage passing through the Port of Los Angeles, has just been issued and covers details for the month of April, this year. The April report fills forty typewritten pages, from which some interesting facts and figures on exports and imports, have been compiled by the Trade Extension Bureau of the Chamber of Commerce.

The foreign imports more nearly equal exports, both as to tonnage and value, than they have before for many months. The imports amounted to 29,858 tons valued at $1,276,199, while the exports aggregated 33,068 tons, valued at $1,689,123.

The total business of the Los Angeles port in the month amounted to 322,452 tons, with a value of $16,706,857. This was an increase of 50,969 tons over April, 1920. According to Mr. Matson's compilations the imports came from thirty-one different countries, as follows:

Canada	$ 443,375
Argentina	121,002
Mexico	107,893
England	96,676
Belgium	94,945
Japan	66,774

Dutch East Indies	739
Panama	700
Ireland	630
Denmark	600
Switzerland	468
Czechoslovakia	364
Austria	192
French Africa	170
Total	$1,276,199

LEADING ITEMS.

The most important single item of import was print paper from Canada, amounting to 6,325,352 pounds, and with a value of $414,372.

The next important item in point of value, but the leading one in tonnage, was crude oil, brought in from Tampico, Mex. Notwithstanding the enormous production of California, Mexican oil amounting to 8,736,000 gallons, or 208,000 barrels, was imported for refining here. It was valued at $104,000, the value being the price at the port of exit.

It may be surprising to know that window glass was the third most important item imported here, notwithstanding our large glass factories in Southern California. This item amounted to 1,526,936 pounds, valued at $93,194. Nearly all of this came from the little country of Belgium, which sent us 1,389,632 pounds, valued at $86,291. The balance came from England.

Coffee imports were valued at $75,943, of which more than half is credited to Argentina, although Brazil is the great coffee producing country of the world. Argentina sent us 534,600 pounds valued at $46,623, and from Brazil we received 264,000 pounds, valued at $23,695. Colombia also sold us small lots.

Los Angeles also paid San Francisco approximately $119,000 for 502,000 pounds of coffee brought in by water. There is no record of the rail shipments, nor of the purchases elsewhere.

Cane sugar was an important item from Central America, 400,000 pounds coming from Costa Rica, 300,000 pounds from Guatemala, and 260,000 pounds from Nicaragua. The 960,000 pounds was valued at $50,430.

Pig iron amounting to 1100 tons, and valued at $41,669, came in from China.

It is a surprising fact that mica from Argentina was valued at $73,100. This is used in Los Angeles industries. The little country of Uruguay sent us 665 tons of dried blood and other fertilizers valued at $32,617. From Japan came most of the cotton cloth which we imported, about 145,000 square yards, valued at more than $28,000.

LOS ANGELES EXPORTS.

Thirty countries are listed among those to whom exports were shipped from Los Angeles in the month of April, as follows:

Japan	$ 682,826
China	553,576
Mexico	290,319
British India	46,088
Dutch East Indies	25,000
Canada	12,275
Colombia	12,043
England	11,438
Straits Settlements	9,744
Peru	8,530
Argentina	6,711
Salvador	4,574
Honduras	4,484
Panama	4,340
Hongkong	3,818
Nicaragua	3,422
Germany	2,127
Guatemala	1,950
Chile	1,647
Philippine Islands	1,185
French East Indies	828
Uruguay	620
Bolivia	500
Costa Rica	361
Ecuador	343
Egypt	125
Siam	100
Cuba	63
Japanese China	30
Poland	6
Total	$1,689,123

Our most important export in point of value was raw cotton, all of which went to Japan in April, although we frequently make large shipments to England. The April shipments amounted to 5,343,060 pounds, with a value of $666,794.

Still greater in point of tonnage was the kerosene exported to China. This amounted to 3,505,380 gallons, with a value of $552,626.

Oil well machinery was one of our important items of export, as Los Angeles has developed its industries along this line to a great degree. Our April exports of oil well machinery aggregated $129,852, of which $66,297 worth went to Mexico, $46,088 to British India, $9744 to the Straits Settlements and $7723 to Colombia.

Cotton cloth of various kinds also was an important export to Latin America. We shipped out 428,000 yards, valued at $73,000, most of which went to Mexico.

All told, Los Angeles shipped 213 different kinds of commodities to Mexico in April.

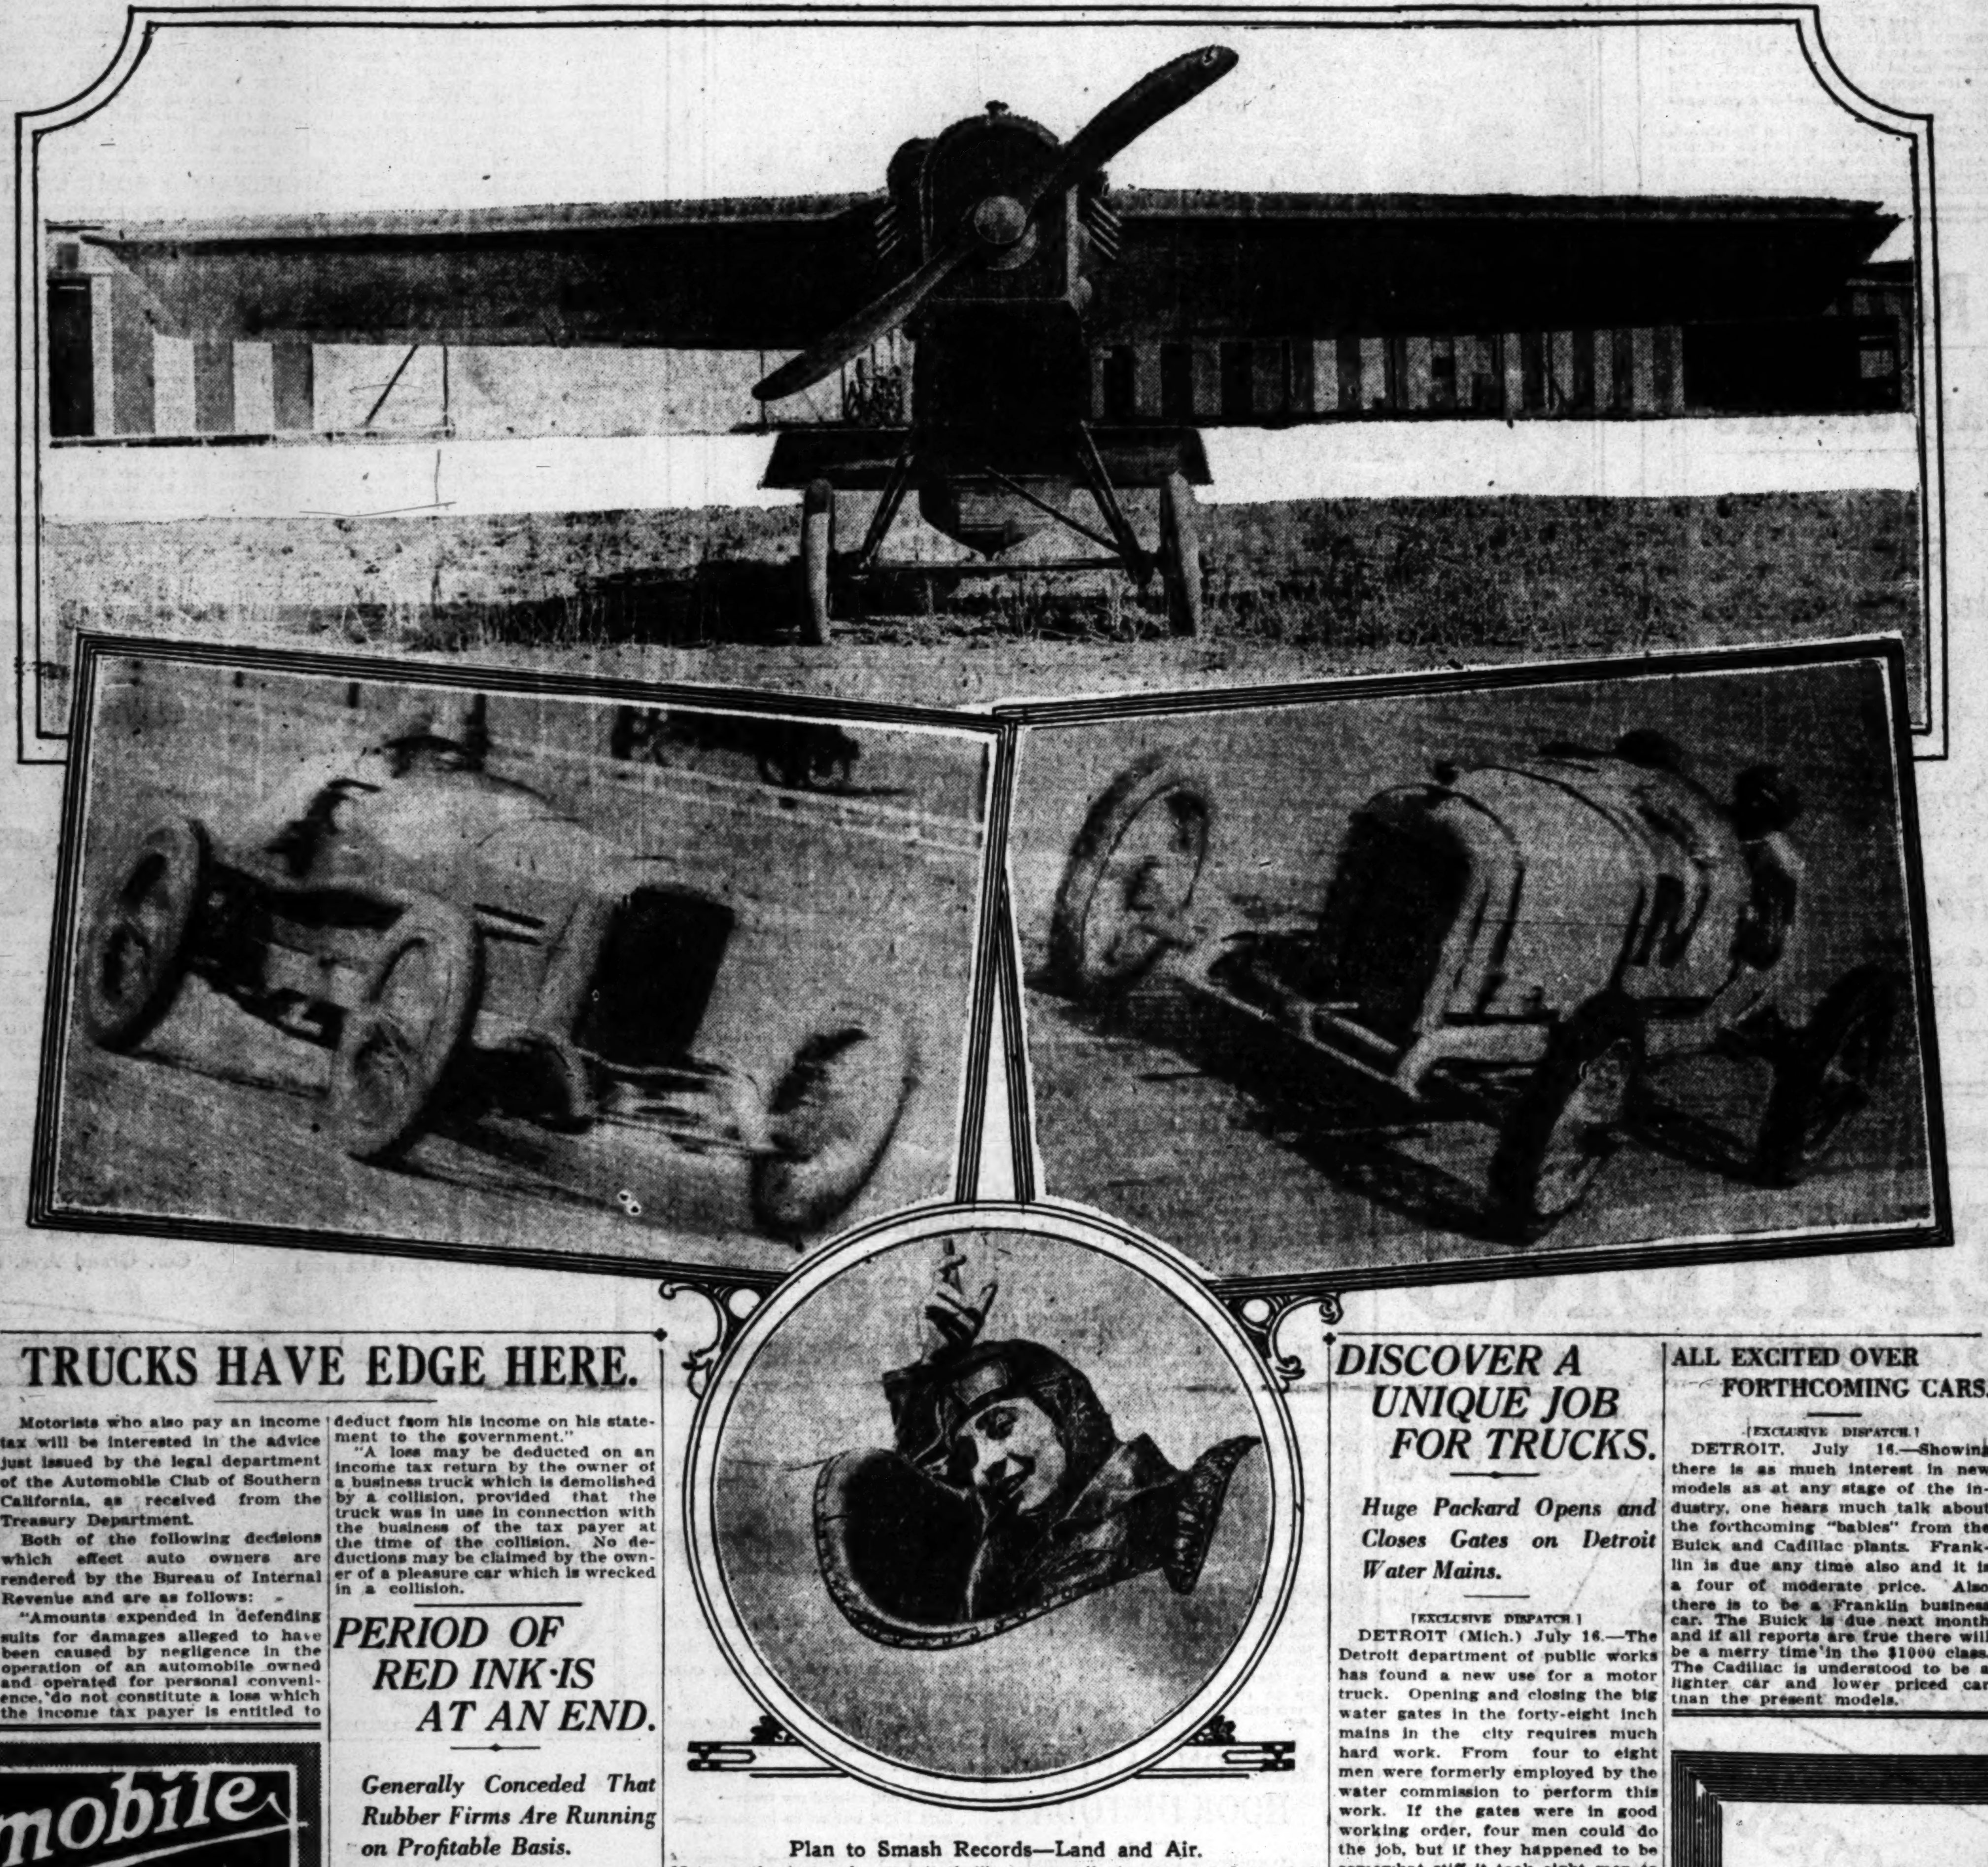
Airplanes and Motor Cars Combine in Wild Speed Carnival at Beverly.



Plan to Smash Records—Land and Air.

Motor enthusiasts who permit thrills to go galloping up and down their backbones will have their chance at the Beverly Hills Speedway this afternoon. Above, one of the sleek little racing monoplanes which will take a leading part in the final day of the international air meet. Below (left,) Tommy Milton and his speedy go-fast with which he will try to shove Roscoe Sarles (right) through the guard rails and into oblivion in the famous motor duet for the title of champion driver. At the bottom is a fair aviation fan who may take the stick in one of the fast airplane races. Taking it all in all, today should be a very large one in the vicinity of Beverly Hills.

TRUCKS HAVE EDGE HERE.

Motorists who also pay an income tax will be interested in the advice just issued by the legal department of the Automobile Club of Southern California, as received from the Treasury Department.

Both of the following decisions which effect auto owners are rendered by the Bureau of Internal Revenue and are as follows:

"Amounts expended in defending suits for damages alleged to have been caused by negligence in the operation of an automobile owned and operated for personal convenience, do not constitute a loss which the income tax payer is entitled to deduct from his income on his statement to the government."

"A loss may be deducted on an income tax return by the owner of a business truck which is demolished by a collision, provided that the truck was in use in connection with the business of the tax payer at the time of the collision. No deductions may be claimed by the owner of a pleasure car which is wrecked in a collision.

PERIOD OF RED INK IS AT AN END.

Generally Conceded That Rubber Firms Are Running on Profitable Basis.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

AKRON (O.) July 16.—The Akron rubber companies have entered the second half of 1921 on a money-making basis. This is the consensus of banking and brokers' opinion in the city although no definite statement to that effect can be obtained from the manufacturers themselves.

LOOKS BETTER.

When approached with the direct question: "Is your company making money?" the heads of the large concerns invariably smile and immediately turn the conversation into other channels. However, the bankers and brokers who naturally watch the industry very closely are convinced on the present production basis with decreased costs of labor and a greatly decreased overhead that the industry has gotten back to the stage where in the future the stockholders may again look for their dividend checks.

Just when these checks will again come to hand is a wide question, because, since they have once stopped payment, they will not resume until their indebtedness is worked off.

However, the general feeling that the business now going through the factories is of a profitable nature has done much in banking circles to add to the tone of optimism which has been current for the past two months. If it has done nothing else it has stopped one well-known banker from asking in an injured tone of voice when approached for money from saying: "Money? What do you mean—money?"

A CHANGE NOW.

His invariable answer to questions for funds had become almost a household expression in the city, but during the past two weeks he has dropped his injured tone and is giving the request serious consideration.

That the larger companies should be making money is not unreasonable because their production is now at better than an average of 70 per cent of normal, and it can be stated frankly that there is not an individual on the pay roll who has not an active part in making this money.

In some quarters the office forces are referred to as skeletons of the previous organizations, but the truth of the matter is that the reduction in office personnel has pro-

MILTON AND SARLES IN RACE FOR TITLE TODAY.

Two "High Men" in Automobile Speed Circles Meet in Motor Duet at Beverly Hills.

FACTS ABOUT THE MOTOR DUET.

Time—Today; first heat at 2:15 p.m.
Place — Beverly Hills Speedway.
Contestants—Tommy Milton and Roscoe Sarles.
Event — Championship motor race.
Stake — Title and $10,000 purse.
Heats—Two ten-mile and twenty-five-mile final.

All is set for the gasoline "battle of the century"—the match race between Champion Tommy Milton and Contender Roscoe Sarles at the Beverly Hills Speedway this afternoon.

Sarles thinks he can trim Tommy any time he wants to. Milton looks on Sarles as his especial mark. So little does each driver think of the other that the $10,000 purse hung up by the Speedway management will be split only one way—all to the winner. Also, a mere trifle of 500 bucks will be bet on each man on each heat. Rather poor day's work for the winner—$11,500.

GROWING STEADILY.

The Milton-Sarles imbroglio has been growing steadily since last spring, when Roscoe started the ball rolling by winning the opening race of 1921 at the local Speedway. Tommy more than evened up by copping the big prize at Indianapolis, with Roscoe right on his heels for second dough.

Uniontown spelled victory for Sarles, and Tacoma brought Milton the $10,000 that went to the winner, with Sarles grabbing second money. Then the match race was proposed, and brings the speedway feud right down to date and the meeting this afternoon.

Sarles and Milton have been unusually agreeable to most of the details of their meeting. When it came to talking about splitting the purse they couldn't see any loser's end. Pat Higgins was the unanimous choice for referee. Two ten-mile heats and a twenty-five-mile dash were also satisfactory. And, finally, both agreed that all three heats

DISCOVER A UNIQUE JOB FOR TRUCKS.

Huge Packard Opens and Closes Gates on Detroit Water Mains.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

DETROIT (Mich.) July 16.—The Detroit department of public works has found a new use for a motor truck. Opening and closing the big water gates in the forty-eight inch mains in the city requires much hard work. From four to eight men were formerly employed by the water commission to perform this work. If the gates were in good working order, four men could do the job, but if they happened to be somewhat stiff it took eight men to get them started. Frequently the gates could not be closed until thousands of gallons of water had been wasted.

Recently a two-ton Packard truck owned by the water-commission was equipped with a power key, designed to open and close the water gates. The truck is capable of a speed of twenty miles an hour, and the power key is operated by a take-off from the transmission.

Only two men are required on the truck in its daily work. It reaches the gate boxes quickly and shuts off the water in a fraction of the time required by men operating a hand key.

New Motor Law Now in Effect in Auto State.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

LANSING (Mich.) July 16.—Blank applications for certificates of title of motor vehicles are being mailed to all automobile owners and other vehicle owners throughout Michigan by the Secretary of State's office. The fee for this certificate is $1. This action is in accordance with the Condon law passed at the regular session of the 1921 Legislature. After July 1, 1922, no certificate of registration of any other motor vehicle will be issued by the Secretary of State unless the applicant has made proof of and obtained this certificate of title to the car for which he desires a license.

After Oct. 1, 1921, no transfer of any kind for any car can be made without such a certificate of ownership and the proper transfer of that title, according to the new law, at the same time. Violation of this provision will entail a penalty of a fine of not more than $1000 or imprisonment in a State prison not more than ten years, or both.

The purpose of the new law is to protect owners of motor vehicles and is expected to stop the traffic in stolen cars.

ALL EXCITED OVER FORTHCOMING CARS.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

DETROIT, July 16.—Showing there is as much interest in new models as at any stage of the industry, one hears much talk about the forthcoming "babies" from the Buick and Cadillac plants. Franklin is due any time also and it is a four of moderate price. Also there is to be a Franklin business car. The Buick is due next month and if all reports are true there will be a merry time in the $1000 class. The Cadillac is understood to be a lighter car and lower priced car than the present models.

HERE'S A TEST FOR MOTORISTS.

Do You Study Country as You Drive Through It?

Auto Club Emphatically Says You do Not.

Try These Questions Over in Your Spare Time

Motorists who tour California—the most motorized State in the Union—do not register in memory tests, say officials of the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

Not that all auto owners are dumb-bells, says the club, but that the average pilot of a road-going auto does not pay any attention to the places through which he passes.

REAL EDUCATION.

So a real education has been prepared by the experts of the club touring bureau for every automobile owner in the State in a list of questions which rivals that prepared by Thomas A. Edison.

If you can answer thirty-five of the following questions, you are entitled to first rank as a motorist. If you can't answer more than ten—you are very rank as a motorist! But if you can answer 25 or 50 per cent, you are safe to be trusted out on the public roads. If you are in doubt about any of them the Auto Club will be glad to set you right. Here are the brain-teasers—go to it:

HERE THEY ARE.

LEXINGTON IS GOING STRONG.

Makes Hills at San Diego Look Almost Level.

Mt. Helix is Negotiated in High Gear.

Hairpin Turns and Grades Fail to Halt It.

Not content with shattering hill-climbing records here, the Lexington has sought out other notorious grades to conquer. A few days ago Mt. Helix, famous as San Diego's Rubidoux, was negotiated on high gear by a stock car of the minuteman six tribe, driven by Francis C. Davidson of the Lexington Los Angeles Company, local distributors.

To say that a certain motor car climbs a certain hill on high doesn't particularly mean anything, but when it is shown that that hill has a grade varying from 10 to 25 per cent and that there are four demoralizing hairpin turns of 20 per cent grade between the bottom and the top, then the feat assumes championship proportions. In addition to conquering these grade difficulties on the Mt. Helix incline, three-fourths of a mile east of San Diego, the Lexington had to cover an actual distance of two miles and 1080 feet to reach an altitude of 1380 feet. The entire uphill stretch was covered in the remarkable time of five and one-half minutes.

The authenticity of the feat is attested to by A. W. Rosche of the Automobile Club of Southern California, southern branch; Neil D. Anderson of the San Diego Tribune and John W. Swallow of the San Diego Union, who officiated as observers. Immediately after climbing Mt. Helix, the Lexington negotiated a speed of sixty-seven miles an hour on a straight stretch of level boulevard.

LOOK AT BATTERY TERMINALS.

Did you ever wonder why the engine does not show the accustomed pep or why the lights burn dimly or the ignition seems poor? Unfasten the wires and bare at the battery terminals and notice if they are clean. They must be clean if current is to flow freely. Scrape off with a stick any green or white deposit you see and spread a little cup grease over the parts to prevent corrosion.

WHITE AUTO COMPANY

WEST 271

Can't Seem to Pack Enough People in to Stop It.

An Oldsmobile Four carrying fourteen passengers up the West Sixth-street hill. The car was turning into Loomis street, the steepest part of the climb, just as the picture was taken. The Oldsmobile made the turn and on to the top of the grade without a murmur despite its tremendous load.

ISN'T WORRIED BY BIG EXTRA LOADS.

FOURTEEN MEN ARE NOTHING AT ALL FOR THE NEW OLDS FOUR.

A Detroit automobile dealer, anxious to do something worth while, and not having the necessary hills at hand, such as we have here, staged a stunt recently that gave the Los Angeles representative of the same automobile, an idea going the Detroiter one better.

In the eastern city hills are at a premium and the dealer, having seen pictures of what J. W. Leavitt & Co., had done here on the Pacific Coast to prove the wonderful power of the Oldmobile four, piled a total of twenty-four passengers on his car and drove it up a very slight grade.

Sales Manager Clair R. Savage of the local J. W. Leavitt house does not like to copy other people's ideas, so he decided to try out the four on West Sixth, with a big load. The gradient from Figueroa street to Loomis is quite steep enough for any car, but while the majority have little or no difficulty in making the hill on high, it is a good, hard climb nevertheless. When you make the sharp turn to the right on Loomis street, however, and then continue on up to the continuation of Sixth street, the grade looms up as a rather tough proposition, especially with the sharp, right-angle turn figured in.

Savage loaded a dozen of his husky salesmen in and on the little four and made the summit, including the short turn, without the slightest trouble. Encouraged by the wonderful performance on such a severe test, but with all his spare salesmen used up, Savage hailed a couple of workmen on their way to work, and impressed them into service. Again the little four rolled up Sixth, across Figueroa, up and up to the Loomis-street turn, and then on, still upward, without a falter.

should be run, because of the side bet connected therewith.

ROUGH RIDING.

Immediately on his appointment as referee, Higgins announced several rules that it behooves the drivers to live up to. For one thing, Pat is outspoken against rough riding, and promised the first driver to pull any rough stuff "the gate." Neither Roscoe nor Tommy is going to take chances with a lot of money and a flock of glory by getting too close to the other guy.

The gasoline hounds are all predicting a sure world's record in one or the other of the ten-mile heats, and also pretty good chances for a shattered mark in the twenty-five-mile division. The regular electrical timer will be used, along with ten stop watches to record the time in case anything happens to the mechanical recorder.

TO WAVE FLAG.

George Adair will get the rivals under way in their first heat, when the clock hits 2:15 o'clock. The second section will be called at 3:15, and the final at 4 o'clock. In between, the demon aviators, who are performing in the international air tourney, will show the crowd some of their spine chillers.

Betting on the match has been brisk, with Sarles a slight favorite to win the two short heats, at least. Roscoe has the greatest personal following of any driver who ever appeared here, while the hard-boiled betters refuse to pass up Milton after taking a slant at his record.

The plan of battle has been announced by each man, and spells s p e e d. Heavy-footed Roscoe and treat-'em-rough Tommy will try to push their throttles through the floor boards, and nothing like a few curves is going to slow up either man.

STREET OBSTRUCTIONS COME UNDER THE BAN.

Carelessness on the part of building contractors or street improvement contractors is causing motorists a lot of worry in Southern California cities.

Numerous complaints have been registered with the Automobile Club of Southern California by autoists who run into piles of sand and lumber piled in the streets in front of new buildings without any lights to indicate their location.

Better business will mean greater car sales, which in turn will mean greater tire sales. Better railroad business will mean increased production in mechanical rubber goods departments and general increase in truck tires as well as pneumatic tires.

of the Ver Linden division of the Durant Motors, Inc., of Lansing.

In his statement Mr. Ver Linden sets forth that he was under a special contract during the past three years, which entitled him to special compensation. The dispute arose over the net income of the corporation, upon which the special compensation was to be based this year. Mr. Ver Linden says that the report for the fiscal year showed a net income of $93,150,308 for the corporation, but the General Motors claims that, after all proper deductions had been made, the income was $32,000,000. The statement further says that, under the contract, any stock due Mr. Ver Linden was to be delivered when his services with the company were ended.

Following a custom agreed to by the General Motors, it is claimed, Mr. Ver Linden advanced to himself a certain sum of money, and notified President Pierre S. DuPont of his action. He also notified Mr. DuPont that upon the delivery of his stock to him he would pay the corporation any money drawn by him because of the stock held by the corporation. The corporation has never delivered or offered to deliver the stock, Mr. Ver Linden maintains. He says the suit will bring about the adjustment that he has long sought.

Writs of garnishment have been issued against sums credited to Mr. Ver Linden in Lansing banks.

Busting Speed Marks in East.

Everything Worth Shooting At.

Baker has again with the Templar and has already to his list of runs, according to a bulletin just received from the factory at Cleveland by the Boulevard Motors Corporation, Templar distributor for Southern California.

Driving the Templar Recruiter, the same car with which he broke the trans continental record between New York and Los Angeles last summer and later established a new Three Flag record between Tia Juana and Blaine, Wash., on July 5 he smashed the Buffalo-Rochester record, making a distance of seventy-six miles in eighty-six minutes. The route covered fourteen railroad crossings and included sixty-eight curves.

"We are advised that Baker is out for a bunch of new records this year and he is driving the same car that drew much attention in this city last year," said Foulke. "The Templar now holds the New York to Philadelphia, New York to Chicago, New York to Los Angeles, Three Flag and the Buffalo-Rochester records. It already appears that before Baker gets through, he will have everything on his string that is worth shooting at."

CANAVAN IS APPOINTED COAST BOSS.

Is Awarded Pacific Territory for Famous Electric Vehicles.

An announcement of more than ordinary interest to members of the motor-truck industry is that of the Walker Vehicle Company, America's largest manufacturer of electric trucks and tractors, in the appointment of J. Jerome Canavan as Pacific Coast representative for that organization. Mr. Canavan has been in the East for the past several weeks in attendance at the annual convention of Walker branch managers and distributors and has just returned to Los Angeles.

In commenting on his appointment as Pacific Coast representative for the Walker product, Mr. Canavan stated it required persuasive arguments to convince the officials of the Walker organization that Los Angeles was the capital of the Pacific Coast and the logical distributing point for their product. Facts, figures and arguments finally prevailed and Mr. Canavan will continue having his headquarters in Los Angeles and will make occasional trips to San Francisco, Portland and Seattle for the purpose of visiting Walker dealers in the northern cities.

Walker electric trucks are firmly established in San Francisco, according to Mr. Canavan. The Old Homestead Baking Company of that city is now operating twenty-nine Walker trucks in its delivery service and Walker product is used by practically all the large bakeries in the northern city.

Weather Grouch Solves Problem With Automobile

Although the weather has been bandied about as a last-resort topic of conversation for ages and ages it is never quite taboo, and you can always bring it in some new way. This was the declaration made to a group of automobile salesmen the other day by F. E. Lewis of the Lewis-Hilliard Company, distributors for the Handley Knight motor car. He went on to say:

"You've met these people that are eternally grumbling about the weather. Well I knew a man once who was extraordinarily grouchy in this respect. It was nearly always either too hot or too cold; it seemed he couldn't be suited with any brand of temperature in the whole almanac.

"For a time he tried to get relief by traveling from clime to clime via the railroad Pullman. But he didn't like to ride on the train and finally settled down and divided his residence between a six months' sojourn in the North and another six months in the South.

"Then he tried motoring. And now you wouldn't recognize him as the same man. In summer, whenever the weather gets a little too hot to suit him he packs off to the mountains in his sedan, traveling just as comfortably as he would by train, without the accompanying inconveniences of conflicting and erratic train schedules and smelly taxicabs between times.

"As he describes it, he can go when he pleases and come when he pleases and stay as long as he pleases."

HERE'S AN AUTOIST WITH LOTS OF CRUST.

W. A. White, who bought a car in 1914, has driven in the neighborhood of 125,000 miles, including trips to Mexico and the Rocky Mountains. During all this mileage he had never looked at his brake lining—which was Raybestos—until recently he discovered that his brakes were not holding as well as usual. Believing that he was entitled to more than 250,000 miles, he sent the lining to the Raybestos Company, with a letter asking for a replacement.

The audacity of the request was such that the factory not only sent a new lining free, but also included a new clutch facing as well, thinking that he might need it in the next 125,000 miles or so.

MAKING BRAKE ADJUSTMENTS.

In taking up on the brakes does not always remove the slack at the same place. There usually are two or three places in the brake assembly where a "take-up" is possible, and each time the brakes are adjusted a different place should be used. The first time take up the rods at the rear, the next time at the brake bands, etc.

CALIFORNIA AUTO TRADE SURPASSES.

DECLARES SITUATION IN THIS STATE IS BETTER THAN ANY IN NATION.

"Business in the automobile trade in California is in better condition now than in any other part of the United States."

This is the word sent to Harry Mason from the north by Robert W. Martland, secretary-manager of the California Automobile Trade Association, which consists of 3000 members throughout the State, organized to give the motoring public a square deal in the matter of automobile repairs and sales.

"I have just made a complete tour of California, and have talked with hundreds of big business men who have made trips East, looking over business conditions," says Martland.

"They declare that California is the brightest spot in the business world today, especially the automotive industry. Manufacturers and dealers throughout the country are looking to California to absorb a larger part of the automotive equipment of the country this year.

"California business is going ahead rapidly. The south is busier than the north, but all look for increasing business during the summer and autumn.

"I find that more and more motorists are looking for the insignia of the California Automobile Trade Association, before they leave their cars for repairs, or storage. They are learning that garagemen and dealers who display this insignia, of the wheel and radiator, are doing business on a business basis, and not overcharging.

"Business is better now than it was a few months ago, and is increasing day by day."

POLISHING UP THE COTATI SPEEDWAY.

GIANT BOWL IN NORTH IS ALMOST READY FOR RACING EVENTS.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

PETALUMA, July 16.—Finishing touches on the giant track of the North Bay Counties Speedway at Cotati are now being put on by Jack Prince and his crew of experts, and work on the track proper will be finished very shortly. Actual work on the giant wooden bowl was started on May 9 and since that day nearly 3,000,000 feet of lumber and sixty-eight tons of nails have been placed in the track that should break all records for speed, according to its builder.

As soon as the last nail has been driven in the track the crew of workmen will turn their attention to the grand stands, which will flank either stretch, and both will be completed long before the opening day.

August 14, the day on which the track is scheduled to be opened, has already been given the approval of the sport-loving public. On this day the 150-mile championship race will be held, when the racing fans will be given the opportunity of seeing some of the greatest drivers of the age in action.

Plans to handle a record crowd for this blue-ribbon event are already being made by Secretary-Manager L. L. Putnam, who is receiving daily requests for blocks of seat reservations from all districts of the State.

"If a man write a better book, preach a better sermon or make a better mouse trap than his neighbor, though he build his house in the woods, the world will make a beaten path to his door.
—Emerson.

NEVER in the history of the automobile business has the truth of this saying been proven so conclusively as in the sales of Studebaker cars in Los Angeles City and over the entire country in the six months ending June 30, 1921.

In Los Angeles City, in June alone, we sold at retail

230 Studebaker Cars

A comparison between June, 1921, and June, 1920, shows this remarkable increase in retail orders for Studebaker cars in Los Angeles City:

June, 1921	230 cars	$417,550.43
June, 1920	29 cars	69,722.95
Increase of 1921 over 1920,	201 cars	$347,827.48

Percentage of increase, 693%.

The fact that this remarkable increase in sales was made in a BUYERS' MARKET—with prospective buyers making the most careful inspection and critical comparisons of car values—is proof positive that Studebaker cars offer the highest value at just prices.

WITH NASH PERFECTED VALVE-IN-HEAD MOTOR

Newly Reduced Prices
Increased Value

The plain statement of a price reduction tells less than the full Nash story.

For the Nash manufacturing efficiency and economy that made possible new prices also added quality to Nash cars. The big Nash plants at Kenosha and Milwaukee are the finest works that could be devised.

Ample finances provided the most modern machinery. Long experience developed the most effective shop practice. And Nash production ability is constantly finding ways to build more economically while building more finely.

The new lower first cost means a lower final cost because of the many betterments continually being embodied in Nash cars.

That is exactly what Nash value stands for—paying less and getting more in able performance, in durability, and in solid comfort.

The worth of every Nash car is further safeguarded by our Nash service that is territory-wide and unfailingly prompt.

Come see the Nash models at their new prices.

SET FOR JAUNT TO CAMP CURRY

Ohioans Enthusiastic Over "Old Home Week."

Hundreds Planning to Trek to Yosemite Valley.

Reservations Pouring in for Accommodations.

Yesterday was a big day locally for Ohioans in Southern California. Many of the thousands, however, who gathered at the huge Ohio Society picnic at Sycamore Grove Park to talk over earlier times "back home," were greatly interested in the plan for a big "old home week" at Camp Curry in the Yosemite Valley, the second week in August.

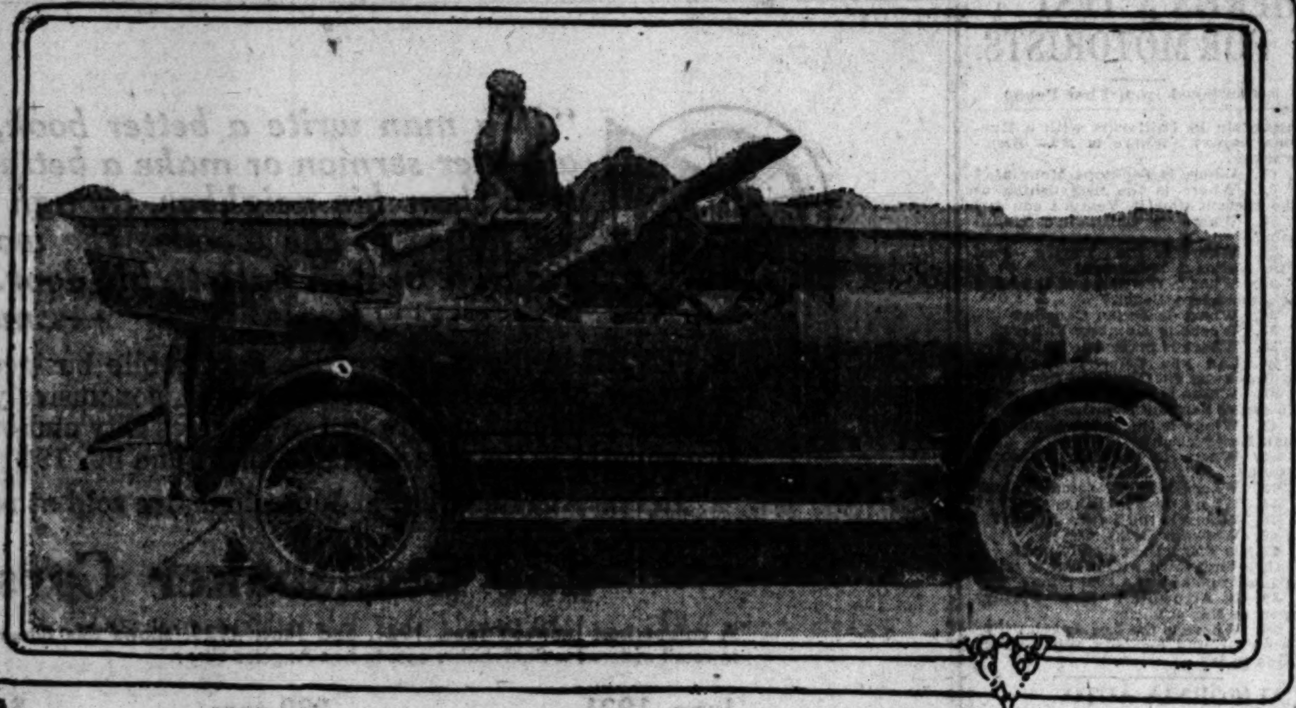
Attorney Frank M. Bering, secretary of the Associated Ohio Societies of Southern California, was besieged all day with Ohioans anxious to learn the details of the approaching outing and to make their reservations for railroad transportation, Pullman and accommodations at Camp Curry.

Realizing very well that the Yosemite Valley is having a season this year greater than it has ever experienced before, Attorney Bering is doing his utmost to secure the names of all those who intend making the trip at the earliest possible moment, in order that the railroad and camp officials will be able to make proper arrangements for caring for the hundreds who anticipate making the trip and enjoying a week with their fellow-Ohioans under the shadows of Glacier Point.

An effort is being made to have Gov. William D. Stephens in attendance during at least a portion of the week, not only in his official position as the State's executive, but as a former Ohioan himself. An invitation was sent to the President Harding, inviting him also to join with his fellow-Ohioans in their Yosemite vacation, but a wire from the President stated that press of the nation's business would keep him in or near Washington at the time and he would be unable to come West, much as he regretted his inability to join in celebrating Ohio's "old home week."

MAXWELL CHIEF IS HERE ON SHORT TRIP.

A. E. Richmond, Pacific Coast supervisor for the Maxwell Motor Sales Corporation, was here on a visit last week consulting with Manager George Pearson, Jr., of Union Motors, Inc., distributors of the Maxwell. Mr. Richmond made a brief tour through the Southern California territory, visiting the Maxwell dealers in each city, and found business conditions excellent. "Since the assumption of distributing rights for the Maxwell by Union Motors, Maxwell sales have constantly increased," said Richmond. "Mr. Pearson seems to have gathered around him an efficient organization, and it certainly is showing class."



They're Getting Airplane Speedsters Down to Motor-Car Sizes These Days.

Emery Rogers, aviator and aeronautical expert (seated on wing of Model C-1 Pacific Standard racing monoplane,) discussing the features of his new craft with H. J. Coger, vice-president and general manager of the Troy Motor Sales Company, distributors of Nash motor cars. Mr. Coger is standing beside a Nash Six sport model. Both monoplane and motor car are equipped with valve-in-head motors. Note that the overall span of the plane is little more than the automobile. This plane will be entered in the air races at the Beverly Hills Speedway this afternoon.

TRUCK RADIATING SYSTEMS.

Summer days, the days when the hard working motor truck is called upon to render its very best service at a time when operating conditions are the least conducive, are here. Now is the time to examine the radiating system of the truck. Make what repairs are necessary and get it ready to function properly.

Overheating means increased operating expense and lost efficiency. Overheating and other common hot-weather troubles usually are due to lack of forethought and mistakes that can be avoided easily. The main points which require attention are briefly outlined by A. F. Masury, chief engineer of the International Motor Company, manufacturers of Mack trucks.

(1.) Do you understand the truck's cooling system thoroughly? If not, now is the time to go over it carefully and find out all there is to know about it. See that the flow of water is not impeded by any sort of obstruction and that the overflow pipe is not bent below the level of the base of the radiator filler. Be sure that the overflow pipe is not clogged or flattened.

(2.) Is the radiator clean? The front of the radiator should be free from dirt, license plates and signs.

(3.) Are the hose connections watertight and is the hose in good condition? Be sure that the rubber has not been affected during the winter. Only the best quality rubber hose should be used, as the inside tubing of cheap hose is easily worn away and the rubber particles carried along with the water clog up the radiator.

(4.) Does the fan turn freely and is the belt tension right? The fan should be clean and its bearings should be well greased.

(5.) Is the carburetor choke in proper repair so that it opens all the way? Better open the seasonal shutter on the hot air tube. Is the float level correct?

6—Does the ignition system furnish a spark of sufficient strength? A weak spark due to excessive lubrication of the magneto, dirty breaker or distributor, or weak magnets, will have an effect similar to late spark timing and overheating will result.

7—Are the valve tappets properly adjusted? They should have from .008 to .010 inch clearance, which may be gauged by about the thickness of an ordinary postcard.

8—Are the cylinders free from carbon? If not, remove it.

9—Is the oil in the crank case clean? Gasoline, dirt, or other foreign substances will impair the quality of the oil in the crank case resulting in overheated parts due to insufficient lubrication.

10—Are you using the right grade of oil? Because of the increased temperatures it is often advisable in summer to use a heavier grade of oil than in winter.

11—Are the exhaust pipe and muffler clean? Practically forty per cent of the heat of combustion escapes through the exhaust.

12—Are the brakes free? A dragging brake will cause overheating in hot weather that might not occur in cool weather.

VALVE SPRINGS.

Weak valve springs can cause endless trouble in promoting poor engine operation. Whenever the valves are removed these springs should be measured to see that they are the same size. If one spring is short it either will have to be stretched or a plate placed under it to increase the pressure.

AIRCRAFT RIVALS AUTO.

Plane Takes Place Among Sport and Business Vehicles of the World.

The sport model airplane has really taken its place along with the sport model automobile in the activities of our daily life. People have become so accustomed to the hum of the motors far above their heads that they no longer crane their necks every time a plane passes overhead. The airplane has come to be a part of our life just as the automobile did some years ago and the two vie with one another as aids to business and pleasure.

Out here at the Los Angeles Speedway today representative craft from all over the world will battle in the air for speed and handling honors. In the World War it was for a different stake, but very largely, perhaps, due to that fact the progress in airplane design and construction has been exceedingly rapid. One of the most beautiful craft to compete in the events today will be the new Model C-1 Pacific Standard racing monoplane, built right here in Los Angeles by the Pacific Airplane and Supply Company and which will be piloted by Emery H. Rogers, famous up and down the Pacific Coast before the war as a tennis expert of note, but now an expert on all things aeronautical and perhaps better known now as an aviator than he was then for his athletic ability.

H. J. Coger, vice-president and general manager of the Troy Motor Sales Company, distributors of the Nash, visited Rogers's Airport last week to look over this new plane—for like the Nash automobile, the motor which drives it as well as practically all airplanes is of the valve-in-head type.

In explaining the monoplane to Mr. Coger and telling him of his hopes in today's events Rogers said: "This new type racing monoplane is equipped with an eight-cylinder, ninety-horsepower valve-in-head motor, four-inch bore and five-inch stroke. It already has proven itself the fastest plane of its power in the world and in actual test has been driven at a rate of 136½ miles an hour. The wing spread of this plane is only twenty-three feet, three inches, and empty it weighs only 850 pounds. As completely equipped for flying the total weight is 1140 pounds."

REQUIRE STRENGTH; SPEED.

The supposed hoodoo number thirteen has no terrors for the Wreden Packing & Provision Company, 129 South Main street, for at least so far as their delivery equipment is concerned. According to Carl Wreden, the thirten Dodge Brothers screen side business cars operated by this large concern are delivering such dependable and efficient service in the gruelling work of supplying Los Angeles and surrounding cities with its meat, that there is no time for hoodoos.

In talking with Mr. F. A. Norberg, business car sales manager for the Albertson Motor Car Company, Dodge Brothers, dealers for Los Angeles and vicinity, and from whom the fleet of Dodge Brothers business cars was purchased, Mr. Wreden said in part:

"The problem of delivery in the packing and provision business has always perplexing to us until we purchased our first Dodge Brothers business car. In the wholesale and retail distributing of meats to the various towns and dealers around Los Angeles, there is neede a combination of speed and heavy duty qualities, combined with dependability of operation, which is very hard to find in the specifications of the delivery equipment now on the market."

"In order to suit our purpose the equipment must be heavy enough to withstand the shifting weight of the heavy quarters and halves of beef, and other meats and at the same time be able to cover the delivery route in the minimum length of time, in order that meats and other perishable foodstuffs are kept out of refrigeration for the shortest time possible. And it was not until we had purchased our first Dodge Brothers business car that we successfully solved this problem."

YEGGS LIKE FAIR WEATHER.

"About 50 per cent more cars are stolen in fair weather than on rainy days, and 70 per cent of all auto thefts take place after 5 p.m.," says Mr. L. A. Coffey of this city, who has just completed a nation-wide investigation of auto thefts for the underwriters.

"This situation holds good in practically all of the larger cities, but when the number of cars lost to the owners in eastern cities is compared to the figures on the Pacific Coast, it shows Los Angeles to be once more the "one bright spot" on the map. Last year in Chicago there were over three times as many cars stolen as in Los Angeles, yet Chicago has only 16,000 more cars registered than here—Los Angeles registering 73,000 against Chicago's 89,000.

"Naturally, this wide difference in figures was the subject of a minute investigation. The low percentage of thefts in Southern California was found to be due to two factors; first, the very efficient organization developed by the Los Angeles Police Department, the Sheriff's office and the Automobile Club of Southern California; second, the fact that almost 50 per cent of the cars in the city of Los Angeles were protected by an efficient visible locking device, a Theft-Signal on the right front wheel of the car. An interesting feature of the report was that all of the cars stolen were nonprotected cars, showing that the automobile thief rarely touches a car which has a visible lock, preferring naturally to make his quick getaway with the unprotected car."

ENGINEERS ENTERTAINED.

Chief Engineer Guy Henry and Vincent Link, one of his chief assistant engineers, of the Studebaker factory have been visiting Southern California and were the guests of Paul G. Hoffman Company at a dinner given in their honor at the Wilshire Country Club.

The two designers have been taking a little vacation in California and combining some business with pleasure. They have not only been studying the needs of motorists, but have also been in consultation with many Studebaker service men seeking troubles, but finding few.

On their trip from Detroit they came across the 3000 miles of highway in ten days averaging 300 miles per day. They will visit a number of points on the Pacific Coast before they return.

Most of the advanced features in the design of the Studebaker light six are credited to Link and he expressed himself as highly pleased over the records set by the car in its series of road tests when it set new records between Los Angeles and San Francisco and Los Angeles and Phoenix, Ariz. The stamina and consistency displayed in these runs are, he claims, ample justification of the advanced designs incorporated.

He ascribed the car's ability to turn up at high engine speeds for hours at a time to the fully machined crankshaft and long machined connecting rods. As the shaft is much heavier than is ordinarily used in a motor of the same piston displacement and the connecting rods ten inches instead of nine inches long, he claims that it should, and does, have far less vibration than if he had followed the usual practice applied in other light cars of the Studebaker price class.

One of the new features introduced in the light six is an aluminum cylinder head. This has the advantage of being lighter and radiating heat faster than cast iron. The inclined valves were incorporated in the design to provide easier passage of the fuel mixture and exhaust gasses.

SUNBEAM CHASSIS MAKES THEM LOOK.

HAND WORKMANSHIP THROUGH OUT IN FAMOUS ENGLISH PRODUCT.

A six-cylinder Sunbeam chassis has attracted a great deal of attention during the past week on the salesroom floor of Earl C. Anthony, Inc. The Sunbeam is one of the finest cars manufactured in England, and has long been prominent in big speed events at Brooklands and on the Continent. Many local race fans remember the splendid showing made by the Sunbeam in the Santa Monica race of 1914 before it overturned when Johnny Marquis endeavored to take "Death Curve" at too high speed.

The chassis on exhibition at the local Packard salesroom is a splendid example of hand workmanship, and has drawn the interest of scores of local motor enthusiasts during the past few days, for the opportunity it affords of comparing the best foreign design with that of America.

It under the cottonwoods along the cliffs a weary emigrant and his family rested for a week or two after their scorching journey from Arizona. Piute Pete received these springs as a reward for informing the officer in charge of an intended ambush laid for a troop of cavalry in Box Canyon, Arizona, but he abandoned the spot on the death of his father, who lived to be over 100.

Returning to the base the balance of the day was spent in examining the mine, but the next day (Sunday) the two set out about noon, shaking hands with George, Bill and Andy, and headed for Hiko Springs, by way of Juniper Well. At present Juniper Well is caved in, but another well a few yards away provides water for emergencies, though one has to climb down a rather shaky ladder, and then is likely to find the usual debris found in desert wells.

PICTURED ROCKS.

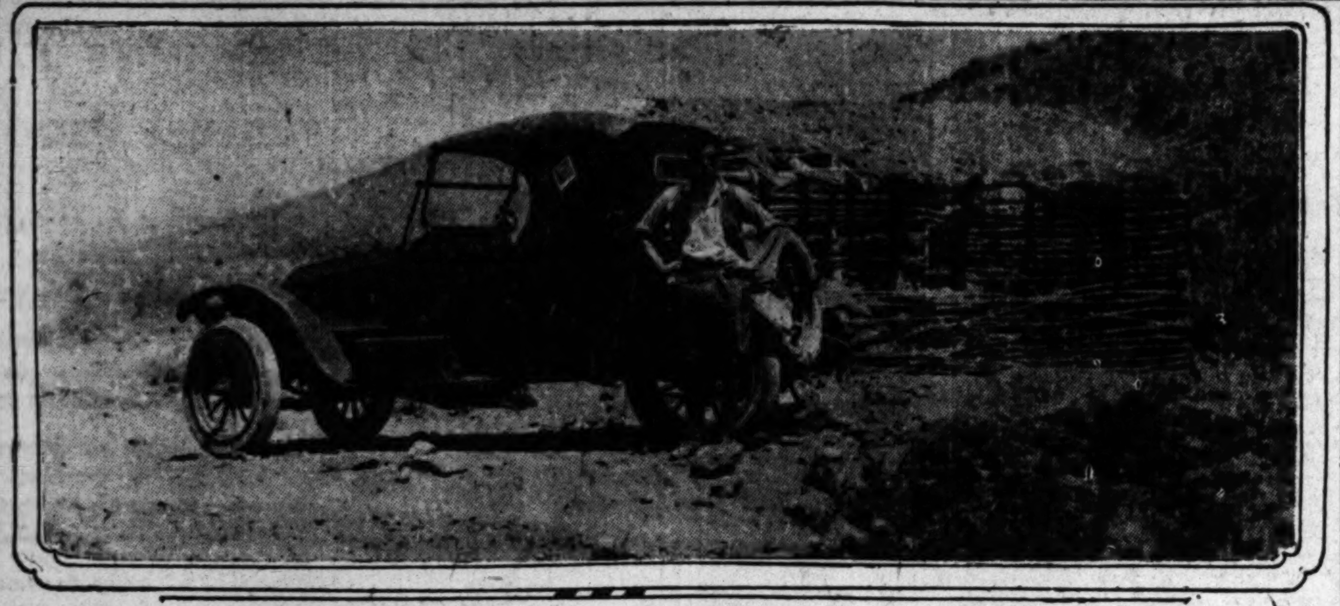
In Hiko Canyon are many pictured rocks with various designs on them. Of course, the desert abounds with such rocks, decorated by Indians of a bygone age, but here at Hiko an automobile may be driven right up alongside some interesting specimens, though by hiking down the canyon one can find quite an extensive array of goats decorating a cliff wall, arranged in threes and fours, covering a good deal of space. How old these pigment drawings are is quite a question, but the Indians apparently know little or nothing about them.

The road by way of Juniper to Hiko is evidently a coming desert thoroughfare, for from Hiko the road swings north and east to the Colorado River to a point opposite the Catherine mines, recently discovered, but already famous. In a few days the Colorado River ferry on the Searchlight-Chloride road will be moved to its new location between the Homestake and Catherine mines.

In connection with this territory it might be well to mention the Spirit Mountains, which extend from near Juniper well back to the river. At one time the Piutes and Mohaves had a great battle in these rugged hills, the fight being so fiercely waged that ever since the Indians have shunned these mountains, due to superstition, venturing into these fastnesses only twice a year, to gather mescal. It is said that, a truce being arranged, an agreement was reached whereby the Mohaves were to have the Colorado River and the Piutes the desert, and old-timers, in weaving their interesting yarns, will tell you that that is why the Mohaves eat no rabbits while the Piutes abstain from fish.

It was while making a short cross-country trip into the hills at the base of the Spirit Mountains that the faithful Franklin came to conclusions with a huge boulder, tearing out various parts underneath, but not interfering with the operation of the car. After this experience Carr declared the old bus will stand anything, and said any other make would quite likely have been put out of commission completely.

The heat was intense, and the return journey was made quite leisurely, with stops at every cold drink establishment.



Think There's Nothing Interesting on the Desert! You're All Wrong.

Here's a spot that's worth considerable hot driving to reach. It's Piute Pete's old home near Piute Springs and is a scenic place entirely surrounded by desert wastes. The 1912 Franklin in the foreground belongs to C. J. Carr and has seen more than 120,000 miles of desert and mountain work. Despite its long years of service the Franklin tackles the desert trails as well today as it ever did.

KEEP UP THE USUAL INFLATION OF TIRES.

HOT WEATHER DOES NOT MAKE IT NECESSARY TO REDUCE AMOUNT OF AIR.

"There seems to be a theory rampant," says Hal Baker, sales manager of the Western Auto Supply Company, distributors of India, Pharis, Fidelity and Nebraska tires, "that in hot weather the air in the tire expands so much that in order to avoid the dangers of overinflation some air should be let out and the pressure reduced at the beginning of the day's run.

"Tire men all over the country are trying to teach the fallacy of this theory. Tires should be pumped up just as hard in the summer as during the winter. The reasons are simple and easily explained.

"Different tire manufacturers have made exhaustive tests to determine the proper amount of inflation for tires at all seasons of the year. They have found that even during the hottest summer days, when a speed of thirty to forty miles an hour is maintained, that the pressure in a tire is increased only two per cent. This is under extreme conditions, probably seldom duplicated by the motorist in the ordinary use of his car. This extra two per cent pressure is so small that it is entirely negligible.

"On the other hand, if tires are slightly deflated, anticipating an increase in pressure, they are liable to be seriously injured. The flexing of the tire—the constant bending back and forth—produces internal friction, which heats up a tire to the point where the fabric cracks and breaks down. A tire in this condition invites tread separation, injury from stone bruises, and consequent blowouts."

USED-CAR DEALERS OPEN UP NEW HOME.

On account of the success and increased business of P. E. Caufield Company, "used car dealers," they have found it necesary to open an additional store at 1036 South Main street, with a full line of high-grade, rebuilt, used cars of all standard makes.

It has been the policy of this company to please and satisfy each customer and stand back of each sale made, and for these reasons, they anticipate a great many additional satisfied customers during the coming years. Mr. Caufield, manager of this company, says: "Business is good in the used-car line at this time as people have come to the conclusion and realize the fact that automobiles are at the very rock-bottom prices now."

HAWAII HAS NO USE FOR HORSE.

Island is Now Completely Motorized.

Tractors Do the Heavy Work on Plantations.

Splendid Highways Are the Common Thing Today.

[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

HONOLULU (T. H.) July 12.—The day of the horse has ended in Hawaii and, as in other parts of the world, his place has been taken by the motor car. Thousands of pleasure cars, truck and tractors are now in service in the islands and the automobile business is in a decidedly flourishing condition.

On the large sugar and pineapple plantations the mule and the horse, which for years pulled the plows and cultivators, have about disappeared and this work is now being done almost exclusively by tractors and motor-driven plows. This innovation has reduced operating expenses considerably, at the same time accomplishing increased and more satisfactory work. Several of the plantations are now manufacturing their own motor fuel.

When the delegates to the Press Congress of the World come to the Territory in October for a two weeks' session, they will find that splendid automobile roads lead to every point of interest in the islands, even up to within a few hundred yards of the rim of the active volcano of Kilauea on the Island of Hawaii. The Territory is spending millions yearly on its roads and one of the largest road-building programs in its history is being carried out, for which the advent of the automobile is largely responsible.

Each of the four larger islands is encircled by a splendidly constructed belt road, from which branch out other highways, forming a veritable network of good roads. The various Army units in the Territory are now completely motorized and this is another reason why the Territorial and county governments are placing emphasis on good roads. An effort is now being made in Congress to obtain an annual appropriation of Federal funds for additional road building in the islands.

BRAKES LOCK.

The owner who is not vigilant and neglects the parts he does not see or which do not give trouble usually finds some time, that upon starting one of the wheels becomes locked even though the brake pedal or lever is free. This is due to the fact that there is so much play in the brake linkage that when the hand brake lever is released it merely takes up the play leaving the unlubricated mechanism set in holding position. This happened recently and a hammer had to be used to loosen the brake mechanism.

APPERSON ANNOUNCES PRICE CUT.

Reductions on Anniversary and Standard Models Are in Tune With Times.

Here is the announcement of a motor-car price reduction with a punch behind it.

Word was received here last week by Harris Hanshue, Apperson distributor here, telling of a sweeping price reduction made by the Apperson Brothers' Automobile Company of Kokomo, Ind., the first among the old-line manufacturers of high-grade, eight-cylinder cars to announce a radical cut.

In a communication from Edgar Apperson, president of the company, it is stated: "Effective July 6, prices of Apperson Standard and Anniversary models will be reduced."

"I can do no more than quote Apperson's communication," states Hanshue. "He says: 'We have taken this action, for we believe similar action on the part of all manufacturers in all lines of business will be a constructive measure.'

"The Apperson car of today," states Hanshue, "is the best product our factory has ever produced. It is complete in every detail. Greater efficiency on the part of our workmen combined with greater care in inspection is making the best Apperson possible. At the new list prices the buyer of a car of our manufacture surely gets dollar for dollar value. All Apperson price reductions apply to our regular models mounted on our standard chassis—the world famous 'eight with eighty less parts.'"

COST OF UPKEEP IS SURPRISINGLY LOW.

That the cost of complete upkeep for the Marmon 34, including repairs, adjustments and time for oiling and greasing, averages around the remarkably low figure of $11.25 a month, is the result of a thorough analysis made during 1920 of all repair records of Marmon owners in Kansas City.

During this time a detailed analysis was kept of the complete upkeep of each of 104 Marmon owners. Every item of expense was resorded—the reckless and the extravagant driver was included along with the careful. These repair charts brought out some remarkable facts. These 104 owners drove their cars a total of 773,000 miles, or 1000 miles each per month, at an average cost for repairs of only 1.1 cents a mile, or $11.25 a month.

Emphatic Slash Given Prices of Roamer Product.

As further evidence of the policy adopted several years ago by the Barley Motor Car Company, manufacturers of the Roamer, to make its product the most popular car in its price class, comes the announcement of a price reduction of several hundred dollars. This new price list affects all models and the new price schedule is operative July 15.

W. D. Wright, president of the Wright Motor Car Company, Southern California distributors of the Roamer, was greatly surprised to receive notice of the price reductions, inasmuch as the Roamer factory have been providing the motoring public with a high-grade, scientifically constructed car at the lowest possible prices. According to Mr. Wright, it seemed almost impossible to maintain any such high standard of construction and design, together with the well-known Roamer individuality, for any less than former prices.

The new price schdule, however, is in strict adherence to the policy laid down by the manufacturers to build a car that in design, individuality, refinement of detail, elegance of finish and appointment, or mechanical perfection will be second to none in the automobile industry.

"This reduction, doubtless in anticipation of future manufacturing conditions, will prove of great interest to prospective buyers who insist on the finest materials in a car of proven value," said Mr. Wright.

MOTORISTS LIKE COWL VENTILATOR.

NEW ACCESSORY IS APPRECIATED BY CAR OWNERS, AND IS USED GENERALLY.

The cowl ventilator is one of the up-to-date motor-car accessories most appreciated by the motorist of today. Originated as an answer to a real need, it has met with instant favor and is rapidly coming into general use, not as a luxury, but as a necessity, declares Robert Thompson of the Robert Thompson Company, local firm of body builders.

A ventilator that is attracting unusual attention among products of this kind on the market today is the Hen-Vis ventilator, the Thompson company is prepared to install on any make of automobile. This accessory is available in both top cowl and side cowl styles. Constructed with an apron on the edge, fitting down over the coping in the frame, this ventilator is both water-tight and dust-proof when closed. It has four points of adjustment and remains secure in any desired position. The top cowl ventilator is operated from the instrument board by a nickel-plated knob.

Surprisingly Low Prices Result of Low Production Costs

Many have wondered how we can produce tires of such remarkable mile-after-mile service, and yet offer them at prices so surprisingly low.

But the answer is really very simple.

For in addition to owning our own cotton mills, we control every detail in the making of Mason Cords from baled cotton and crude rubber to finished product.

This, together with a tremendous demand for Mason tires, has made it possible to attain highest quality at lowest possible costs.

A series of Battery Talks— by Harry W. Harrison

No. 7

The "Over-Size" Element

"Strength, in a storage battery, depends upon the positive plate area. The greater this area, the greater the power and 'kick.' And as the area is increased, the strain on each unit is reduced, Westinghouse Batteries are built with two more plates per cell than ordinary types. In common sizes this increased plate area increases the battery's capacity 15%-25%; gives it that much longer life. By that amount the strain on each individual plate is lessened.

"The Westinghouse is an extra strong battery."

JORDAN SCOUT SURVEYS OVER-WEEK-END JAUNTS.

Interesting Tours Suggested; Not So Far Away That You're All in Before You Get There.

Since the "Call of the Open Road" has been sounded broadcast, the motorist is constantly looking for a place where he may commune with nature. At this time of year, it is the long trip that seems more in favor than the short sight-seeing ride. For this reason, one sees hundreds of cars packed and loaded to the guard rails with camping outfits rolling along the highway looking for the "wild."

Of course, the most popular trip taken is the week-end jaunt lasting from Friday afternoon to Monday morning. For this reason, a Times Jordan scout car, equipped by R. C. Paulson of the B. H. Dyas Company, spent several week-ends looking for camping sites where it is possible to get away from Spring street and yet not spend all the time hitting the road.

EXTENSIVE TRIP.

Prior to the survey of the immediate camping territory, The Times Jordan made a rather extensive trip to the intermountain region of Utah, where much interesting data was obtained for those who, during the next two months, wish to travel more extensively.

However, even in this really wild section, cars are pouring into Zion Canyon, the Cedar Braker and Bryce Canyon, due to the fact that roads and bridges have been completed, making travel much less difficult.

But to return to the shorter trips within the 120-miles radius from Los Angeles, which will be more interesting to a greater number of motorists.

INTO THE WILDS.

The Jordan was first sent into the wilds of old San Jacinto with Earl Maginnis at the tiller. One of the most salient features of this trip lies in the fact that only eighteen miles from the pavement, the rugged stuff begins. It is well to state at this point, that San Jacinto is quite some little hill, pushing its snow-capped brow over 12,000 feet into the air—along its slopes one can find anything desired in the way of deep, dark sylvan dells, roaring brooks or stately giants of the forest. In one place a person may stand on a cliff, shove off a rock, knowing that it won't hit a thing but air for 7500 feet, then, if lucky, the stone will kick off and end up below sea level in the Imperial Valley region. The whole drop is something like 12,628 feet, and there is nothing between. There is only one other place in North America where as great a drop can be seen, and that is from Mt. Whitney to Death Valley, but here there are two intervening mountain ranges, the White Mountains and the Funeral Range. In the case of the hopping off place on San Jacinto, there is nothing between the top of the mountain and the floor of Imperial Valley, but air.

In passing, it must be noted that it is impossible to drive a car to this point, where all these long-distance throws are to be made, but from Idyllwild, regular trips are made via desert canary or horseback.

GET READY.

But about camping—Get a tent, some dishes, a few blankets and start out on the valley highway to Riverside, thence over Box Springs grade into Perris, a distance of seventy-four miles, turning into the Hemet road. The course goes through that city, running off the pavement three miles beyond, then up the San Jacinto Canyon road for nine miles until the San Jacinto grade is reached. Here the road branches, the right fork going to Keens and Hemet Lake, the left fork goes up the face of the mountain for four and a half miles. At this point, the timber begins and with it hundreds of beautiful camp sites. Springs abound along the road all the day into the Idylwild, so it's a matter of personal selection. It was along this road that "Blind Husbands" and the "Heart of Watona" were taken because of atmosphere.

It's just like the very high Sierras, but it is, in total, only 120 miles from Los Angeles, and can be made in four and a half to five hours' easy driving and with only eighteen miles of unpaved road.

So much for old San Jacinto. Next comes Pine Canyon. The route lies over the highway to Saugus, then up the Bouquet or San Francisquito canyon to Elizabeth Lake. The scout party recommends San Francisquito, because it is more interesting, besides being six miles shorter. Arriving at the lake, two courses are open—one over the hill to the desert through Neenach, then five miles beyond, turning to the left; the road starts for the Castaic Ridge through Pine Canyon. Two and a half miles up one runs into the Santa Barbara National Forest. The best camping sites are about seven miles from the Neenach turn-off.

The other route is much shorter, turning off to the left and following the shores of Elizabeth Lake for two miles, then the road turns to the right into Pine Canyon. There is more water available on this side than on the other side of the summit, and for that reason it offers the best camping. Over this route, the Jordan speedometer showed just 67.5 miles.

LOVELY SPOT.

Pine Canyon is a lovely spot, cool with wonderful scenic effects, as from many spots one is able to look for miles over the desert. But, best of all, it is not at all crowded. In fact, when The Times Jordan party camped there no other outfit or camp was in the entire canyon. This is about a three and a half or four-hour ride from the city, with supplies available near at hand.

Much has been said about Zion and the North Rim, but if this old world wags on for another 1000 years, it never will be described.

Here one must be prepared for real roughing it, unless camping directly in Zion Canyon, where there is a hotel camp. In the surrounding country the party should have extra gas and oil and enough food to last a period of four days.

QUITE A TRIP.

Zion National Park is about sixty miles from St. George, and that city is 502 miles from here, so it can readily be seen that it is quite a trip.

There are thousands of places near Zion, or farther up out of Cedar City in Cedar Breaks, but before going into this country the motorist should supply himself with the proper information, which can be obtained at the Auto Club of Southern California.

Charles Bigelow, founder of the Arrowhead Trail, says he expects a great season this year, and with the new bridges he predicts a 25 per cent increase over last year.

He has just returned from a trip of exploitation in the intermountain section, where he poked his Jordan over 2000 miles of back country.

The open road is just coming into its own, and Paulson says he expects that those who hear the call this year will show a 100 per cent increase over last season.

It is the real way to spend a vacation, and in the end it is less expensive than almost any other way, if transportation and miles are to be considered.

LOCALLY MADE CAR SHOWING UP WELL.

MAKES GOOD RECORD AT SPEED EVENTS ON TRACKS IN EASTERN STATES.

Piloted by Ira Vail, well-known speed demon, and Frank Elliott, his team mate and former mechanician, a Los Angeles made automobile is attracting unusual attention in the motor world; under the guidance of Vail and Elliott this car has proved successful in the three biggest races of the year, and the drivers have pulled down quite a bit of prize money because of its performance. Incidentally, they have been such consistent winners that they probably will finish the 1921 race reason with a large number of points toward the race championship.

Driving under the colors of the Leach Biltwell Motor Car Company of Los Angeles, Vail, with his Leach Special, captured a good place on the list of prize winners at the recent Indianapolis 500-mile race.

Then came the Uniontown Spring Classic, and Elliott, driving the Leach, nosed out Tommy Milton, finishing well ahead of that daring driver. The latest success was scored at the recent Tacoma road race, where Elliott again finished among the prize winners after a close contest with Eddie Pullen.

Elliott and Vail now plan to enter the Cotati speedway race, near San Francisco, when the track opens for the first time on August 14—unless the Elgin (Ill.) road race intervenes. They also will be contestants at the fall Uniontown race, and will be seen on the local Beverly Hills track in November. They are considering offers to compete in a number of smaller races.

LOOKING FOR THOSE WHO DIDN'T PAY UP.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SACRAMENTO, July 8.—Charles J. Chenu, Superintendent of the State Motor Vehicle Department, and his crop of inspectors are busy at present checking up automobile owners in California, who have been classed as delinquents for failure to pay their 1921 registration fee.

According to Chenu many of the delinquents are intercepted on the highways in the various parts of the State. Those who have willfully neglected to apply for their 1921 license are compelled to pay the 25 per cent penalty.

The business at the main office of the Motor Vehicle Department here has increased to such an extent during the past year that Chenu is looking around for larger quarters for the department.

George R. Bury,
Formerly general sales manager of the Packard Motor Car Company, who has resigned to accept the position of vice-president and assistant general manager of Earle C. Anthony, Inc., Packard and Durant distributors.

Sales Executive Joins Forces of Earle C. Anthony

Severing an unbroken connection of fourteen years with the Packard factory, George R. Bury, general sales manager of the Packard Motor Car Company, last week joined the organization of Earle C. Anthony, Inc., Packard and Durant distributors, as vice-president and assistant general manager. Starting in the specification department of the Packard factory more than fourteen years ago, Bury steadily advanced himself to the position of carriage sales manager. From that post he was sent to Chicago as president and general manager of the Packard factory branch in that city, being recalled from there to take entire charge of Packard sales. This position he held until July 1, when he resigned to come to Anthony's big California organization.

"On my trip to California last February, Mr. Anthony took me for a thousand-mile motor trip over the State," said Bury, last week. "He has a line of California sales talk that is just as eloquent as his Packard sales talk. As a result of the trip and the talk, I'm here, and incidentally very thoroughly sold on California, present and future."

AUTO IS ESTABLISHED AS PERSONAL UTILITY.

"The automobile has become more of a personal utility than most people realize," says Gilbert Woodill, Pacific Coast representative of the Kissel Motor Car Company.

"In fact, the varied uses to which the family car is put really makes it a basic utility. This was proven by a recent investigation which showed that families, when economizing, held and cherished the automobile often as the remaining means of recreation in addition to its utility as used in transportation."

DRAIN THE VACUUM TANK.

At fixed intervals open the drain cock at the bottom of the vacuum tank. Usually a few drops of water and rust flow before the gasoline starts running. The fact that it often will not flow until a wire is run through the drain cock shows there is foreign matter which may cause carburetion trouble.

100,000 Owners Hudson's Greatest Proof

Hudson Super-Six

How assuring is the endorsement 100,000 owners give to Hudson.

Every type of user is its champion.

It appeals to the mechanically inclined because of its simplicity—its exclusive motor and the worthiness of its construction.

And with equal satisfaction it is the choice of those who ask only that their car shall be beautiful to behold, delightful to ride in, easy to drive and give them no concern in its care.

One type of owner demands constant reliability in hard service. A hundred miles a day—week in and week out—month after month, is not an infrequent requirement. Another asks for distinction. He wants its poise and the good taste it expresses.

By the breadth of its appeal, Hudson reveals its completeness.

It has held leadership in all fields. Five years ago it made its record for speed and as the greatest performing stock car. It has always led in body designing and has created types of open and closed cars that are patterns for the industry.

Without antiquating earlier models, each new car marked an improvement in some motoring particular. And this accomplishment has been attained with the same economies in operation and a moderateness of cost that marked the first Super-Six.

Russell E. Gardner of St. Louis,

Head of the Gardner Motor Car Company. Mr. Gardner arrived in Los Angeles early last week on a vacation trip and has been making his headquarters with the local distributors of his product. half, was recently called upon to make several test trips with the Cleveland automobile. His most recent run was to San Francisco and return, when the Cleveland Six he drove established its within-the-law record.

So many persons have read of these records and trips that Mr. Brady has received numerous calls for information in regard to the trips he made, as well as in regard to the car he drove, and he was very much pleased when, a few days ago Mr. Herbert announced that he had been appointed a member of the Cleveland sales force.

FIRST SHIPMENT OF CORD TIRES ARRIVES.

LAST WORD IN STEPHENS QUALITY IS NOW AVAILABLE BY THE PUBLIC.

For the first time Stephens tires are now available for Los Angeles motorists in cord grades. The initial shipment of these cords has just been received by the Stephens Tire Stores Company, according to an announcement made by Gordon Williams, California manager of the local factory branch at 1234 Grand avenue.

These cords carry a guarantee of 10,000 miles and are the last word in Stephens tire quality, declares Mr. Williams. They will be carried by this firm at the head of a line of pneumatics, already including the Stephens regulars, guaranteed for 7000 miles and the Stephens Specials having a 6000 mile guarantee. The addition of cords to the supply available through the Stephens Tire Stores Company completes the plan to suit any size of pocketbook.

Says Prosperity Has Returned in Earnest at Last.

Prosperity is with us for keeps, according to H. C. McVey of the Los Angeles Oakland Company. McVey bases his opinion upon the facts as they relate to the Oakland business in Los Angeles.

"Just as soon as the factory cut the price we were besieged with orders for Oaklands," says McVey, "and we worked night and day getting cars serviced for delivery. In fact the first forty days following the announcement of the reduction we did so much business that for the last two weeks we made no effort whatever to sell new cars and turned our attention to the disposal of used cars. Our fondest expectations were exceeded by the usual demands that were manifest for cars. The larger proportion of our used cars were Oaklands and after putting them into first-class shape we felt like going out and selling them.

"It is this confidence in the used cars we sell that makes it easy for us to keep our used cars at a very minimum in numbers. Every time we take in an Oakland we completely overhaul it and when the buyer gets it and uses it he is satisfied with his bargain. Our salesmen know this and they know they will make a future prospect for a new Oakland every time they sell a used one."

The Cadillac asks only the barest minimum of care to render back a wealth of changeless and continuous service, whether the task asked of it in a year is ten or one hundred thousand miles.

TROUBLE IS OFTEN WITH INSULATION.

Battery Company Finds Source of Mischief by Use of Questionnaire.

A recent questionnaire sent out by a battery manufacturer to battery service stations all over the country, asked what was the main battery trouble. The answer came back indicating that 90 per cent of all battery troubles originated in the insulation.

The Willard Battery Company has overcome this battery trouble by a policy, which assures every user of their threaded rubber insulated battery that in case the insulation wears out the Willard Company will replace the insulation free of charge during the life of the plates.

How well this plan has been approved by car and truck manufacturers, distributors and motorists is shown in the figures given out by the Willard Company, which stated that 176 makers of cars and trucks have adopted the Willard threaded rubber insulated battery as standard equipment for their product.

According to A. J. Tobey, president of the Western Auto Electric Corporation, distributors of Willard batteries, 1,500,000 batteries were manufactured by the Willard Corporation during 1920, in which were used 32,000,000 pounds of lead, 24,000,000 pounds of oxides, consuming 1,412,099 kilowatts of electricity while being charged. The capacity of the Willard battery plant is 175,000 batteries per month.

BUILDS BOATS AT HOME.

The average business man, in his lighter moments, finds relaxation in motoring, motor-boating, golf and other pastimes, but H. M. Worcester, over Pasadena way, and prominently connected with one of Los Angeles' bond houses stands unique in this regard, for he combines all these with boat building. In his backyard at 766 West California street, he has built from bow to stern and completely equipped to the most minute detail three power boats—the Shogun II, Tai-ku and the Sho-gun III. It is tribute to his skill as an amateur builder, to state that the Tai-ku won the silver trophy in its class at Balboa last year.

Worcester's remarkable penchant for building boats made itself evident when he was a mere kid, 9 years old, back in old Boston town, where he first saw the light. At that age he built a motorized canoe, the Sho-gun I, that was a success from the first minute it took the water. Since then he has built from time to time a total of six power boats. Although he has never received a single lesson in drafting of any sort, he draws his own plans. His last, the Sho-gun III, is a twenty-one footer, with an eight-cylinder engine, for a power plant and with an estimated speed of twenty-nine miles per hour, at about 2000 r.p.m.

The three products of his individual labor made in Southern California, have been hauled to their launching places on a trailer hauled by his model N Hupmobile. The hauling of the Sho-gun II to Big Bear Lake in 1916 over the Cushenberry grade, was some achievement and was a tribute to his skill as a driver and to the car that did the hauling. While he is modest to the nth degree, as far as he is concerned, he'll talk by the hour about his Hupp that has made ninety-six trips into Big Bear, and which has turned close to 77,000 miles.

FORD HANGS UP NEW PRODUCTION RECORD.

OVER 100,000 CARS AND TRUCKS TURNED OUT IN ONE MONTH.

During the month of June, the Ford Motor Company, through its Detroit Factories and twenty-two assembly plants throughout the country reached the production of 108,962 Ford cars and trucks, setting up a new high record for one month.

Production of Ford cars and trucks has been steadily increasing since spring, and shows substantial gain over the same period last year. The second quarter of 1921, viz., April, May and June, shows an output of 301,796 Ford cars and trucks against 220,878 for the same three months of last year, or a net increase of 80,918.

Despite the fact, however, that the Ford plants have been running at maximun capacity, the demand for Ford cars and trucks is not being met, and at the present time, many thousand unfilled orders have been piled up ahead so that Ford sales are still limited by manufacturing facilities rather than marketing possibilities. Particularly is this true with respect to enclosed cars, for which the demand has been unusually heavy.

One reason cited by Ford officials for the unprecedented demand for Ford cars is the present tendency toward economy. Many of those whose names have been added to the long list of buyers might well have afforded larger and more costly cars than the Ford, but it is the belief that most prospective motor car buyers are investigating all of the costs incident to motoring much more carefully than at any period during the past five years.

After War—
A Better Car.

A clerk resigned from the Patent Office 70 years ago because "Nothing more can be invented." Benjamin Franklin was urged not to start a newspaper because three good newspapers were already printed in America.

Many people think motor car perfection stopped when the World War began. True, war stopped progress — temporarily. But now the spirit of leadership lives again, and we are privately showing to those who enjoy superiority a highly advanced car. AL WADDELL IN NEW ROLE.

Al G. Waddell has announced his resignation from the Durant interests to become associated with Glover Ruckstell in the Ruckstell Sales and Manufacturing Company, manufacturers of the Perfecto two-speed axle products for motor cars and trucks. Waddell has been closely identified with the Durant interests of the Pacific Coast for the past five years and his resignation came as a complete surprise to even his closest friends here where he is well known.

When the factory of the Chevrolet organization, under the management of R. C. Durant, was opened at Oakland, Waddell became advertising manager of the concern and held that position until March 1 of this year, when he and C. M. Steves, along with a number of other Chevrolet officials, resigned to join the new Durant Motors, Inc.

At the time the United States entered the World War, R. C. Durant granted Waddell a leave of absence and he served with the Fortieth Division at Camp Kearny and in France, returning in the spring of 1919.

For some time, Ruckstell has been negotiating with Waddell and in his new field, the former Durant man will have charge of the advertising as well as sales of the Ruckstell plant.

SUGGESTIONS POURING IN.

Harry W. Harrison, Southern California and Arizona distributor for the famous "oversize" Westinghouse battery, started something last week and now he wonders where it is going to end.

In the automobile section of last Sunday's Times Mr. Harrison published a story in which he sent out an urgent S.O.S. appeal for a name to call the ever-increasing number of fair motorists who add to the beauty and interest of Los Angeles traffic.

Mr. Harrison stated that he did not care about the honor of coining a new word, but he did wish there was some term in general usage that would enable automobile and accessory dealers to distinguish between men and women motorists, because of the growing need for making direct appeals to women who own or drive cars.

Many and unusual were the responses. Such names as "motorettes," "femautoist," "femotorist," "femobilist," "femautoette," "femotorette," "femobolette," etc., were given in the replies received by Mr. Harrison this last week.

But did they help Mr. Harrison?

"Now I'm worse at sea than ever," he stated, "because we may hurt someone's feelings by not using the name sent in. I'm afraid we will have to put it up to a committee composed of the various automobile editors of Los Angeles papers or else we will never reach a decision."

GEORGE BELLIS RETURNS.

George Bellis, formerly district manager of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company, with headquarters at Portland, Or., returns to Los Angeles to take charge of the sales department of W. D. Dunham, the West Seventh street Ford agency. Mr. Bellis, before going to the Northwest, was local manager for Goodyear and was active in the Advertising Club, of which he was a director, and during the war served on the war board.

"I am indeed glad to return to Los Angeles," he said, "but enjoyed my eighteen months' absence fully. It gave me a chance to see what I believe is the back country behind Los Angeles, and find throughout the Northwest and Mountain States, as far East as Denver, a very kindly feeling for Los Angeles and the business houses of our city. One thing that has helped to popularize Los Angeles in the intermountain section, is the road signs of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

"In the vast territory covered by Utah and Colorado, the principal roads are signed by the Auto Club and they are the only signs pointing the way. These signs are of great help to the tourists, and build up a kindly feeling with the local people, and everywhere I went, the Automobile Club of Southern California had blazed the trail for me, as a Los Angeles man, with the automotive industry."

ELKS PRAISE SHERIDAN.

George Goodrum, local Sheridan distributor, is all smiles during the last few days; said smiles being caused by the praise for a Sheridan touring car by the officers of the Oregon State Elks' Association who chose one as their official car for use during their national convention last week.

A car of class and full of pep is the way Dr. Rosenberg, president of the Oregon Elks referred to the Sheridan when they were ready to leave for their homes, and added that all of the delegates from his home State who were fortunate enough to have a ride in the car joined him in his opinion.

The Oregon Elks' officers who used a Sheridan besides Dr. Rosenberg were Monroe Goldstein, secretary; C. C. Bradley, Past Grand Lecturing Knight, and Dr. B. L. Norton, Exalted Ruler of Portland Lodge, No. 142, all of whom were unstinting in their praise for the performance of the car and thanked Mr. Goodrum on behalf of the Oregon delegates in attendance at the convention.

Many Advantages Easily Apparent to the Motorist.

"It is a pleasure to demonstrate the Chalmers to those who have even but a fair knowledge of automobile construction, for they immediately recognize its superiority and at the same time understand why the Chalmers is coming into general recognition as a particularly fine automobile," said R. O. Gould, head of the retail Chalmers sales organization of the Greer-Robbins Company.

"Due to its now piston construction, the Chalmers renders full service from the beginning without having to be broken in by its owner or driver. Such is not the case with many cars, including some sold for a higher price. Because the fuel is pre-heated before it enters the cylinders has much to do with the car's fine performance. Gasoline consumption is reduced, plug fouling and carbon formation are almost unknown, while must less oil is used. These points are of vital concern to car owners because they materially reduce upkeep costs. And because the motor works well, wear is reduced, meaning long life to parts and lowered replacement charges.

"A study of its construction and the manufacturing practice used shows that the Chalmers is made in a way equal to many cars selling for a great deal more, and that at its present price, which is but a little hore than many small cars."

COLYEAR HANDLES FULLER PRODUCTS.

PARTS DISTRIBUTORS TAKE ON CLUTCH AND TRANSMISSION LINE.

The Colyear Motor Sales Company, distributors of genuine standard units and parts, have recently been appointed sales representatives of Fuller and Sons, manufactures of Fuller clutches and transmissions.

"In looking around for a parts distributor," according to O. E. Harman, the representative of the Fuller factory, "we wished to make connections with a firm who could give our many clients the best and quickest service.

"In inquiring from dealers and distributors of cars and trucks we found that the Colyear Motor Sales Company had the best reputation along the lines of service we required.

"The fact that they are the largest distributors of parts in the country and could give us hourly and at the latest day service to the many users of our products, convinced us that they were the logical ones to be our representatives on the Pacific Coast.

"Their mail order department which takes care of all out of town orders has been brought up to the highest pitch of efficiency. One day service is maintained in every branch."

CLEAN YOUR ENGINE IF YOU WANT POWER.

DIRTY MOTOR CANNOT GIVE PROPER SERVICE, SAYS AUTHORITY.

"In Southern California where motoring is one of the most favorite diversions and because of the extensive use of the automobile for commercial purposes, automobile dealers are often showered with queries as to the proper way in which to keep a car in first-class condition," said J. W. Gaffney, head of the Gaffney Motor Sales Company, distributors of the Owen-Magnetic.

"Few motorists stop to consider the advantage of keeping a motor clean. It is a matter of experience that clean engines work better than dirty ones. Just why this is so, is hard to explain convincingly, since none of the reasons is particularly important. It is partly a matter of morale, but there are small practical reasons, too, which make a clean engine worth while.

"In the first place, a clean engine is likely to receive better care, since a clean engine demands better care; this is a question of psycholog. In the second place, a clean engine will get more attention because it is more pleasant to work around it. Thirdly, defects show up much more quickly on a clean engine. The stitch in time is discovered and made much sooner on a clean engine than on a dirty one."

Just Enough.

"Was there much of a gathering to see the ship start?" asked Col. Edwards, whose servant had been down to the wharf.

"Yassuh. Dey was a monst'ous lot o' folks."

MOTORISTS ATTEND AFFAIR AT NEWPORT.

MANY ATTRACTIONS AT BEACH CITY DELIGHT VISITORS AT CELEBRATION.

Newport Harbor is rapidly coming into its own, not only as a first-class summer resort, but as a yacht harbor of considerable class and a mecca for followers of the golfing game throughout Orange county.

A party from the McKelvey Motor Sales visited the harbor and bay district last week, weaving their way through thousands of other motorists en route oceanward to enjoy the cooling breezes of the Pacific, with perhaps some fishing and surf bathing as a portion of their entertainment.

The Orange County Country Club and its golf links and clubhouse are located high up above the harbor on the cliffs west of the inner bay. From the clubhouse a wonderful view may be obtained of the opposite cliffs at Corona Del Mar, of Balboa and Newport. The eighteen-hole golf course itself lies still farther to the west, between the clubhouse and the main high road leading from Santa Ana to the beach cities. In existence only a few years the members have builded themselves a home-like clubhouse, where the atmosphere is no less homey, and the layout of the links is such as to provide the expert or the novice alike with some interesting golf.

Farther down from the country club, Newport is reached, with its fairly wide sand area, so far but little marred by roller-coasters, lunch wagons and pop purveyors. There the bathing is excellent, while fishing from shore or pier is usually better than at some of the more northern beaches. On to the eastward, along the bay shore, the automobile road takes you to the beautiful and comfortable new clubhouse of the Newport Harbor Yacht Club, completed only last year, and now enjoyed to the limit by its large and growing membership.

ACCURATE HIGHWAY REPORT.

BY P. A. LORD.

[illegible] president of the Lord [illegible] Company, is now making [illegible] tour of the Northwest [illegible] this unusually complete [illegible] report of road conditions [illegible] the route he has [illegible].

[illegible] Los Angeles for San [illegible] the motoring is uninter[illegible] by any bad roads until the [illegible] of the pavement [illegible] Pass is reached. The [illegible] North of the pass [illegible] easily be good, but are [illegible] account of prospective [illegible] are rough for fourteen [illegible] Oso Grande, where pav[illegible] delayed, the road [illegible] paved, but the [illegible] scraping very badly. [illegible] the air has a blue tinge [illegible] odor in this vicin[illegible] happens along. [illegible] motorist can withhold [illegible] when he sees per[illegible] paved road so covered [illegible] dried mud that a car must [illegible] the pavement?

[illegible] through Paso Robles [illegible] paved, and is fine—[illegible] many California mo[illegible] who have not been over it [illegible].

MOTORING GRAND.

[illegible] of San Francisco one finds [illegible] roads for 195 miles, [illegible] detour of nine miles [illegible] dirt road. The country [illegible] the motoring grand. [illegible] almond, olive and peach [illegible], and it is inter[illegible] the world's larg[illegible] grown and canned at [illegible] Cal.

[illegible] commences at Red Bluff. Detours, rough dirt roads, and dry creek bottoms, with scarcely a sign of human habitation, are the motoring menu here. Some person put up a sign her "Cheer up, you are not lost." This reassured us, and as our Velie was traveling along over all the rough places without the least sign of trouble, we took courage and finally succeeded in reaching the highway, only to find it worse—very rough all the way into Redding.

The road from Redding to Shasta Springs is the finest mountain road I have ever traveled, very crooked and up and down, but a fine road, following the banks of the Sacramento River for sixty-eight miles to Shasta.

GOOD IN OREGON.

The motoring in Oregon is delightful, on the whole. We left Medford and drove to Grant's Pass, thirty-three miles of cement boulevards with one detour of two miles. Out of Grant's Pass about ten miles of fair to rough roads, the last two or three up a rough, clay grade, then down a long new and uncompleted grade on the other side; then a few miles of pavement, then more dirt road—in fact, so many different kinds of this patchwork road that it would be difficult to keep account of them.

Beyond the Siskiyou all is wonderfully bright and green; hills and mountains are covered with beautiful firs, decked in their summer green, all of the valleys are covered with fruit trees; wild flowers are everywhere in the greatest profusion. With the meadowlarks singing, the sun shining and the Velie purring along as sweetly as any car I ever drove, it made ideal motoring.

The average of Oregon roads we have passed I would call good. Some are excellent, some are poor, "good" covers the average. There are many grades, but they are easy if one's car has an abundance of power. All the way from Shasta we had been warned to look out for the "Smith grade" and since we did not seem to reach it, we finally stopped and asked a road gang where this stretch of locally famous mountain motoring might be. They informed us that we had already passed over it in the Velie, and we did not recognize it.

NOT SO GOOD.

From Eugene the road map says it is 136 miles to Portland, with boulevard all the way. But the book says nothing about fifty miles of the worst detours I have ever seen anywhere. Here we piloted the Velie sedan through mud, up grades, over rock-strewn roadways, down into deep washes, one after another, and the progress was necessarily slow. At one point the only way is over an abandoned stone highway with only the roughest two-inch to four-inch stones remaining, and where motorists have been running one or both wheels in the gutter, the uphill wheels tearing out these stones and scattering them everywhere. There are four miles of good pavement leading into the quaint old town of Salem, the capital, and beyond Salem twenty-four miles of good concrete, then six miles of fair gravel and twenty-eight miles of concrete leading to Portland.

This part of the trip leads through the Willamette Valley, famed everywhere for its surpassing beauty, and at its best during the early summer.

From Portland northward to Port Angeles, Wash., the motorist will find roads easily negotiated, but in one day we passed fifty road gangs working, and had several short detours to make.

ANNOUNCING
Cole Aero-EIGHT
$700 to $455
Reduction in Price

COLE engineers with a solid conviction that piston perfection is the most vital element in the delivery of continuous economical power, have developed The Constant Clearance Piston—which is fitted into the cylinder with less clearance than has ever been known to the automotive industry.

The scientific construction of The Constant Clearance Piston automatically equalizes all expansion and contraction.

There is perfect and constant compression with consequent gas and oil economy; and smooth noiseless power at all speeds and at all times.

These are "Built In" assurances of your permanent satisfaction in ownership and, considering the economy, safety, flexibility and comfort of the new Cole Aero-EIGHT, the present reduction in price is exceptionally notable.

Wow! Used to Walk in the Old Days—Now They Ride.

Remember when you used to be perfectly willing to walk several miles to jump in the old swimmin' hole? Nowadays when the neighborhood youngsters decide to swim they hop into an automobile and motor to the spot. Here's a gang of enthusiasts who have pressed a Velie into service for the afternoon's outing.

COOLING SYSTEM IS IMPORTANT FACTOR.

SHOULD BE EXAMINED BEFORE HARD USAGE DURING THE HOT SEASON.

"Always an important factor in efficient and economical truck operation, the cooling system should receive special attention during the hot summer months to eliminate, so far as possible, the danger of overheating. The following suggestions will prove helpful," according to L. P. Poyer of the Transport truck distributors.

"Examine hose and water pump connections each week for leaks. Circulation is frequently restricted by old hose kinking or the inside layer of rubber separating from hose.

"Fan belt must have proper tension. If fan rotates freely by hand, slipping on belt, slack should be taken up until belt grips pulley and fan will not spin by hand. Belt should not be too tight, however, as that will cause undue wear on fan spindle bearing. It is better to replace an old belt that requires frequent tightening than to try and keep it in service. The fan plays a most important part in cooling.

"Leaks around water pump stuffinng boxes can usually be stopped by tightening stuffing box nuts, but in time new packing will be necessary. Always use graphite packing. Ordinary candle wick packing will not last.

"The motometer will indicate when trouble exisits in cooling system or need of lubricating oil. Whenever red fluid gets above danger line, stop and investigate. It will also tell when lubricating oil needs replacement. Crank case should be drained and refilled every 500 miles."

Jim Murphy to Participate in French Classic.

Our own Jimmy Murphy is one of the four drivers to represent the United States in the French Grand Prize race over the Brest-Paris course this month. Joe Boyer is the other American chosen.

The complete American team includes two Frenchmen, Louis Inghibert and Albert Guyot. They came to America to buy racing cars and were persuaded to join the Duesenberg team. Inghibert and Guyot are the renowned French drivers who drove in the Indianapolis sweepstakes this year. Art Schafer, one of the local representatives of the Duesenberg Motors Company, says that Fred Duesenberg is giving up racing and that this is the last time he will enter into the racing game.

He is devoting all his time now to building his stock "Duesies" eight-in-a-row, and he has promised to have one of them on the Coast in the near future. There is a great deal of interest on auto row to see this new creation built by our old friend, Freddie Duesenberg.

A STRONG ORGANIZATION.

The head of any business inevitably makes known his ability to lead and manage by the selection of his departmental associates. The Elgin Motor Sales Company, 1414-1416 West Seventh street, are distributors in Southern California and Arizona for the Elgin six motor car. Most of the department heads were associates of Mr. Rieman's at the Elgin factory in Chicago. Among those in charge of departments of the Elgin Motor Sales Company are: Mr. R. G. Rowland, vice-president and general manager, a man of long automobile experience; was for some years general sales manager for the Elgin six distributor in Minneapolis, Minn., where he sold more than $1,000,000 worth of Elgin cars during the period he was with that company. Mr. P. H. ("Puss") Halbriter is one of Los Angeles' most widely known business men. As sales manager and treasurer of the Elgin Motor Sales Company he is rolling up a volume of business that makes it necessary for the Elgin factory to keep constantly a shipment of cars on the road to Los Angeles. "Puss" first became well known during the days when he was a star athlete in the Los Angeles High School. Mr. R. S. Marsh, advertising manager of the Elgin Motor Sales Company, was director of publicity for the Elgin six factory in Chicago previous to his coming with Mr. Ford Rieman. He is a man of long publicity experience. Mr. R. L. Andrews, service manager of the Elgin Motor Sales Company, is a man whose automobile experience dates back to 1906, at which time he was in the service department of the Ford Motor Company of Detroit. For many years he was in charge of the parts, service and accessory department of the Ford Distributing Company in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Western Wisconsin. Mr. W. B. Currier is in charge of the company's accounting department. He is a man of long experience in accountancy. Mr. H. C. Bernat, who is in the service department of the Elgin Motor Sales Company, was for a number of years chief inspector for the Falls Motor Company of Wisconsin, and for the past six years he was in charge of inspection at the Elgin six factory.

People Out to Get Real Value in Motor Cars.

Reports from automobile dealers throughout the country indicate that the motor-car business is swinging back into its normal stride. Any hesitancy on the part of the buying public was but a temporary state of mind, according to the consensus of business opinion. With the passing of the so-called "price flurry" the industry has become more than ever stabilized. Even in the South, where, in certain sections at least, fundamental conditions hampered sales for a time, business is rapidly picking up.

Harry M. Jewett, president of the Paige-Detroit Motor Car Company, has the situation pretty well sized up, according to Wallace Chorn of the A. E. Evans Company, Paige distributors here.

"Motor-car manufacturers have naturally been studying the conditions of the country pretty closely and making a rather fine analysis of their own industry," says Jewett. "It seems quite evident to us that while the buying mood of the public has returned, the attitude of the buyer has changed. There is an abundance of evidence that the people are more discriminating than ever before in the history of the automobile.

"Our own sales reports back up this statement. An analysis of the sales of our 6-66 models shows that 25 per cent were purchased by people who had hitherto owned cars selling at prices ranging from $4000 to $6000.

"It is apparent, therefore, that the public is giving close attention to values. This is the day when money must go as far as possible and every dollar must do its full duty. By proving a car the champion among stock cars on performance it becomes the car people want. They no longer take it for granted that the more expensive car is better. They are willing to be shown."

CERTAINLY THERE FOR GAS ECONOMY.

AVERAGES MORE THAN THIRTY MILES PER ON A LONG JAUNT.

James R. Zuck of Los Angeles, owner of a Briscoe touring car that he has driven better than 31,000 miles, has just completed a trip of about 900 miles, with an average of 31.6 miles per gallon of gasoline, according to a statement he made to Leland S. Foulke, president of the Boulevard Motors Corporation, Briscoe distributor for Southern California.

"I have done considerable crowing about the performance of my Briscoe to Mr. Foulke, so when I started on this trip I promised him I would keep an absolute tab on its gasoline consumption as well as that of oil," he said. "From here I went to San Jose and then to Gilroy, returning by the valley route. The total mileage was 899½ miles. The average gas mileage was 31.6 miles to the gallon. All told, I put five quarts of heavy Zerolene in the engine, and when I returned there was so much oil in the engine that it was smoking.

"This record is but the usual average of the Briscoe in all kinds of usage, according to my experience. Upkeep charges are practically nil. I take care of my car, which, of course, has something to do with that. There are plenty of motorists who would not have to dig down as often as they do, if they only knew how to treat the car they operate."

BROKEN PANES.

Convertible models are generally fitted with patent window antirattlers in the form of rubber tipped screws which press against the windows. If these antirattlers are used for the door windows the owner should be careful not to slam the door when the device is set. The result of this will probably be a broken glass. It is quite clear that if the screw protrudes out so far that it can touch the pane or its frame, if the door is slammed the pane will strike the screw and be broken. It would seem that the safest thing to do is to turn the antirattler away from the pane before the door is opened, or remember to close the door without slamming it.

ESSEX

All Its Owners Are Saying These Things

The Highest Proof of a Car

You have neighbors or acquaintances whose Essex cars have turned upward of 20,000 miles. They are familiar to every community. Ask them about it.

A Simple Way to Know

How little oil it needs. How much mileage on tires and gasoline they get. How continuously it remains in duty, day after day, without even minor repairs or adjustments. How quiet and smooth and free from repair needs it stays.

Engineering design accounts for much that makes the Essex so delightful and satisfying a car to own.

But materials and workmanship also must be worthy of that design. It must extend loyally even to small details, that you will never see, but on which so much of your satisfaction depends.

Built Like Costly Cars

Only in that way could Essex satisfy the builder's ideal as the finest car possible to build within its dimensions. Only in that way could it carry the good will and enthusiasm of so many owners, on up through thousands and tens of thousands of miles.

Don't You Want Such Satisfaction in the Car You Drive?

"When I bought the Essex car from you about nine months ago I think I told you I would let you know what I thought of it after I had used it awhile.

"Well to say it in a word I am delighted. The car is everything you claim for it and has far exceeded my expectations.

"The things which particularly appeal to me are the abundance of power it has, its comfortable riding qualities, and economy. After having driven the car over four thousand miles my tires hardly showed any wear at all, although I do a great deal of mountain driving. My gasoline average is a little better than twenty miles per gallon. Oil I use so little I have not kept any record of it.

"I have had several cars of different makes, none of which pleased me enough to want to write about it.

"Wishing you and the factory continued success.

"Sincerely,
"OTTO JAESCHKE,

Stephens Has Remarkable Record in Economy Run.

Stacks Up Three Sweepstakes to Its Credit.

Has Never Failed to Get Into the Money Column.

Tabulation of the results of California economy runs since 1918 discloses an unusual record made by the Stephens salient six. In compiling data on these contests, O. R. Fuller, president of the White Auto Company, local distributors, has found that the Stephens has won three sweepstakes, has placed first in class five times and second in class, twice.

The salient six won the sweep stakes honors in the Los Angeles Yosemite economy runs in both 1918 and 1919, and again in the Sacramento-Lake Tahoe economy-reliability run held early this month. First place laurels in class were captured by the Stephens in 1918 and 1919 in the Los Angeles Yosemite economy runs. Class cups were also won in the Rim of the World economy run of 1920 and the Sacramento-Lake Tahoe economy-reliability runs of 1920 and 1921. Second honors in class fell to the Stephens in the 1920 and 1921 Yosemite Valley economy grinds.

The A.A.A. records show that the salient six has never failed to place in a single test run in which it has been entered. In fact it has only twice fallen below first honors in the final scores.

But even more remarkable in this record are the figures on gasoline consumption on the Stephens score sheet. In the four Los Angeles-Yosemite economy runs, in which the salient six was entered, a grand average of 21.01 miles per gallon of gasoline was made. In the two Sacramento-Lake Tahoe economy reliability runs, this motor car has an average of over nineteen miles per gallon of gas. And in the one Rim of the World economy run, in which the Stephens competed, the astounding score of twenty-four miles per gallon of gasoline was turned in.

Yellow Chassis Stamps Truck as a Real Vehicle.

Everywhere you go in California it's poppies or Republic trucks that confront you, according to Vloney S. Beardsley, assistant manager for the Commercial Motor Company. Beardsley says that it's the yellow chassis of the Republic that is the more numerous.

"The yellow chassis of the Republic truck," says Beardsley, "is the confidence that the maker has in his product. If he were ashamed of it, he would not attempt to place such an apparent identification mark on the truck.

"The Republic factory is the world's largest manufacturer of motor trucks and its reputation is substantiated by the ever increasing numbers of Republics that you see where ever you go. The strong factory organization and the specialization in commercial motors place them in the position to build a truck that compares more than favorably, unit by unit with any truck built today.

HAYNES BOOSTERS IN MOVIE COLONY.

MARY THURMAN AND CLAIRE WINDSOR LIKE THIS SPECIAL JOB.

Considerable interest is being manifested in the new Haynes models. Both the larger and smaller types have been attracting considerable attention hereabouts. Although they are distinctly new creations in the automotive field, they are not, in any sense of the word, experiments.

The sport models and inclosed types are making big hits with members of the local moving-picture colony, according to Sales Manager Fred Clark of the local Haynes distributing organization. Both Mary Thurman and Clair Windsor are Haynes boosters.

It is a combination of proved transportation units, tried and verified, part by part, built and rebuilt, subjected to every conceivable test of the most rigid character by Haynes engineers throughout a long period. And not until the final result at least met, and in some instances surpassed, the expectations of those engineers was the Haynes permitted to be presented to the motoring public.

Every year, dealers and public alike have anxiously awaited the advent of the smaller and lighter Haynes car. The Haynes Automobile Company, had it so desired, could have capitalized on this demand some years previous, but the attainment of their hopes had not yet been quite realized, and so the new Haynes car was withheld.

AUTO PROVES BEST FOR QUICK MOVING.

INVALUABLE TO BUSINESS WORLD FOR PURPOSES OF RAPID TRANSPORTATION.

"The adaptability of the automobile to the individual transportation requirements of the business world has upset all speed laws in business, and is proving to be the surest, most economical and quickest method of individual transportation," says Gilbert Woodill, Pacific Coast representative of the Kissel Motor Car Company.

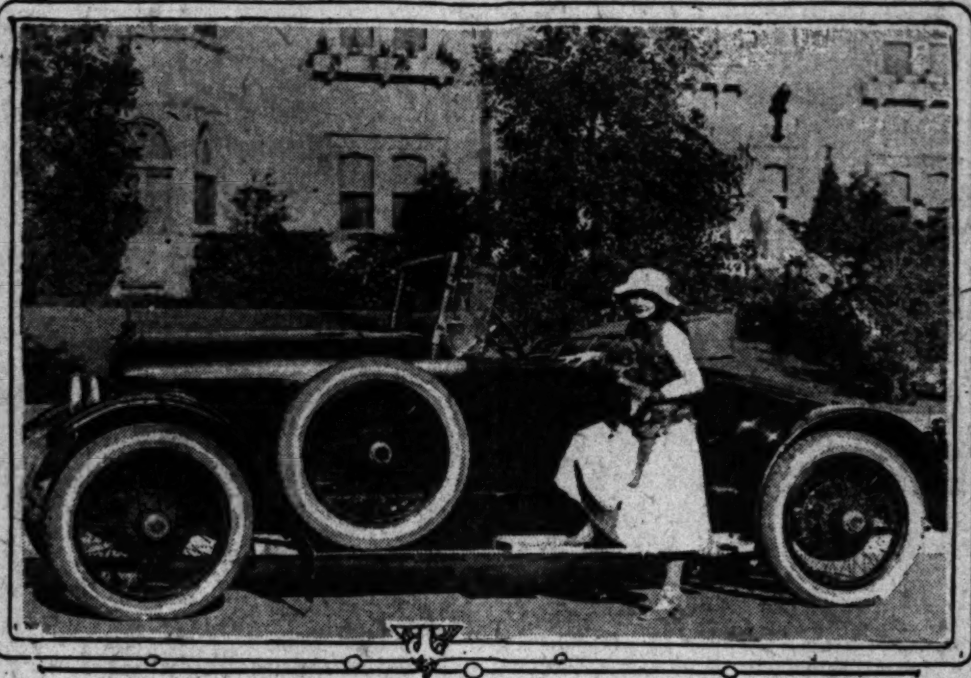
"In every line of business, the necessity of being on the job in time and all the time is imperative. Business men recognize no excuses of being late or behind time. The architect, contractor, manager or foreman, can now, at a moment's notice, drive from the office to where the work is progressing, getting there before mistakes happen instead of afterward.

"The doctor, with his horse and manufacturers, now equip their salesmen with automobiles to cover their territories in faster time and at less expense, without depreciating their physical or mental energy.

"The doctor, with his hrose and buggy, was better than walking, but even at that he was many times too late, due to the limitation of horse flesh. With the advent of the automobile, the doctor not only makes more calls in the same time, but he is better able, physically and mentally, to cope with additional cases and emergency calls."

INCREASING DESIRE FOR CORD CASINGS.

The increasing desire for cord tires from car owners is indicated by recent production figures of the Mason Tire and Rubber Company of Kent, O. These show 90 per cent of their production is on cord tires, and that this ratio is growing constantly, in favor of cords.



Knocking Them Dead Out in the Hollywood Direction.

VISITING ELKS GIVE GARAGE A BIG CHEER.

SAY THAT VARIOUS SERVICE FEATURES ARE BEYOND COMPARE.

Visiting Elks and local Ninety-niners have been generous in their praise of the service given at official B.P.O.E. automobile headquarters—the Grand Central Garage.

One of the principal service featuers that caught Brother Bill's eye was the squad of men who did nothing but move from car to car, dusting off the seats, brushing out the interiors, filling radiators, washing and polishing all the glass. This service vastly relieved Bill's anxiety about his white trousers.

In addition to this, a regular Grand Central service, thousands of Elks, who visited the garage, admired the big broad aisles, which gave free access to every car every minute, day and night. During the whole convention week, not one car was jammed or scratched in the slightest. When in for storage, each car is protected by individual concrete guards.

The rest-rooms, reading-rooms and comfortable lounges also appealed to the Best People on Earth, many of whom made the Grand Central a sort of club and headquarters.

MANY SPEED DEMONS USE ALEMITE SYSTEM.

INDIANAPOLIS SWEEPSTAKES WERE WON BY CAR WITH THIS LUBRICATOR.

"A 500-mile race at break-neck speed is perhaps the most gruelling test known for any product used or known to the automotive world," declared C. A. Roesch, manager of the Alemite Lubrication Company of California. The 1921 Indianapolis auto classic held last May was a great success. Not only was the weather ideal, the crowd a record-breaker and the race exceptional for excitement and thrills, but it was an Alemite equipment car driven by Tommy Milton that took the first 'Checkered Flag.'

"Another outstanding feature of this nerve-racking grind which proved the value of efficient lubrication was the fact that eight out of the nine cars that finished the 500 miles were equipped with the Alemite High Pressure Lubricating System.

"Since Alemite first appeared in the motor industry Tommy Milton has been an enthusiastic booster. Alemite is the last word in lubrication. This was his comment before last year's racing season, and since winning at Indianapolis he is even a stronger friend of high pressure lubrication."

SITE SELECTED FOR NEW DURANT PLANT.

The site selected for the Durant plant at Oakland is on East Fourteenth street and George R. Scott, formerly superintendent of the Chevrolet Coast plant, who is to have supervision of the construction of the new Durant factory, has announced that ground will be broken within another week or two. The plans have been approved and now the only thing that stands in the way of the construction of the factory is the awarding of the contract, which will be done within a few days.

LIBERTY SIX

Why is the biggest word of the day among car buyers. The time when money was lavishly spent on flashy things that merely pleased the eye is gone. The practical man of today wants to know why—before he signs the order.

Why Is the Liberty Six an Unusual Value?

It is built upon the Liberty policy of "Engineering First." In this car the greater percentage of cost is concentrated upon wonderful engineering and fine materials. It is built from the "insides" out to serve even better the second 10,000 miles than the first.

Why Is the New Liberty Triple-Head Motor Remarkable?

Three detachable cylinder heads solve the problem of securing six absolutely uniform combustion chambers. Maximum power and smoothness assured. Inspection of any two cylinders made easy.

Actual building cost is 23% greater than average motors, due to added engineering quality, finest materials, and most precise machining. Designed entirely by Liberty Engineers. Used only in the Liberty Six.

Why Is the Liberty Triple-Head Motor Powerful?

Has six powerful, long-stroke pistons and six uniform combustion chambers. The new Liberty Dry Gas Vaporizer and Special Manifold delivers an even flow of Dry Gas to all six cylinders, at all speeds.

These two features are largely responsible for its unusual power.

Why Is the Liberty Dry Gas Vaporizer a Triumph?

To get an even flow of Dry Gas to six cylinders has always been a problem. Perfect, smooth operation is impossible without it. The Liberty Dry Gas Vaporizer and Special Manifold have definitely solved this problem.

Why Is This Important to the Car Owner?

It means a tremendous increase in flexibility. The Liberty Six has a speed range of from 2 to 60 miles per hour on high. Idles at 1½ to 2 miles per hour on high. Picks up smoothly, after long periods of idling.

Why Is the Liberty Triple-Head Motor So Quiet?

Because it has a big, perfectly balanced, four-bearing crank-shaft, with 33⅓% more bearing surface than average motors, eliminating vibration.

All motor parts are carefully selected and weighed for accurate balance on delicate scales. Together with precise workmanship and perfect lubrication this insures a sweet-running, quiet motor.

Why Is It Free from Lubrication Troubles?

Lubricated by perfected Force Feed Oiling System, oil is forced to each bearing UNDER HEAVY PRESSURE. The entire quantity of oil in the motor, six quarts, is circulated through the motor each minute at average driving speed. A special oil regulator automatically insures correct oil pressure on every bearing at all times. No part can escape proper lubrication. 800 miles per gallon is average consumption. No other motor in any medium-price car has this complete lubricating system.

Why Is It Economical of Fuel?

Due to uniform combustion chambers, the Dry Gas Vaporizer and the Special Manifold fuel is completely utilized. The fact that this big, powerful 53 H. P. motor averages 18 miles per gallon proves economy.

Why Is the Liberty Six Easy to Drive?

Because of Liberty finger-weight controls, gears shift easily and quietly; clutch is unusually soft, yet engages with over one-ton pressure; steering mechanism works with wrist action; brakes, due to perfected leverage principles, set easily. Driving seat and control positions have been carefully placed for perfect comfort.

Why Does It Ride So Comfortably?

Proper distribution of weight combined with scientifically designed spring suspension makes the Liberty Six one of the easiest riding of all cars. A ten-minute ride will convince you.

Why Is It So Easy to Stop the Liberty Six?

Because of carefully calculated leverage principles, and 16% oversize brake drums, a light foot pressure sets the service brakes at any speed. Emergency brake is mounted on the rear of the transmission case—away from dirt and mud—always clean and in condition for positive action.

Why Are You So Sure the Liberty Six Will Stand Up?

Liberty Six records have proved it. No Liberty Six has ever retired from service. Many owners have driven 20,000 miles without even taking up motor bearings. The first Liberty Six is still in use by the original owner after five years of hard, daily service.

Why Should I Accept All These Claims?

You are not obliged to. Ride in the Liberty Six. Drive it. Question owners. All this will only confirm our enthusiasm. We will match this car with any car within $1000 of its price. Come over and see us or phone for a man.

...constellations, he reads ...at night. Accurately ...blazed trails and highways, through forests or across prairies, he is guided during the day by the Red Man's sense of location and knowledge of woodcraft. Fred Gilbert, Spirit Lake's Shooting Wizard, and the writer, were guests of Kemaha on an elk hunt in the Wyoming game fields. Our party was accompanied by Chief Nekawashetunka (Big Man), an Osage, also residing at Pawhuska.

Indians formerly held their lands in common, simply claiming the amount of tribal lands they desired to cultivate, the pasture lands being set apart for general utility. The government now allots individual holdings. Every buck, squaw and papoose receives an allotment of 667 acres, to have and to hold, to retain or be sold when Uncle Sam's landed restrictions are complied with by the owners. On our hunt in Wyoming, we outfitted at Cody, Wyo., followed the foothills of the Shoshone Mountains to the west, "packing-in" through Deer Creek pass and across the Yellowstone River.

CERTAIN STREAMS.

Boundary lines between Yellowstone Park and Teton preserve are meandered by designated streams, ridges and canyons. Lines of demarcation are very indistinct. Park-bred animals, during the winter months, visit the lowlands, where many elk, deer, moose and mountain sheep are seen. Our camp was located in the foothills, south of Yellowstone Park, between Jackson's Lake and the Teton range of mountains. A rough, mountainous country, inaccessible at most points, but teeming with fish and game. With the first fall of snow in the mountains, large game immediately start for a lower altitude. The Indians read the signs, knew animal characteristics, anticipating their migrating movements in advance.

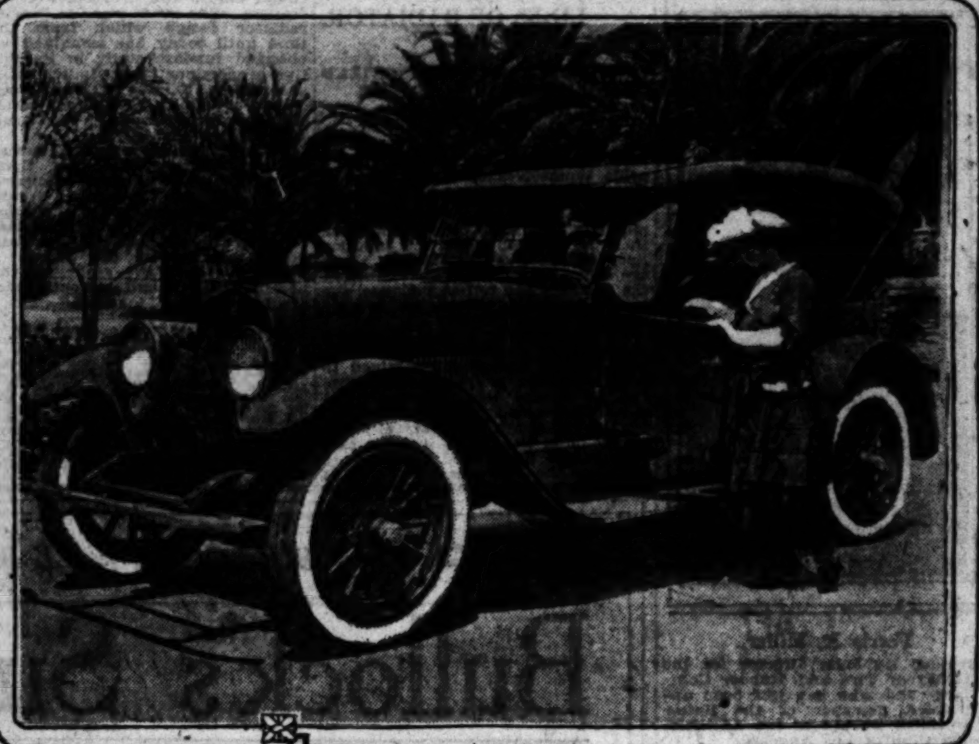
The first afternoon in camp an old bull elk was heard, lustily bugling to his concubines from the mountain side, about a half-mile away. When he was located, with the assistance of a strong pair of glasses, he was surrounded by a harem of approximately twenty cows. Standing with head erect, surmounted by an elegant set of antlers, he was certainly "Monarch of all he surveyed," or had in possession. Chief Kemaha started a long detour, hoping to get a favorable shot at this old timer. We slipped down into the valley, awaiting his arrival at that point. "Up-stream" approached within about 400 yards of the wapita before he sounded the danger signal and the entire herd came dashing down the mountain, breaking sticks, vaulting down timber and making as much noise as an avalanche. A small four-point buck, separated from the herd and came directly toward our hide, crossing very near. We did not shoot, fearing a shot might be the means of losing the mammoth buck formerly located, which we incidentally failed to see again that evening.

BACK TO CAMP.

We started back to camp. It was growing dusk, in a short time Egyptian darkness settled in the valley. It was like the interior of a pocket, with no trails to follow. Slowly we crawled over the brush and down timber, the Indians heading for the camp, true as a compass. Next morning we were astir before daylight. Soon our prospective victim was heard calling his family together, long before we left our camp. We located him on a timbered knoll, covered with low scrub oak and fallen timber.

Kemaha elected to stalk the old patriarch, while we lay in wait on the opposite side of the hill secreted in some down timber. We had a fine view, through our glasses, of this antlered beauty. He would loudly bugle, then quickly look in different directions, apparently sensing impending danger. He was unable to locate, yet remained at his post, prepared to protect his numerous concubines. Kemaha was circling the knoll, and approaching from the opposite side. It seemed an age that we waited. The old bull elk seemed ready to take his departure any moment.

We knew the chief was working slowly and quietly, and we hoped the monarch would run within our killing zone, should he make the break. He came crashing down the hillside, broadside to "Big-Man," whose rifle emitted a snappy report, followed by an immediate second shot, which pulled him down. He took the count. In a short time the animal was skinned, teeth extracted and meat stripped ready for "jerk." The six-pronged head was then trimmed for mounting and we headed for camp. A delightful ten days' outing with the Osage chiefs.



You Can Take All Your Multi-Cylinders—She Prefers a Four.

Warm Weather is Without Terrors for Stutz Motor

Over 100 degrees right out in the open and the old sun just pouring out some more of its warmth on top of your head. Boy, it was hot last week out in San Bernardino. If you doubt it, just ask Walter Brown of Stutz fame and his sales manager, W. H. Court.

Brown and Court, with their respective families, bundled on the old luggage and streaked it out for Little Bear. When they reached San Bernardino and took on board some gasoline to insure a full tank for the climb over the switchbacks, the mercury stood exactly at 100 in the shade.

"Nice weather for a Central American but a little overheated for comfort," was Brown's remark, "and it gets hotter all the way up the grade!"

"It was my desire to turn back," said Court, but the ladies were anxious to see the Little Bear and as long as they had suffered for three hours already, they were game for the full distance, so we stepped on her a bit and the Stutz tore at her task as if the heat had eased up her muscles.

"We didn't break any records for speed but we got there in better style than a lot of them. Talk about red-headed cars, why most every car there at the top was boasting of an auburn-crowned radiator. Rust was sure the popular color of the season, and we were hopelessly out of date. The radiator of the Stutz was just a neutral tint, for all the way up the grade we never boiled. There was always an eighth of an inch or more to spare on the Motometer."

CREEPING RIMS.

The driver who is particular about his car should examine his rims and tires at least once a week. Few owners realize that a rim with its tire can creep around the wheel if the shoulders on the wheel which hold the demountable rim are the least bit worn. This occurred recently and was noticed only because the valve stem came through the wheel hole at an acute angle. This was caused by the rim and tire creeping around, thus tending to pull the valve stem out of its place. If the valve stem is held firmly by means of a cap, then the strain falls on the lower portion of the stem and the portion of the inner tube surrounding it. In the case mentioned the pull was so great that the valve stem was cut almost in two. Also in tightening the rim lugs be sure that you tighten in the correct order. If they are tightened one after the other, in order around the rim, there is apt to be too much space on one side and too little on the other. Tighten one lug and then another which is nearly opposite, and so on around.

FAIR PURCHASER IS STRONG FOR DU PONT.

IS ATTRACTED BY GRACEFUL LINES AND FOUR-SPEED TRANSMISSION.

Seldom does a motor car prospect, specially a representative of the fair sex, visit the various automobile establishments of local auto row demanding as the most important factor in the selection of a new car one having a four-speed transmission.

This, nevertheless, was what happened when Gertrude Norris Tooney, well known in Southern California motoring and musical circles, demanded of a salesman of the Gaffney Motor Sales Company, distributors here of the DuPont four.

In addition to the fact that the DuPont has a four-speed transmission, the fair purchaser of new DuPont touring car was also attracted by the beautiful lines of the car and the ease of handling.

Referring to the latter feature of the DuPont, J. W. Gaffney stated: "Unusual care and thought has been devoted to the comfort and convenience of the driver in designing the DuPont car. The angle of the seat and back cushions and the position of the steering wheel have been carefully worked out."

PUTTING BENEFICIAL VAPOR IN ENGINE.

NEW DEVICE DOES THE WORK IN REAL EARNEST: THOROUGHLY TESTED.

With patents pending on a design believed by engineering authorities to be the simplest and most efficient yet perfected for the introduction of any beneficial vapor into the gasoline engine, and with nearly 5000 satisfied users and boosters in Southern California alone to add impetus to their present campaign, McComas & Goodwin, manufacturers of the Visible Vacuum Vaporizer, have arranged a production schedule to supply the rapidly increasing demand for their product created by its passing, in the mind of the experienced motorist, out of the experimental stage into the realm of established necessities.

"The theory of adding other desirable elements to the gas mixture, before its entry into the combustion chambers, has always been conceded by engineers and experienced motorists," said Capt. Wilbur Goodwin, in discussing the manufacturers' plans. "Carbon accumulation, with all of its disastrous effects, low gasoline mileage, poor motor lubrication, overheating, lack of power and speed and the numerous other disagreeable developments in the operation of an internal combustion motor, must all have their fundamental causes.

"It has been our belief during a long period of experimental work, that more efficient and satisfactory operation of the gasoline engine is to be gained by combating these troubles at their very source, instead of application of the many and varied remedies."

ENDURANCE THE THING THEY WANT.

Right After It Comes Economy; Maxwell Has Both Features.

What qualities does the American buyer first look for in the purchase of a motor car? This question has been the subject of debate for a long period, but it seems to have been settled at last.

In a recent address before the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World at Atlanta, J. C. Long of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, stated that "endurance is the most popular, and economy the second favored feature of the motor car, according to a nationwide poll of motorists. Comfort is the third consideration, followed by price. Speed and distinctive refinements have little interest for the average purchaser."

In commenting upon the remarks made by Long, George Pearson of the Union Motors Company, Maxwell distributors here, states that recent tests have proved the reliability of the Maxwell both as regards endurance and economy, the two most sought-for features of the motor car in the mind of the American public.

"Recent records will show," states Pearson, "that the Maxwell is a winner both as regards endurance and economy. Perhaps both of these qualities were never better illustrated than on the recent Oakland to Portland run made by C. W. Niemeyer, a realtor of Salem, in a privately owned car. In his run, Niemeyer not only smashed the record for the run, but used only two quarts of oil on the trip and achieved an economy mark of twenty-six miles to the gallon of gasoline.

"If ever the reliability, endurance and economy of a car were proved it was done so on this run, in my belief."

LINCOLN HAS A CHOICE YEAR AHEAD.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CHICAGO (Ill.) July 16.—Lincoln Motor Car Company continues to lay foundation for further expansion. On Nov. 1, 1920, the company started with fifteen distributors. It now has fifty-six distributors and eighty-two dealers, an increase of 123 organizations, an official statement says. Sales reflect these contracts. During the first quarter Lincoln shipped 342 cars. Each month of the second quarter has bettered the entire first quarter's volume of business.

July schedule calls for seventeen cars daily, the same as June, when a daily output of twenty cars was gained through increased labor efficiency. Every indication is for holding of business through July.

June sales in Philadelphia, New York and Chicago established records.

Regrinding Cylinders Saves Gas And Oil
Something Every Motorist Should Know

Sixth in a series of talks by the Cylinder Grinders of Los Angeles

It's a well-known fact that when "leakage" occurs between the piston and the cylinder wall of any motor. —compression is lost.
This leakage may be caused by a scored cylinder wall,—and one that is out of round,—or one not properly finished when new.
But what of the other evils which result from this leakage?

Serious Result Leaky Cylinder

When the motor first "misses," due to a weakened mixture in the combustion chamber, the first tendency of the driver is to enrich the mixture. This may temporarily overcome the difficulty.
But,—an excess of raw gasoline is introduced into the cylinder, and working down past the rings, eventually reaches the crank-case, and mingles with the oil there, making the oil useless for lubricating. Thus gas and oil are both wasted, with a possible result of scored cylinders.

Piston and Rings Fit a Reground Cylinder

Regrinding the cylinders enables the pistons and rings to fit with more exactness—will prevent this leakage—and will eliminate the many motor troubles likely to result if leakage is neglected.

"Quaker State" the uniform high-quality oil for summer tours

You can't have an enjoyable touring season unless you use a high-grade oil that protects your motor under extreme heat—that will lubricate properly when you have a hard pull, such as a few miles of low gear through sand, or a steep mountain grade.

And Quaker State, the only certified oil, refined from the finest grades of Pennsylvania crude, is the only oil that has a published list of specifications—insurance that every quart of Quaker State you buy is of the same unvarying high quality.

Quaker State sales have steadily increased because of its uniform quality and performance, with more miles per dollar. And it's the cheapest insurance you can carry for your motor.

Recent reductions in price should increase the popularity of Quaker State with discriminating motorists.

MILLIONS ARE THROWN AWAY.

Large Loss on Batteries is Due to Ignorance.

Life of Electrical Unit May be Prolonged.

Careful Attention Assures Proper Service.

The fact that the average motor-car owner in America does not understand the construction of his storage battery and the care it needs is responsible for millions of dollars loss every year through premature failure of this important unit of the automobile equipment. The average life of a storage battery in actual service is fifteen months. With proper care this length of service can be raised to twenty months or more. Suppose we try to see why and how.

There are several different kinds of storage batteries in use today, the familiar lead battery with liquid solution, the same type with dry electrolyte and the Edison nickel iron battery being those commonly encountered. In motor-car eqipment the lead plate battery with liquid solution is the prevailing type.

COMPLICATED UNIT.

The automobile storage battery is an electro-chemical unit, containing plates of a lead composition, submersed in a solution of sulphuric acid known as the electrolyte, and having a specific gravity of 1.30 at 70 degrees F. The plates in the battery are two distinct kinds, known as positive and negative. The current leaves the battery by way of the positive and returns through the negative. The battery plates are made in the form of grids, the spaces being filled with a special composition of lead. The positive plates have a filler consisting of a peroxide of lead, reddish-brokn in color. The negative plates employ a spongy composition of lead.

These plates are separated by strips of specially treated wood, or sometimes of other materials. The elements, positive and negative plates, are inclosed in jars of hard rubber, which are filled, or nearly so, with solution of sulphuric acid. Each of these jars is known as a cell, and a battery may consist of one, two, three, four or more cells, according to the power needed.

The word "storage" in connection with the electro-chemical battery conveys a false impression. The storage battery does not store anything. The actual work of the battery consists in a chemical action between the acid solution and the active material contained in the slate. Now, this chemical action is always going on within the battery, even when it is not actually giving out current. But when the part is called upon to deliver power the violence of the chemical action is enormously increased, electrical current is generated and dispatched on its lights or whatnot.

PRODUCES CURRENT.

The chemical action within the battery which produces the current also produces a substance known as lead sulphate, which is the positive on the plates. This sulphate is a white substance and its presence on the plates weakens the action of the battery, because its formation has actually withdrawn acid from the solution of electrolyte. Thus, if this condition reaches its ultimate stage the plate will be thick with sulphate deposits and all the acid would be withdrawn from the electrolyte, leaving plain water. In this case the battery would be able to produce no current whatever.

Now, when electrical current from an outside source is sent into the battery, it causes a reaction to take place which is exactly the reverse of the former, as it breaks up the suplhate deposit on the plate and drives it back into the liquid in the form of acid. When this operation has been completed and all the deposit has been removed the battery is ready to begin its chemical action again and produce electric current.

It is obvious that the liquid with which the battery cells are filled, in the course of time, will suffer evaporation. This is doubly so, because the chemical action of the battery produces a certain amount of heat which hastens losses due to inevitable evaporation. To make up for this and keep the liquid up to the proper level, distilled water must be added at regular intervals, once a week in warm weather and once in two weeks during the cold season. Filtered water may be bought at any drug store or garage, or rain-water or water made by melting ice may be used. When the liquid has been reduced by evaporation, obviously its acid content is just the same, and all that is necessary is to bring it up to the proper level by adding the plain water.

On the other hand, if any of the liquid has been spilt or has leaked out of the jars in any way, acid has also been lost, so that in replenishing it it will be necessary to add acid and water in proper amounts, that is to say, with a specific gravity of 1.30.

Whenever an owner opens his battery to refill the cells with water he should test the electrolyte with an instrument called the hydrometer syringe. This is a large glass cylinder with a rubber bulb at one end and small graduated cylinder inside. By means of the rubber bulb a quantity of the liquid is drawn up into the cylinder; the small graduated cylinder floats in this and by its depth indicates the specific gravity of the fluid. If this is 1.28 to 1.30 or thereabouts, the battery is fully charged; if it falls to 1.15 the battery is discharged and should be recharged at once.

LITTLE TROUBLE.

The modern car strives to remove much of the work of caring for the battery from the shoulders of the owner. The generator is installed to recharge the battery as the car runs. This is a great convenience, but it may also be incorectly adjusted and overcharged and undercharged. The driver will have to find out what rate of recharging is demanded by his particular form of service and have the charging rate set to meet that condition. Also remember that even though the generator may be perfectly attuned to the needs of the operator, keeping the battery perfectly charged all the time, it will not put water in the cells. The car owner must do that with his own hands if he wants to be sure the part is properly maintained.

If the battery is kept properly charged there is no need to worry about the electrolyte freezing, as the acid prevents that occurrence until 40 or so degrees below zero is reached. When a persistent breakage of cells occurs it may be set down to any improper mounting of the battery. The clamps holding the part in place should be tightened occasionally. If the battery discharges with undue rapidity short circuits should be looked for and the wiring system should be inspected at intervals for this trouble. The terminals must be kept clean and bright, and it is well to grease them occasionally to prevent rust and corrosion.

HUSTLE AND BOOST GETS THE BUSINESS.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

TOLEDO, July 16.—The automotive industry is making a big rebound to normal conditions because manufacturers have thoroughly convinced the public that they have cut their prices to absolute rock bottom, President John N. Willys of the Willys-Overland Company, stated upon his arrival in Toledo.

Willys and Walter P. Chrysler, executive vice-president of the Willys interests, came to Toledo for conferences and to attend a luncheon at the administration building in honor of Charles B. Wilson, vice-president of the Overland.

According to Willys the Overland organization has on hand 15,000 unfilled orders for Overland and Willys-Knight cars. As an indication of the extent of the revival of Overland business, Willys referred to the shipment of sixty freight cars last week, loaded to capacity with 200 machines for the Overland distributors at Philadelphia.

In commenting upon the general industrial situation throughout the country, Willys said: "The business concerns which hustle and boost are the ones that will show a profit for the year 1921."

SIX SEEMS TO BRING GOOD LUCK.

Number Plays Interesting Part in Stock Race Over Nevada's Desert Roads.

Automobile row is all agog over the splendid performance made by Bill Bramlette in his Leland-built Lincoln in the recent 100-mile Nevada road race. Full details of Bramlette's sensational victory are now available coming through the Walter M. Murphy Motors Company, Lincoln distributors for this territory.

Some rather peculiar incidents attached to the Lincoln's participation in the race. For instance, the number of the car in the race was six, and it drew sixth place. The engine number on the car was likewise six, and records show that it was the sixth car built at the Lincoln factory. Perhaps these were omens of good luck, for at any rate Bramlette was never in any danger of losing.

To Bramlette went the first prize in the race, which consisted of a handsome gold cup and a cash award of $1000. The presentation of the gold cup interested the winner considerably, for it was handed over by beautiful Viola Dana, of moviedom fame. The second place car got a cup and a cash prize of $750, while the third place car received $500 and a trophy.

The actual measurement of the course showed a mileage of 1016 miles. The official time of the Lincoln car was 29 hours, 49 minutes, and 49 seconds. This meant an average of 34.49 miles per hour. In the course of the race no changes were made in the front tires of the Lincoln, but five changes were necessary for the rear tires, owing to spikes and nails picked up on the roads near some of the old mining claims.

LEAKY CYLINDERS REDUCE VITALITY.

PROPER ATTENTION GIVEN TO COMBUSTION ASSURES PLENTY OF POWER.

Considerable motor trouble could he eliminated, and the life of the average car prolonged to a considerable degree, if proper attention was given to combustion going on inside the cylinders.

Leakage in the cylinders, past the pistons and rings, weakens the mixture in the combustion chamber, and faulty combustion ensues, reducing the power and vitality of the motor.

It is customary for the average driver to blame the leakage—or this loss of power—to faulty piston rings. Accordingly new rings are inserted, and for a short time, an improvement is noted, but it is short-lived, and the motor again becomes unresponsive.

New rings alone will not correct the difficulty. Nor will new pistons and rings together, effect a cure, especially if the cylinder wall is scored, out-of-round, or not accurately finished.

That is why the cylinder grinders of Los Angeles have endeavored to point out the qualifications necessary to good compression, and by showing how many of these troubles may be eliminated by regrinding the cylinder walls.

A scored cylinder wall, or one not exactly round, will cause "leakage" —even though the pistons and rings are new. A cylinder bore not absolutely square with the base of the cylinder, will force the piston to operate in a cramped position, and reduce the power of the motor. This latter case is frequently found in the smaller cars, where the cylinders have not been ground when new.

LABORATORIES TEST VALUE OF STEEL.

"Not even after we secured the best possible steel, and made our springs as carefully as they could be made, were we satisfied the results were going to be satisfactory," said Mr. Walter T. Clarke, branch manager of the Hassler Pacific Company in this city.

"We have recently installed a complete laboratory, which we believe to be the most complete spring laboratory in the world. In this room we are continually conducting tests, verifying our beliefs in the serviceability of Hasslers, and proving the quality of our present production as compared with that of past years.

"One of the unique tests is with a compressing machine which compresses the springs at the rate of 400 times a minute. Springs are taken at random from the stock going through and placed in this test. Each spring is given a sufficient number of compressions in rapid succession to equal twenty-five years' of driving. We believe this is the most remarkable test made anywhere with such a product, and that Hassler springs stand up under it regularly speaks well for the character of the product."

IDENTIFY CARS BY LINES OF RADIATOR.

PEERLESS EASILY RECOGNIZED BY INDIVIDUAL STYLE OF THE HOOD.

There are many motorists who pride themselves on their ability to recognize various makes of automobiles, and it is a fact that the majority of these motorists base their recognition upon the familiar lines of the radiator. While there are other "ear marks" that those in the industry can tell at a glance, the average motorist relies upon radiator lines.

Twenty years ago, in a little shop in Cleveland, a group of men were perfecting a motor car destined to become known internationally. The cooling system was completed and it only remained to fashion a shell for the radiator. Very carefully and all by hand the metal was cut out, hammered, fitted and moulded to cling to the radiator core, and at the same time smoothing out the rough angles and bridging over the corners. The result was the Peerless radiator design which from that time until today has remained unchanged fundamentally in its relative proportions and individuality, according to Stanley W. Smith, president of Smith Brothers, Peerless distributors for Southern California, who said:

"The first Peerless cars made such an excellent reputation for themselves and were so easily recognized by the radiator, that it was decided never to make any material changes in the design. Subsequent Peerless cars have impressed that radiator design indelibly on the minds of people all over the globe, so that now old models and current models are immediately identified."

WHEN RIM WILL NOT FIT.

When a rim with tire is mounted on the wheel it often happens that the rim cannot be moved into place, remaining partly on and partly off. Slight springing of the rim is all that is needed, and this may be done by placing the head of the jack against the hub of the wheel and the base of the jack on a protruding portion of the rim. Thus sprung a little, a hammer blow will slide the rim over the edge of the wheel. In most cases of this kind the mere operation of the jack will force the rim over the wheel.

SERVICE NOW HAS A NEW INTERPRETATION.

WORD IS STRETCHED TO INCLUDE EVERY SUPPLYING NEED BY LOCAL DEALERS.

Service has a new interpretation on motor row. Where it used to confine itself to advice and minor motor adjustments it now includes supplying every need, all manner of car parts and accessories being available to the car owner at his dealer's establishment.

This new idea of service is carried out to the very limits of conceivable adequateness by J. Benjamin Fahy, authorized Ford dealer of Los Angeles. One entire building is used by Mr. Fahy for the housing and display of Ford parts and accessories. If assembled, these parts would complete several cars and trucks, it is estimated. And there is no need for accessories that cannot find its answer in Mr. Fahy's supply, Ford owners declare.

This service department is not only proving a boon to Ford owners in Los Angeles and surrounding territory directly, but is being employed as a source for needed supplies and equipment by a number of garage men in the city. The resulting saving in time and cost of repairs results in added benefit to Ford owners. Motorists and repair men have found increased satisfaction in the fact that Mr. Fahy's accessory and parts supply is adequate to meet the most unusual or repeated needs for Ford equipment.

"For this reason I experiment for weeks, previous to each race, with the various new accessories, lubricants and other motor products that have made their appearance on the market. When I have tried them all, I select those which have proved their superiority in rigid tests.

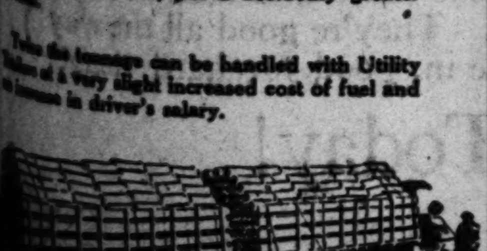
Utility Trailers Add to Earnings

You can overload a truck up to a certain limit, but after that the increased operating cost and added depreciation and repairs prevent added profits.

By putting the same tonnage with quite a bit extra on Utility Trailers there is very little added cost of operation, no increase of repair bills above what you have on your truck, but a decidedly greater revenue.

Twice the tonnage can be handled with Utility Trailers at a very slight increased cost of fuel and no increase in driver's salary.



Utility Trailers are designed for Western needs and built in Los Angeles in 38 models.

When you have special needs our engineers will design trailers to meet your particular requirements.

This game is taken from Preston Ketchum's column in the Milwaukee Sentinel, and was played between G. T. Southworth and H. E. Moore in a tournament held in the Y.M.C.A. in Milwaukee. Mr. Ketchum remarks: "This was their deciding game and practically decided the result of the tournament. While Mr. Moore failed to take advantage of his opportunity in this game he can console himself with the fact that Alfred Jordan did the same thing in the last American tourney.

SPEED UNNECESSARY TO SHIFT TO HIGH.

EIGHT OR TEN MILES PER HOUR SUFFICIENT TO CHANGE FROM SECOND

"There are numerous automobile drivers who do not seem to understand that it is not necessary to race a motor in order to shift from low gear into intermediate, especially when starting," declared Glenn R. Keith of the Standard Steel Automotive Corporation, distributors here of the Standard Eight.

"If there is anything that grates on an experienced driver's nerves it is the roaring of a motor, grinding of gears and the resulting leaping of a car when it is being put in motion. In starting the car it is not necessary to speed up to fifteen or twenty miles per hour before shifting into high. It is perfectly feasable to make the shift at eight or ten miles per hour.

"This fact is obvious inasmuch as every modern car will throttle down well below eight miles per hour, and in fact there are few indeed, that will not go below five miles per hour. From this it is plain that eight or ten miles an hour is an ample rate at which to make the shift.

"Low gear should be used merely to get the car rolling. The purpose in using low gear at all when making starts on the level is to save clutch wear. If the car is started habitually in second clutch life will be short. As soon as the car is in motion it practicable to shift to second."

FABRIC TIRES SEEM TO BE DISAPPEARING.

Will the time ever come when the fabric tire will disappear from the pneumatic market?

That is the question tire men all over the country are asking themselves, following the report that the Midcontinental Tire Company had discontinued the manufacture of fabrics and would specialize in cord pneumatics. Confirmation of the report was made in an announcement here a week ago by Leon S. Utter, local distributor for the Midco products.

Coincident with this disclosure of change in factory production program comes Mr. Utter's announcement of a startling reduction in the price of all remaining stocks of Midco fabrics, these quality products being now recognized as unusual values.

Commenting on the question of whether fabric tires would in a few years disappear altogether from the pneumatic market, Mr. Utter says:

"I do not believe the trade need look for such a universal change in tire manufacturing policy for a long time yet, but on the other hand, I see no cause for alarm in even the remote probability of such a step. It might really prove a boon to motorists."

Lloyd L. King,
Head of the new Ford agency which bears his name. The new plant is located in the southeast section at 160 South Pacific Boulevard, Huntington Park.

NEW FORD AGENCY TO MEET DEMAND.

LLOYD L. KING IS CHOSEN TO OPEN TERRITORY IN SOUTHEAST.

The Ford Motor Car Company of Los Angeles has recently opened another authorized Ford agency in the southeastern part of the city. Its temporary location will be at the Owl Garage, 160 South Pacific Boulevard in Huntington Park.

This section of Los Angeles is one of the fastest growing parts of the city and in order to give quicker and more efficient service to the multitude of Ford owners in the southeast the company selected a man who for the past six years has sold Ford products in Los Angeles and vicinity. During the past two years he has been sales manager of one of the largest Ford agencies. The man to be chosen for this important territory was Lloyd L. King, formerly of the J. A. Nadeau Ford agency.

Mr. King established the remarkable record of selling forty-four Ford cars in a single month during 1916, which record is still standing today.

SOLDER IN THE GAS TANK.

If you should have fuel feed trouble which you cannot locate, remove the gasoline tank and shake it. In four out of five cars fitted with cheap tanks there always are a few pieces of solder on the inside of the tank. These pieces work their way to the place over the feed line and prevent the proper flow of fuel. There is only one of getting the pieces out and that is to shake them out.

SAYS LAFAYETTE IS IT.

An interesting story of a transcontinental trip made delightful by the remarkale performance of the motor car is told in a letter received this week by H. J. Goger of the Troy Motor Sales Company from H. A. Edwards.

The letter was written from Milan, N. H., early on the morning following the arrival of the party after its long trek across the continent.

Every line speaks with enthusiasm of the performance of the LaFayette touring car, which was purchased from the Troy Motor Sales Company and taken across the country within the month.

The merit of LaFayette design and the superior construction of this high-grade motor car is best evidenced by excerpts from the letter, which follows:

"Arrived here last night at 6 p.m., making a trip of a little more than 4000 miles in our LaFayette without any trouble with the car. It has never missed a shot or quit us in any way since we started in spite of the fact that we had about 600 miles of awful mud, east of Socorro, N. M. Lots of the time we leveled the ground with out axle, but came through all okeh and passed many cars that left the coast a week before we did.

"So far have not even had a spark plug out. We can not say too much for the LaFayette and the easy riding qualities of it."

Edwards is a Los Angeles man, well known in business and social circles here and his eastern motor trip is almost a yearly affair. His enthusiasm over the car is, therefore, the enthusiasm of a man who knows motor cars and motor values and is all the more proof of the remarkable performance abilities of the LaFayette.

A MISSOURI GIANT FELLED.

The biggest elm in this part of the State was cut down and sold at auction south of Excelsior Springs recently. The money is to be used in the road fund of the district. The auctioneer gave his services free, and the residents of the place cut down the tree and prepared it for sale. The stump, cut at the ground, measured twelve feet across. Six feet above the ground it was twenty feet in circumference. The main part of the trunk had to be rolled into a ditch, as it was too big for hauling or for an ordinary saw to cut. One of the limbs was thirty-two inches around, and it was estimated that there were from 75 to 100 cords of wood in the whole. It took two days and a half to cut the tree down, and about ten days to cut it up. Only about half of the wood was sold. The tree stood in the middle of the road.—[Excelsior Springs (Mo.) Standard.

WANT MORE POWER? EYE YOUR ENGINE.

MAY BE THAT THE CYLINDERS NEED A LITTLE ATTENTION.

Why some cars climb the steep, winding grades, or pick up quickly in the jam of traffic with that ease of operation which is a source of joy to the driver while other cars, even when new, fail to respond, has never been clearly understood by the average motorist.

There is a certain life-like throb in the perfectly attuned motor that the driver loves to feel—a quick response to the gentle touch of the foot on the throttle. It is an impulse rather to be restrained, than urged. It is noticed only when the motor is "hitting" on all four, six eight or twelve cylinders, as the case may be, when there is perfect combustion in each chamber.

Poor combustion and poor compression are caused to a great extent by leakage in the cylinders. Air is forced up past the piston on the suction stroke, weakening the mixture in the combustion chamber, and causing the cylinder to miss, especially at idling speed. Or, the gasoline works down past the rings on the compression stroke, thinning the oil, and destroying its lubricating qualities.

The Cylinder Grinders of Los Angeles are endeavoring to educate the automobilists of this city that this leakage is usually the fault of a scored cylinder wall or a bore not properly finished when new. The trouble may be corrected by regrinding.

SCRIPPS-BOOTH SIXES

A General Motors Company Car

CUT $500 IN PRICE TO

$1295 HERE

A STANDARD CAR—SOLD BY A LONG ESTABLISHED FIRM AT A TREMENDOUS REDUCTION

Here's the Reason—

Earle C. Anthony, Inc., have sold high grade cars in Los Angeles for sixteen years.

Any car that went out with our name plate on it was RIGHT.

We've never held cut-price sales because the merchandise we sold had a standard price and standard worth.

Two weeks ago, however, an opportunity came to us that never happened before in the sixteen years we have been in business.

The Scripps-Booth Company of California decided to go out of business, because R. C. Durant, who headed it, wanted to devote his entire time to the new Durant car.

We are going to handle the Durant car in Los Angeles county.

We offered to help the Scripps-Booth Company of California wind up its affairs by taking over their remaining stock of cars and selling them.

We did not want to make a profit on these cars. We wanted to clean them up and do it in a hurry.

The factory had recently cut the price on them $250.

We slashed the price another $250, and put them on sale a week ago.

At $1295 delivered in Los Angeles, the Scripps-Booth six is a marvelous bargain.

You will wait years before you can make your motor dollar go as far as it will in buying a Scripps at that price.

Two months ago, people were paying $1795 for them right here in Los Angeles.

Today, you can buy one $500 below that figure.

These are not orphan cars, not used cars, not damaged cars, but brand-new Scripps-Booth sixes, made by the great General Motors Company, builders of the Cadillac, the Buick, the Oldsmobile, the Oakland.

These cars go out with our name plate on them.

You can get parts and service on them wherever General Motors Company cars are sold.

You will have to act quickly in order to get one of these cars at this marvelous price.

We announced the sale a week ago. Our salesroom has been crowded all week. Our stock of these cars is getting low.

You owe it to your pocket-book to come down and look at these cars. Ride in them. Try them out. They're good all the way through, good to look at, good to ride in, good for hard usage.

Colorado River sweeping through the gorge at Boulder Canyon.

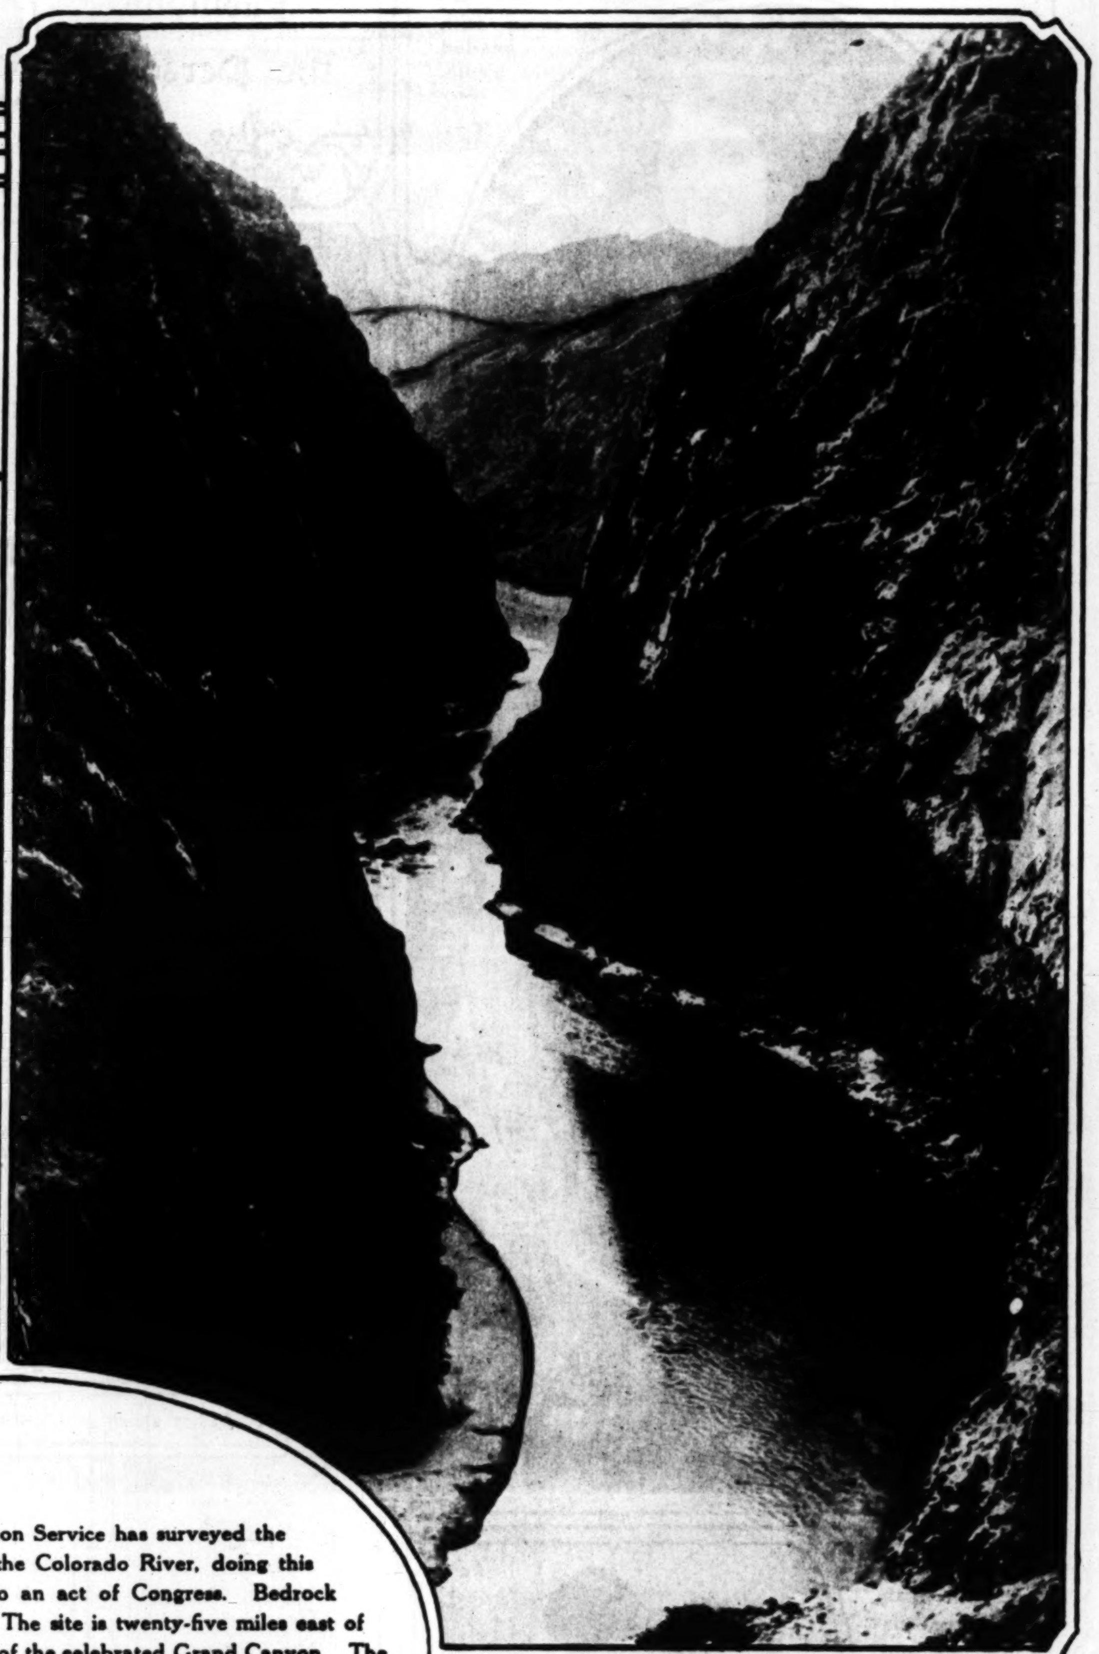
The United States Reclamation Service has surveyed the Boulder Canyon dam site on the Colorado River, doing this preliminary work in obedience to an act of Congress. Bedrock was struck at a depth of 140 feet. The site is twenty-five miles east of Las Vegas, Nev., about 100 miles west of the celebrated Grand Canyon. The proposed dam will be 700 feet high, as tall as the Woolworth Building in New York, and higher than any dam now in existence. It will hold back more than 20,000,000 acre feet of water, equate the flow of the river, remove flood menace, generate enormous horsepower and provide water for irrigating a vast area of rich land.



The dam site is in the extreme foreground of this Boulder Canyon view.

Louise Glaum the Famous Actress Says Show Me a Homely Girl or Woman and I'll Show You a Neglected Complexion.

LOUISE GLAUM

With a Soft, Peach-Like Velvety Skin Every Woman Would Be Attractive. Nothing So Good for the Skin as Ordinary Oatmeal.

New York—"The girl or woman who is passed by without a glance of admiration has only herself to blame," says Louise Glaum, the beautiful actress now starring in the J. Parker Reed, Jr., productions. Through following the simple combination given below it is now possible for every girl and woman to have an attractive, rosy-white, beautiful complexion, free from freckles, wrinkles, blackheads, pimples, coarse or large pores, tan, dark skin, sallowness or roughness. A few minutes night and morning is all the time required. Just follow the advice of Louise Glaum, and the wonderful effect of this simple combination will please and surprise you. This method may be used without the least fear of harmful results and will not produce or stimulate a growth of hair. Here is the formula: Go to any grocery store and get 10 cents worth of oatmeal and from any drug store a bottle of Derwillo. Then cleanse your skin with a good cold cream (Liska Cold Cream I have found to be the best). Put a little of the oatmeal in a bag made of cheese cloth, drop on or into the bag ten to twenty drops of Derwillo and use this the same as you would a wash cloth. Use in combination regularly. A large number of the leading actresses of this country now use Derwillo in preference to all other beautifiers. Derwillo contains no bismuth, plaster paris, pearl white, or other dangerous drugs, which dry out the skin and clog the pores, thus preventing them from doing the work nature intended them to do. It is prepared under scientic sterilized sanitary conditions by an expert who has had years of experience in manufacturing beauty products. Measured by results you get more for your money by using Derwillo than any other beautifier. Oatmeal when used with Derwillo has had astonishing effect. It softens, cleans and makes strong healthy skin tissues. It brings back to the skin that youthful peach-like coloring every normal woman craves. Now that short sleeves are in vogue you will want beautiful hands and arms. There is nothing like oatmeal and Derwillo for this purpose. A few weeks use of this combination and your friends will comment favorably on your improved appearance. Those who look old are those with a haggard, loose wrinkled, muddy skin. Miss Louise Glaum follows this method herself and recommends it to her most intimate friends who are ust as enthusiastic over it as she is. You can well afford to devote a few minutes each day to the care of your skin and if you do you will soon notice a wonderful improvement in your appearance. Just try it once and note the difference. Its use will make you look ten years younger.

NOTE—When asked about Derwillo one of our leading druggists said: "It is truly a wonderful beautifier, away ahead of anything we have ever sold before. We are authorized by the manufacturers to refund the money of anyone who is dissatisfied. This guarantee would not be possible unless the product possessed unusual merit. It is sold in this city under a money-back guarantee by all department stores and all druggists, including the Owl Drug Company Stores.

PROGRESS AND PRODUCTION

SUNDAY MORNING, JULY 17, 1921.

WHERE HAY TIME IS PLAY TIME.

The Garden Beautiful in Southern California.

INFORMATION BOTH PRACTICAL AND SCIENTIFIC. BY ERNEST BRAUNTON.

A LITTLE more than ten years ago, the editor of this page wrote J. E. Higgins, horticulturist for Hawaii, stationed in Honolulu, asking what success he was having with seedling avocados. After this lapse of years his reply is of as much value as it was then, so we print it in full.

"It is difficult to state what percentage of our seedling avocado trees turns out to be of clear commercial value. If you mean by this, what proportion turns out to be superior to those which we already have and which would therefore be worth while for further propagation, the percentage would be quite low. I have no accurate records from our station plantings, since these are [illegible] just beginning to come into bearing. The percentage of good trees is entirely too small to warrant anyone starting a seedling orchard as a commercial proposition.

"When grown from seeds the resultant trees do not bear fruit resembling that of the parent as closely as do seedling orchards of citrus resemble their parents. There is a very wide variation. Seeds from purple fruit may come green, and vice versa; those from a round or pear-shaped fruit may be elongated. There is quite as wide a variation in bearing habits.

"We have succeeded in growing some plants from cuttings, but we do not regard this as a practical means for the propagation of the avocado. In budding we get from 80 to 90 per cent of successful buds on strong seedling, nursery or orchard trees when about one and a half or two years old. A well-grown tree might be budded when it is a year old. In top working orchard trees the percentage may fall to as low as 50 per cent, but we expect between 60 and 75.

"We bud in nearly every month in the year if the trees are in such condition that the bark will slip. The months which we prefer are from January to July, and the earlier in this period the better. Our trees begin to put forth new growth about December or the first of January.

"I am glad to learn of your observations on avocado in California and to find that it does not appear to be too tropical in character for your climate. If it proves to be adapted to any large areas in California, it will certainly become an important industry."

Soil and Lime.

In cold climates much soil is made by the annual freezing and thawing of absorbent rock material. This action does not take place in mild climates such as California enjoys. Therefore man must supply the force deficiency, though such action should also be taken in cold countries to hasten the process. All sections should use more dynamite, and nearly all parts need more lime.

Autumn Cosmos.

Cosmos seeds sown now will bring background plants of fine effect. If the soil is good the plants are the tallest of annuals, especially tallest of all when shortness of season from seed to blossom is considered. For that reason they may not be planted anywhere and everywhere, but must have space both broad and righ for best growth. The colors range from white to crimson only, but there are fine pinks to be had, and a nearly related plant furnishes an orange cosmos. There is also a new type of anemone-flowered, but it is only a curiosity as compared to the plain single flower that all admire.

Plant More Avocados.

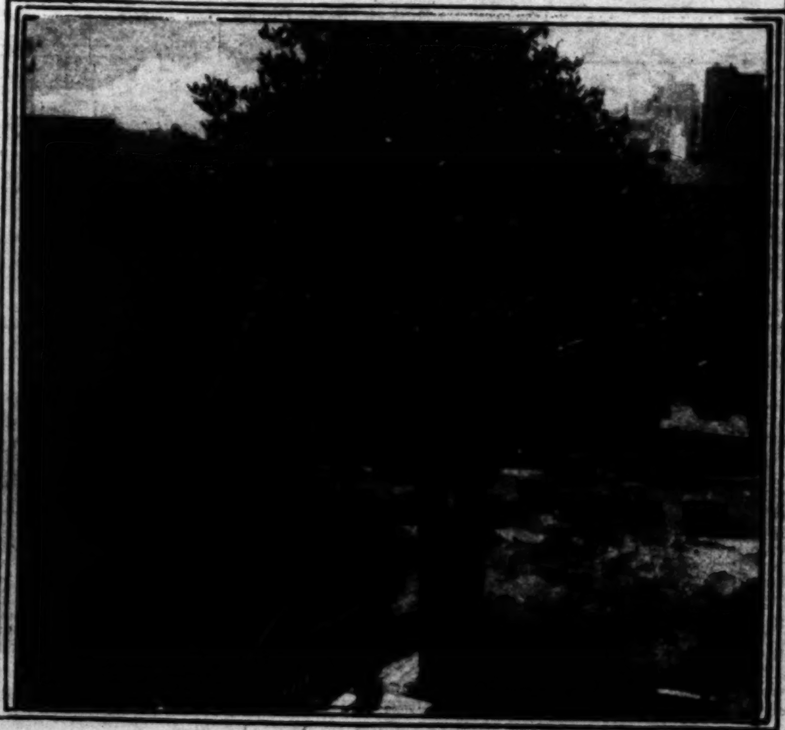
Avocado trees should be more [illegible] planted as ornamentals. Any and all varieties are fully as handsome as the average tree with which we embellish front yards. There are varying degrees of hardiness, but some may be found suitable for any and all parts of Southern California and bear good fruits. In the market there are half a hundred varieties, and some are better than others; but all the budded sorts are good, and the mistake is made in not planting any—not in choosing the wrong ones, for none will prove poor except the plant is not hardy in your section Plant one or more trees in every yard.

Nitrate of Soda.

Nitrate of soda is the quickest acting of all fertilizers and must not be looked upon as a mere stimulant, for anything that makes a plant grow faster or more has added that much to the world, as the effect is cumulative. It is best to back up this stimulating food with some material of staying powers, though the plants will not "slip back," as claimed. Some point to the fact that orange trees at the Riverside citrus station that were continuously fed nitrate of soda only, fared worse than any; but they do not appear much worse than those fed only barnyard manure. All of which may be taken as evidence that they could not grow there by any treatment—at least, they did not. Avoid nitrate of soda on soils already alkaline.

A large desert mesquite infested with a mass of mistletoes.

A Tanaka loquat budded on a quince and dwarfed.



Ficus elastica—India. This specimen of the India Gutta-percha tree is in a frostless location above the Hill street tunnel.

Ashes and Lime.

Coal ashes have no fertilizing value, but are sometimes used as a mulch for plants. In soils with a tendency to bake, they improve the texture by rendering them less able to any and all soils, and hardwood able to any and all soils, and wardwood ashes have a far greater value than those from soft woods. They are rich in potash and lime, but being the residue of fire, have, of course, no nitrogen content.

Legal Ownership.

The State Supreme Court ruled that fruits and nuts falling from roadside trees belong to the owner of the abutting property. This matter was for years held in doubt, but now that the court of last resort has spoken, it is as well for vandals who step from passing autos to "swipe" fruit, to know that they are guilty of theft. Under the law, one owns all on or under or above his land, from the deepest depths delved to as far as he can reach up in the ethereal blue. If roots from his trees or plants reach into your land, they are yours; cut them off. If fruits or flowers or foliage stick through or over the fence or line, they are as much yours as if the trees grew on your soil—pick them.

The Bunya-Bunya.

Arancaria Bidwilli, known to the native Australians as Bunya-bunya, is one of our most attractive trees, making a heavy pyramidal growth. It is too large for small gardens, for it never looks well when trimmed up, and when of age it is often forty or more feet across the bottom, fairly crowding one out of a city lot garden. For parks use against a background of other conifers, or standing just within a lawn, it makes a fitting landscape subject. It is, however, a hard tree for which to find a suitable setting, and in small places were better left out of the planting list.

Value of Ashes.

Ashes from soft woods only are of little value as compared with hardwood ashes and doubtless are of less value than ashes from trash piles or garden accumulations of weeds, etc. When soft ashes have been leached by rains or otherwise, their market value is practically nothing.

Burn or Bury Litter.

Clean up all garden litter and either burn or bury it so as to have no harbor for insect and other pests; also to destroy weed seeds, and further, to provide more organic matter in the soil. Too little attention is paid to this phase of gardening and the result is poor, starved soils often covered with weeds and the crops ravaged by insect pests.

Doves as Weed Destroyers.

Investigation by the Bilogical Survey, United States Department of Agriculture, shows that about 65 per cent of the annual food supply of the mourning dove consists of seeds of weeds more or less troublesome to the farmer. Some of the seeds eaten are so minute it would seem that none but the smallest species of birds would eat them and then only when driven by a lack of other food. Some instances of the enormous numbers of seeds that individual birds consume will be of interest. In one stomach were found 7500 seeds of the yellow wood sorrel, in another 6400 seeds of barn grass or foxtail, and a third had eaten 9200 seeds of various weeds. These seeds are the natural food of the mourning dove at all seasons of the year. A little shattered grain is gleaned after the harvest, but the dove feeds only from the ground, and in California is found in the grain fields after the harvest because several weeds follow the hay or grain, and furnish abundance of small seed. In the control of these weeds, the dove is a most valuable friend and helper to the farmer.

Gardens of Taste.

Few private persons can indulge in the luxury of a garden that can compete with public grounds, but a large number own gardens of small extent and can exercise artistic taste in their adornment. A little art and a short purse will sometimes produce results equal to those obtained by a long purse and small natural skill. This can be done in many ways. Pretty effects in small gardens cost very little beyond the exercise of a little original thinking and some outlay of time. It is not the rich man who can have the most tasteful grounds. Wealth does not go so far as brains, and it is the exercise of taste rather than great expenditure that gives the most attractive features to a garden.

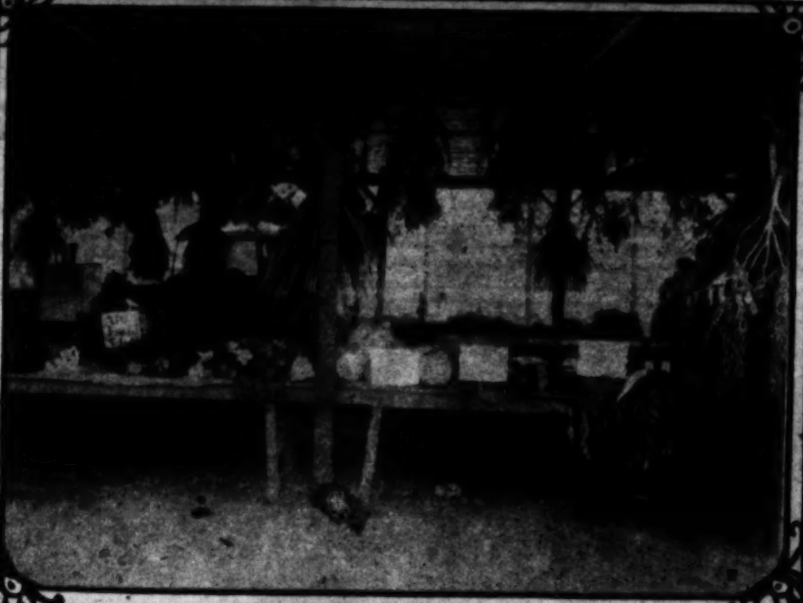
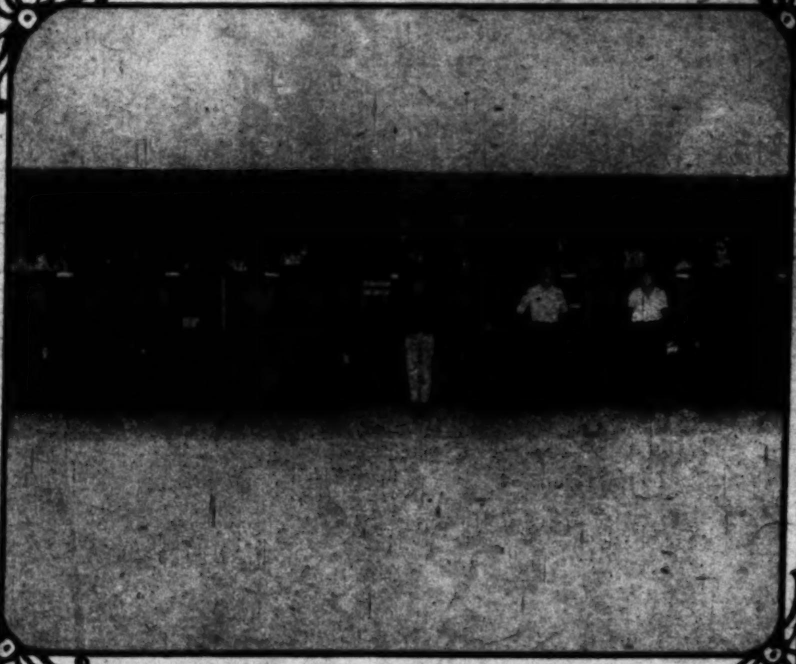
First Annual Fair of Chaffey Junior Farm Center.



The first Junior Farm Bureau Center in the State was organized at Chaffey Junior College of Agriculture, Ontario, a year ago. The members carry on various projects, and one of the most interesting of these was the recent Junior Farm Bureau Fair, at which these views were taken. Here is the fine vegetable exhibit.

The large bee exhibit. Note the attractive arrangement and the decorations. The boys had no help in financing their fair, utilizing old boards and wire and gathering shrubbery, boughs of trees and wild desert bloom to give color to the displays. It was their own show from beginning to end.



The poultry show embraced the standard breeds and included many quality birds.

A PROJECT WORTH CONSIDERING. BY HENRY W. KRUCKEBERG.

City visitors at a big Southern California poultry plant.

Pigeons in Balboa Park Plaza, San Diego.

IT MAY be a trifle early to talk loudly about the annual meeting of the American Poultry Association, which is to take place in Seattle August 8 to 12 of the present year; but it is timely that the industry, both individually and collectively, in this State begin to consider the importance of sending strong delegations. Changing industrial conditions are raising problems in all directions that will require some thinking and collective action in their solution, as well as better methods of standardization and co-operative marketing. In this producers and consumers, commerce and legislation have a vital interest. The agricultural interests will undoubtedly receive recognition in the emergency tariff bill now before Congress; but in a year from now there will be a new revision of import duties designed to meet the essential requirement of domestic production and foreign trade. The poultry interests are now primarily interested in fighting the importation of hen fruit from the Orient; but the battle is surely destined to take wider range within the next fifteen months. Already Canada, and especially British Columbia, is agitating for a stiff tariff on poultry products, not only with a view to checking the inroads of Chinese eggs, but also to lessen imports from the United States. All this is but a glimpse of the changing economic conditions that are going to agitate American industry during the next few years.

Personally we are not at all alarmed. The poultry products now coming in from the Orient are more or less of a menace; but as we view it the American market can be educated to "take" much more hen fruit and carcass than it does at present. The greatest breakfast food on earth, and the one most universally used, is the least advertised and exploited. The cereal foods are much more in evidence in the literature of the day, and for this reason have, in our judgment, largely taken the place of eggs as an elemental article of food in the human dietary. If the convention of the American Poultry Association at Seattle will be equal to its opportunities, it will devise ways and means for increasing the consumption of poultry products in every city and town in the United States. A good place to begin in will be Seattle itself. The Washington poultrymen should at once inaugurate a publicity campaign demonstrating the nutritive value of table fowl and eggs as human food. An intelligent advertising campaign ought to increase the consumption one egg per capita of population in Seattle by the time the association is in session. That would certainly make a market for Washington's surplus eggs; duplicate it in every town in that State, and there would not be hens enough to produce the eggs to supply the demand. Then why talk of import duty and legislative support? Such a demonstration would possess a larger value to the poultry industry than a dozen revisions of the standard or the enactment of laws for the "promotion and protection" of poultry farming in every State, county and town in the country. Then why not do it?

R. B. Easson, extension poultryman of the University of California, who is conducting a series of poultry culling demonstrations in Southern California.

Reduced Production in Ohio.

The somewhat startling statement is made by the Ohio Agricultural College that the average production of the Ohio hen is falling off; that she produced at least ten eggs more on an average during the decade just closed than she did in 1919. In the face of all that has been said and printed on increased egg production, we are wondering what in Sam Hill ails the Ohio hen? Has she lost her grip, or has her owner gone into politics? Possibly she has refused to become a member of the League of National Egg Layers and proposes no dictation from without. But, seriously, if the statement is based on reliable information, there must be something wrong with their strains and methods of management. Let us suggest that they get some California egg-producing strains and, our word for it, before the close of another decade, they will average more rather than less.

When the hen is hatching she should not be disturbed except to remove the shells, unless she becomes uneasy and steps on or picks the chicks. In such cases the chicks should be removed as soon as dry. Place them in a basket or box lined with flannel or some other soft material and cover the top, keeping the basket or box in a warm place until the eggs left under the hen are hatched.

Hens should be fed as soon as possible after the eggs are hatched, as feeding tends to keep them quiet; otherwise, many hens will leave the nest. In most cases it is best that the hen remain on the nest and brood the chicks for at least twenty-four hours after the hatching is over. Hens will successfully brood ten to fifteen chicks early in the breeding season, and eighteen to twenty-five in warm weather, depending upon the size of the hen, so that often two broods of chicks which hatch at the same time can be put together and raised under one hen.

Powder the hen with a good insect powder, or with sodium fluorid two days before the chicks are due to hatch. If lice appear on the chicks, or if they are troubled with "head lice," a very little grease, such as lard or vaseline, may be applied with the fingers on the head, neck, under the wings and around the vent. Great care should be taken, however, not to get too much grease on the chicks, as it will stop their growth and in some cases may prove fatal.

"Toe punch" or mark each chick before transferring to the brood coop, so that the age can be readily determined after maturity.

It is often advisable to teach the chicks to roost when 8 to 12 weeks of age. When they are allowed to remain on the floor, it is difficult to keep them clean and to keep them from crowding. If wide roosts—three to four inches—are used, there is but little, if any, more danger of crooked breasts than if the chicks are allowed to remain on the floor.

The chicks can generally be taught to roost by putting the perches near the floor, but if this plan is inconvenient, or does not prove effective, the chicks may be placed on the perches after dark for a few nights until they have learned to go there of their own accord. Where a large number of chicks are brooded together around a brooder stove it is a good plan to place roosts in the house when the chicks are 4 or 5 weeks old, so that the larger and stronger chicks will start using the roosts while the weaker chicks still stay around the brooder hover.

FARM AND TRACTOR SECTION.

Devoted to the multiform agricultural interests of the great Southwest and issued every week with the world's biggest Sunday newspaper.

EDITED BY HAROLD M. FINLEY.

Communications from practical farmers, ranchers, stock raisers, poultrymen, gardeners and others engaged either in a large or small way in the vital work of food production are gladly received.

Good clear photographs of interesting farm and garden activities are always welcomed. The Los Angeles Times Farm and Tractor Section is the only farm journal in the west printing illustrations in the incomparable rotogravure process.

Citrus Replantings.

NOTWITHSTANDING the uneasiness that has featured the citrus business generally, following the frenzied conditions brought on by the war, there is still a fairly large business in nursery stock. There is always replanting to be done, and as the groves grow older, and as some of the older ones demonstrate more and more emphatically that they are badly handicapped in the race for profits, the replanting of entire groves is not at all rare.

But the spring that has just passed has been one of the least favorable for this planting of young trees that we have had in years. The mortality among such plantings has run unusually high. In one orange planting of several acres that has been observed only about a quarter of the young trees have started. The rest must be replaced. In this instance the trees were not balled, but were planted with open roots. The nursery that furnished them offers as explanation of the heavy loss the fact that the past three months have been unusually chilly, even cold, with more than the regulation amount of fog, mist and drizzle; in short, that it has been a cheerless springtime for California, and that the cold and damp state of the soil prevented an easy start of growth, and brought instead the dying of root systems, and then of tops.

It has been a fixed principle with some of the older and successful orchardists and nurserymen of this State that a better start is shown by the citrus tree that is planted late enough to be lodged in a soil that is generally warm. The needed water can be supplied to the youngling with a bucket, if need be, but with ground that is cold and soggy and inhospitable cannot be warmed by any such hand method. One of the pioneer nurserymen of this region, before he went on to a fairer land than his beloved California, was emphatic in his opinion that May is early enough, in most years, to set young trees, while in those years that are inclined to sulk the month of June is better; and this year indicates that there was basis for his belief.

Hay for Orchards.

THE late rains that came just in time to spoil whole fields of fine hay, did not bring an evil wholly unmixed with good. While the hay was generally ruined for feeding purposes, it was not damaged for fertilizer. The rains were not over till the owners of this lost hay crop were asked to price it for grove dressing. It has largely been sold at figures that will take the sting out of the hay rancher's loss, even though they do not make him rich. A price around $9 a ton for this blackened and mouldy forage seems to be about the mark at which grain hay has generally moved. The buyers, in the main, are citrus growers who will use it to cover their groves.

Last year rain-damaged alfalfa sold to the orchardists as high as $23, and was regarded as fair value to them at that figure for its large nitrogen content, and its general effect in loosening the soil that receives it, but there was little grain hay to be had for soil feeding. This year has seen a good deal of alfalfa caught by the rains, as well as a large aggregate of grain hay, most of which is barley. Contrary to the record of former years, however, there has been an outlet for possibly all of this damaged hay at figures that very largely meet the cost to its growers, and in some cases even carry with them a profit. There is no doubt that the humus content of the orchards that are thus treated is measureably increased. There are growers who hold that damaged barley hay at $9 is better value than regular manure at the current rates.

WHAT AMERICAN AGRICULTURISTS OWE TO MODERN FARM MACHINERY.

BY ARTHUR L. DAHL.

AMERICAN farmers have the reputation of cultivating more acres per man power than any other people on the earth, and this is made possible solely by the use of machinery. A man's physical labor is very much the same wherever he may be, and if our countrymen used the hand methods so prevalent in European and oriental countries they would not be able to farm so many acres as they do now. On the big grain ranches of the West, where thousands of acres are planted to grain, and the plowing, sowing, cultivating and harvesting all are done on a big scale, the farm tractor, combined harvester and other modern agricultural implements make possible the accomplishment of large tasks.

In fact, only through the use of machinery can the labor of a man be multiplied many fold in farming, for if power is supplied for the various field jobs by animals, the working units must be necessarily small, as the average farmer can handle but a few head of stock, and too many horses hitched to an implement make the outfit unwieldy and capable of being used only on the large, level grain fields; and even here a driver or other attendant must be provided for every half dozen animals or so. But with tractors possessing a power rating up to seventy horsepower, one operator can run the entire outfit, pulling a battery of plows or other implements and doing more work in a day than many animals and men.

The modern tractor is able to fill the power needs formerly supplied exclusively by horses, and in addition it has the advantage of doing all kinds of belt work which is just as important as field jobs, and requires the time and attention of the owner. The American farmer is called upon to supply his own needs far more than any professional or business man in the city. The very nature of his calling, requiring large areas for his fields, isolated the farmer from many of the conveniences of the city, such as gas, electricity, water systems, fuel and other necessities of everyday life. The farmer can have all of these things now on his farm, but if he does he must look to machinery to keep up his supply. Light for his home and barn can be secured through portable lighting plants run by gasoline engines, or the engine on his tractor, and the same source of power will pump the water he requires daily. Wood for fuel or farm repairs can be secured from the family wood lot, the trees being cut up into desirable sizes by the tractor motor and portable sawmill.

In the feed lot, the tractor motor, or a small gasoline engine, will furnish ample power to operate feed grinders, corn shredders, silage cutters, and similar implements, and on the dairy farm these power machines will run the milking machines, cream separators, refrigerating plant and other appurtenances of the place.

CUTTING DOWN LABOR.

On the modern farm, where hay is grown on a large scale, machinery does most of the work. Pitching hay by hand is obsolete on such a ranch, and the side delivery rake and the hay loader operated by a tractor does the work quickly and thoroughly. Where the hay is to be baled, the tractor motor supplies power for the bailing machine, or if the hay is to be stacked in large piles, the heavy work is all done by mechanical contrivances, operated by power supplied by the ever-present tractor motor. A portable power plant capable of moving under its own power to any point desired, is a very valuable time and labor saver, as all power farmers have learned from their own experience.

It is in the harvesting of grain that the modern power machinery proves its efficiency. Harvest time is the critical time of the crop year, for the most bountiful crop will not bring dollars into the pockets of the owner until it is harvested and safely stored away in the warehouse or barn, and there is many a slip between standing grain and sacked grain, for fire, wind, rain and other natural enemies must be guarded against. In the old days farmers cut and stacked their grain in the field and waited until the old-fashioned steam threshing machine came along and threshed the crop, which often meant weeks of anxiety and loss through adverse climatic conditions. The modern way is to cut, thresh and sack the grain all in one operation, which is made possible by the combined harvester, pulled and operated by the tractor. Now, when the wheat or barley or oats are ripe in the field, the combined harvester makes one clean sweep from one end of the field to the other, cutting off the grain, running it through the thresher, sacking the kernels and tossing aside the straw.

ELIMINATING CHANCE.

Power farming takes away much of the chance element of agriculture, for it enables the farmer to plan a definite schedule for his crop year and live up to it. From experience he learns just how much work of a given kind can be performed in an hour by the tractor outfit, and he can multiply that amount by the number of hours he wishes to devote to a given task. Unlike animals, the tractor can be depended upon to give the same uniform service hour after hour, continuously, unaffected by heat or cold, flies or other pests, and with the fuel and water tanks filled, no stops need be made to rest the iron creature or to answer the call to meals. The use of tractors in field operations has revolutionized many farm practices, for the power farmer can now, for the first time, work on continuously for long stretches of time without giving thought to the source of his power, and in the busy seasons tractor outfits frequently work from twelve to eighteen hours at a stretch, without stopping, one operator relieving another for meals or for short rests. For this relief work, the young sons and daughters of farmers often take their seat on the tractor and keep the outfit going while dad is resting a bit, or looking after some pressing piece of business.

Power farming is likewise changing the plowing habits of Americans. It has been definitely determined from scientific tests made by agricultural experiment stations and through the experience of thousands of farmers, that early plowing pays. When the earth is plowed up to a considerable depth immediately after the summer crop is cut and harvested, the soil is improved to a greater extent than when plowing is deferred until late in the fall or in the early spring following. The moisture in the earth is conserved to a larger extent by this early plowing and the next season's crops are apt to be larger and better as a result of such early plowing. Granting that this early plowing is desirable, there yet remains the matter of doing the work, and here is where the tractor outfit proves itself superior to animals. In the middle of summer in practically all agricultural communities, the weather is not conducive to hard work on the part of animals, and very often farmers with plenty of work stock in the barn find it impossible to use them for plowing, because the ground is too hard and the heat too intense to permit of efficient work on the part of the animals. As a consequence, the animal farmer will defer his plowing until after the weather becomes cooler, or until the rains have softened the soil and made it easier for plowing.

The tractor owner, however, does not stop on account of climatic conditions or the hardness of the earth's surface. When he gets ready, he hitches the plows to the tractor and begins turning over the soil, and keeps it up as long as he wants to, or until the job is completed. This early plowing is advantageous, too, in destroying many species of crop pests that lay their eggs in the standing stubble, and which are plowed under and destroyed.

The power farmer finds that with the increased power furnished by the tractor he can cultivate parts of his field not easily handled by animals. For instance, foothill

Dr. J. C. Whitten (foreground) at a recent orchard demonstration.

OBSERVATIONS OF AN EXPERT ON SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA VALLEYS.

BY VINCENT F. BLANCHARD.

Assistant Farm Advisor, Los Angeles County.

THOUSANDS of deciduous growers in California have had the pleasure of hearing and seeing Dr. J. C. Whitten, head of the pomology department of the agriculture college, demonstrate the "long" system of pruning deciduous trees. During the brief period that Dr. Whitten has been here in California these thousands of growers have come to respect and revere him perhaps to a greater degree than any other horticulturist. Growers have attended his demonstrations who were antagonistic at the start, but not many of them have gone away from such meetings without any such feelings, for his pleasing personality and common sense reasoning along horticultural lines removes all that.

The writer had the pleasure of spending the 16th and 17th of June with Dr. Whitten, conducting him through the deciduous sections of the San Fernando and Antelope valleys. He was here at the invitation of the agricultural extension service for Los Angeles county to study deciduous conditions. Many of his observations should be of interest to growers, for they come at a time when any helpful suggestion to improve the orchard conditions is appreciated.

IN SAN FERNANDO VALLEY.

One of the things which Dr. Whitten observed was that a very large percentage of growers in the San Fernando Valley are trying out the "long" system of pruning. Many orchards have had a good job of pruning done, but it was especially noticeable that many have been pruned "long" without the job being finished. Too many orchards have the trees so dense that sunlight cannot penetrate to the inside. That results in shading out the inside foliage and consequently prevents fruit bud formation there. Dr. Whitten suggests that since there are but few orchards which have a crop, the best thing that can be done to insure a crop for next year is to cut out large limbs and branches to permit sufficient penetration of sunlight to all parts. One orchard was visited where Dr. Whitten pruned two trees that way. The owner had become convinced that his trees were too dense and wanted to know how to open them up. Large limbs were taken out and when the job was finished sunlight could reach about every leaf. Those trees will produce better fruit with all of that wood removed than if it were left.

Such a practice might be a shock to a grower, but when one considers that the thing desired is to make the fruit-bearing area well distributed throughout the tree and that this can be accomplished only when sunlight penetrates to all parts, then perhaps the shock will not be so great. That kind of pruning should be done soon because fruit-bud formation begins the latter part of June and as much time as possible should be given the trees to manufacture sufficient quantities of food to fill the buds out.

It was apparent to Dr. Whitten that though the crop of fruit is exceedingly small, yet there are a few orchards which

WHAT ONE WOMAN DID WITH AN ACRE.

BY PAULINE R. BIRD.

Only in Southern California could you hope to achieve what one woman has done in five years on a single acre in the beautiful San Gabriel Valley.

From the front porch of her rose-embowered home, facing Mt. Wilson on the north, with Old Baldy in the eastern distance, you overlook a rose garden filled with some of the rarest, choicest blooms. This lady of the single acre is, by the way, a prize winner with her roses, of which she has at least thirty varieties. A hedge of intertwining Killarneys, Cherokees, crimson and pink ramblers and ragged robins give an air of privacy and seclusion to the little front lawn not unlike an Old World garden, yet with glimpses of the passing travel through the foliage. Cecile Brunner and La Marque roses, honeysuckle, woodbine, and other vines run riotously over the house and parkway.

The woman with the acre has provided for all seasons. She has arranged to have a glorious, colorful garden during the resting time of the roses after the lilacs, syringas and the sweet peas have had their day. From July until away late in the autumn dahlias of a dozen different varieties will flaunt their gaudiness in the faces of the gladioli, the zinnias of a thousand hues and the royal chrysanthemums. A carpet of rich, velvety brown and gold marigolds stays by until winter has come and gone. So that each month, each week, each day of the year this garden has its charms, and allures.

The back door, shaded by drooping clusters of purple, white and pink wistaria, whose vines stretch across the space between the house and the garage, discloses a view of a tiny Japanese pond stocked with gold fish, the aviary with its hundred or more song birds and the near-by peacock pens, where "Peter the Great" strides about in regal splendor. The spreading branches of a mulberry tree shelter some rare and gorgeous golden pheasants whose call is answered by the silver and ring-neck pheasants in adjacent pens. Some game bantams, a few turkeys and a fine flock of Rhode Island Reds do more than supply the table with poultry and eggs.

Eighty-five trees of twenty-eight varieties have been set out by this woman with the acre and with a few exceptions, are now bearing and furnishing much more than the family needs. These trees include apple, peach, pear, quince, apricot, sapote, plums in variety, mulberry, nectarine, tangerine, pomegranite, orange, grapefruit, lemon, avacado, guava, loquat and walnut. Grapevines, chavote and thornless blackberry, apparently planted for the sole purpose of beautifying and affording shady nooks, yield almost unbelievable crops. The Concord grapes are the pride of the place, though there are excellent Niagara, Malaga, Muscat and Isabella vines. But it is from the Concords, which cover five large arbors, that friends have been remembered with heaping baskets, and it is from these vines that immense quantities of grape juice, syrup and jellies have been made and have found their way into many a rich room.

Seeing all these wonderful growing things as you saunter down the iris-bordered winding path, you are inclined to say, "Very pretty; a most absorbing amusement," when the woman with the acre, leading you to a large, well-made shed with a roomy, fenced-in yard, says, with a proud wave of the arm, "These are my jewels!"

The "jewels," you at once perceive, are a number of sportive Toggenberg kids, and you then realize that your hostess has, to an unusual degree, brought beauty and utility together. You can now readily understand how this single acre may be really a paying proposition. You learn that there is a ready market for all the pheasants, peacocks and other fancy fowl that the lady of the acre cares to raise, and you at once grasp the idea that the brilliant plumaged birds are something more than mere flecks of beauty on the landscape.

"About three years ago," said the mistress of the acre, "I had a taste of goat's milk, and I then and there determined to buy a goat that I might have milk for our table. Much to my surprise, it was the finest milk I had ever tasted.

"After considerable investigation, I came to the conclusion that it is to the advantage of the suburban home keeper to own a goat, as it is the best and cheapest solution of the milk problem. It is second only to mother's milk for the nursing infant, is food and drink for the invalid, and is nourishing for every member of the family. The expense of feeding and housing goats is within the means of everyone. Goats do not require a man's care, for children have successfully fed and milked a pair of goats, and they can be kept in small quarters that would not suffice for a cow. The goat eats only about one-eighth as much as the cow, making the cost of milk production proportionately small, while the milk brings a much higher price. Goats are from two to four times more prolific than cows, and the male kids are more valuable than calves (in proportion to size) for meat purposes.

"About three years ago when I decided to buy, I chose the Toggenburg. It is directly descended, so the story goes, from the ancient wild goat of Europe and the deer of the Swiss Alps, where, in the Valley of Toggenburg, it has been bred for many hundreds of years. Its natural fixed characteristics make it at once vigorous, healthy and productive both of milk and of its kind. The markings of the Toggenburg are those of the deer, and in its slenderness of leg, graceful curve of neck and long, slim body, many young does greatly resemble the fawn.

"Our first purchase was a pair of grade goats, and so pleased were we with the venture that the following year I bought a pure-bred baby doe, Diana, for $100. Diana's mother later was sold for $500, and her next kids for $400 each. We bred Diana to the famous Alessandro and in the spring of 1920 she gave us a buck and two does, Douglass, Dollie and Dorothy, and in March of this year again she gave two does and a buck, Donna, Dora and Diablo.

"Our goat quarters are cleaned out daily, and the greatest attention is paid to the food. No baby in the land is more tenderly nursed than are our bottle kiddies. The bottles are carefully sterilized, the milk is always warm and sweet, and the kids are sheltered from storm and wind. It's a mistake to think that goats will eat everything. These Toggenburgs are not to be confounded with the vacant-lot goat, teased and annoyed by the youngsters of the neighborhood, and depicted by the cartoonists as consuming everything from tin cans to Monday's wash line. So fastidious are the 'Togs' that they refuse onions or rank weeds of any sort. They will not even pick up from the ground of their enclosure a favorite branch or a choice bit of alfalfa. The intelligence of the Toggenburg is shown by the quickness with which she learns her name, her own stanchion at the feed box, and when to take her turn on the milking stand."

In answer to the question, "What is necessary for just the table supply of a small family?" the woman with the single acre said:

"For the family milk supply, a good grade goat, one from a line of good milkers is all that is necessary. Such a goat will yield at least three quarts a day, and as the cost of her keep need not exceed $2 a month, it is not difficult to calculate the saving on the milkman's bill. For two reasons, I always advise the purchase of two goats, even though one's family be small. Goats are sociable, friendly creatures and get very lonely when separated from companions. Then, too, if the kiddies are arranged to come eight or ten weeks apart, the family can have a supply of milk the year around. There is always a demand for surplus milk in almost every neighborhood, for doctors are everywhere recommending goat milk, and the orders from hospitals and sanatoriums can't begin to be filled."

When asked if the ordinary housewife could make a success of goat raising, the answer came quickly:

"Any woman of intelligence who wants to add to the family income, and cannot leave home to do so, or doesn't care to leave home; any ambitious schoolboy, who wishes to earn his way through school, could hardly do better than to engage in the business of goat raising. The original investment need not be large, and it will be found to be a profitable business after the first year."

for the Cream brand and $9.60 per box for the Aster brand. Five days later a car shipped by the Rialto Fruit Company, containing 246 boxes of fancy grade lemons, with over half the car made up of 270's and larger sizes, sold in Cleveland at $12.55 per box for fancy, $12.45 per box for choice and $11.70 per box for standards, bringing total receipts for the car up to $5035.05. This is said to be the highest price ever paid for a car of Rialto lemons to date.

BOUNCING THE BOARDERS.

REDLANDS.—R. B. Easson, poultry expert of the State Department of Agriculture, has been spending some time in this section, working with county demonstration agents and far mbureau men. An extensive culling campaign is being carried on through his department, and a record is being kept of each flock before and after culling. Mrs. C. D. Kennedy of Hemet is said to have the prize flock of the State for the past month, for her eighty-seven hens laid an average of 23.1 eggs during the month. Mr. Easson says that any poultry owner can do what Mr. Kennedy has done, by using care in selecting stock, then culling carefully and feeding right. Prof. Easson presented two profitable demonstrations in this section, the first being at the C. B. Rous poultry ranch at Yucaipa; the second at the Bennet Hatcher poultry ranch, on College avenue, in Redlands, showing the poultrymen just how far they must go in reducing their flocks to get maximum production.

CANTALOUPES AND GRAPES.

DELANO.—Grape growers, raising cantaloupes between their vines, have begun shipments, expecting the crop to total seventy-five cars.

CANNERY IS BUSY.

VAN NUYS.—The local cannery is engaged in packing the last of the apricot crops, being busy just now on Redlands fruit. The crop is small, and the fruit very choice.

GRAND TERRACE NUTS.

LOMA LINDA.—It has long been the contention that walnuts could not be grown profitably in the heated interior valleys of California, but E. H. Rowe of Grand Terrace seems to have proved that this is a fallacy. He has two and a half acres of walnuts on his farm that are seven years old, and last year his records show they bore 1300 pounds of first-class fruit. The trees have a better crop on them this year, so in all probability, his returns will be even more than last year. The walnuts were his best-paying crop. Mr. Rowe says that there is some danger from sunburn in this region, but that the loss will not be more than the average crop loss. Mr. Rowe interset the walnut trees with cherries, peaches and pears, thinking that if the walnuts did not pan out, then he would have something to fall back on. But the cherries, the peaches and the pears are to come out, and the walnuts are to remain. Mr. Rowe has been exhibiting the nuts at the fairs recently, and they have made quite a sensation. There are more and more fruits and nuts being grown in the Grand Terrace section, although there are yet many fine small truck farms there.

YUCAIPA ORCHARD NOTES.

YUCAIPA.—This has been a good year for the small fruit grower, and there are several stories coming out from the Yucaipa Valley of interest to all farmers. J. N. Newlands, who has a six-acre orchard on Sixth avenue, tells that, through frost and rain, he lost part of a cherry crop this year, but in spite of this he beat the elements and took over $1000 worth of cherries from the trees. The Elma P. Jones orchard probably contains the prize cherry tree of the valley. This is a Royal Anne tree, the fruit from which sold for more than $75. The fruit was exceptionally fine and heavy. Growers of Red Bird Cling peaches have received exceptional prices for their crops. The first shipment was made by E. P. Beasley and consisted of 125 boxes of choice fruit. The crop was short, but the peaches brought $1.50 a lug in the orchard. The varieties of soft peaches are now at their best, and the returns are good. G. P. Weick planted potatoes between his trees this year, and the crop he is now harvesting is one of the best ever seen in Yucaipa. Many and wonderful are the tales told of apple thinning. J. H. Logie and A. N. Dike have fifty acres of trees loaded with the choicest of fruit. This year the trees were so heavily loaded that in thinning they had twelve men working for more than three weeks, and still there is an immense crop on the trees. Men tell of working three and four hours on one tree, and one man says that he took 1700 apples off one tree and left on it a big crop of fruit. The expense of thinning this year will run into thousands, but the growers say that they will get it all back at harvest time.

"SPUD" MEN MEET.

VAN NUYS.—A meeting, preliminary to the organization of an association of the potato growers of Van Nuys and other parts of the San Fernando Valley, was held in Los Angeles recently, when several styles of contracts were introduced and considered for adoption. Up to the present, about 100 cars of potatoes have been shipped from Van Nuys. The prices have been ranging from 90 cents to $1 per hundredweight. It is estimated that about 8000 acres of potatoes have been grown in the San Fernando Valley this season, but the average yield is below normal. The potatoes are being shipped to eastern points.

APHIDS KILL VINES.

BRAWLEY.—Over 7000 acres of cantaloupes have become so badly infested with aphis that no more fruit will be shipped from the district so infested. Cantaloupe shipments, after holding to the 300-car mark for over ten days, have begun to decline.

Farm News of the Great Southwest.
DOWN-TO-DATE REPORTS FROM TIMES CORRESPONDENTS.

EL CENTRO.—R. L. Nougaret, viticulture expert of the State Department of Agriculture, was in Imperial Valley, recently, to examine some of the very early varieties of grapes grown here, with the expectation of finding one of these varieties maturing early enough and possessing good shipping qualities which could be made commercial by special pruning and cultivation in order to produce fair-sized crops. This will probably be accomplished by devising more adequate methods of pruning and cultivation to suit the conditions of climate and soil of the reclaimed arid lands. The great advantage of the Colorado desert lands is the early ripening of all crops grown and in selecting a variety of grape to be grown here this advantage should be kept uppermost in mind, according to Prof. Nougaret. In this respect the several varieties of Persian grapes offer much promise. As yet they are grown in very small quantities and much confusion exists as to their names, only a few varieties having been tried. It is probable that, due to this, so little is actually known about their respective qualities, and, so far, Malagas and Thompson Seedless varieties have been given the preference.

TESTS ARE FAVORABLE.

LANCASTER.—Last fall the Los Angeles County Agricultural Extension Service, in co-operation with the division of pomology of the university and the Horticultural Commissioner, prepared a project on the "little leaf" problem in the Antelope Valley. Several test plots were laid out, a recent inspection of which shows very favorable results. It is too early to state definitely as to what the results may be, but it is evident that the trees in the plot are in a much better condition than they have been for several years and show less little leaf than do the check plots. They are showing better growth and even in the bad cases, some healthy foliage is being developed below the affected portions.

CENTER WORK PLANNED.

SIMI.—The Simi Valley Center of the Ventura County Farm Bureau is planning a number of demonstrations covering various phases of farm activities prevailing hereabouts. Inspiration to effort along this line came in the shape of a report made by Farm Bureau Director Wright, following the recent bureau conference trip of which he was a delegate from this district. Mr. Wright so emphasized the importance of the demonstration idea, as he had observed it on the excursion trip, that great enthusiasm was aroused for such projects locally. The proposed demonstrations will cover pruning, spraying, irrigation, cultivation, commercial fertilizers and cover crops. The citrus work will be in charge of Nathan Sharp, the deciduous demonstrations under Walter Osborn, and the walnut work under C. J. Proud. All three are successful growers of the Simi district.

WANT WATER USED.

FRESNO. — The celebration of Independence Day at Madera took on a new aspect. All of the mottoes on the floats in the parade, as well as the theme of the orator of the day, the master of ceremonies and all connected with the celebration, was a display of a sentiment for a new "Declaration of Independence," in that the waters of the San Joaquin Valley shall be devoted to the use of all instead of a few. The sentiment of the address, which was liberally applauded, was that, on July 26, the voters should declare themselves strongly for the $25,000,000 irrigation bonds, and that suits now pending in the courts, which have a bearing on proposals to store a part of the water of the San Joaquin River for use in developing the thousands of acres of splendid land now used for range and for growing of grain, would be pushed.

PERSIAN GRAPES FIRST.

EL CENTRO.—The first carload of grapes sent out of the valley rolled eastward on July 2, and consisted of Khalille Persian grapes of excellent quality. Two shippers combined to make a full car. Since then many carloads of Persian, Malaga and Thompson grapes have been sent to Chicago and New York. The first carload shipment was away ahead of the season. Hundreds of acres planted to vineyard this spring will be producing their first crop in July, 1923.

BEST CANTALOUPE SEASON.

BRAWLEY.—It appears that, notwithstanding high freight rates, aphis, and decreased buying power in consuming centers, Imperial Valley cantaloupe growers will probably come out better at the end of the season, now approaching, than they ever did. To July 10 9961 cars had been shipped and it is believed the total will go 10,500 cars at least. This is the record for a season's shipment, and the prices, while not high, have returned the growers an income, generally speaking.

ARIZONA MELONS MOVING.

MESA (Ariz.)—The cantaloupe movement from the Salt River Valley is in full swing. The fruit is moving out at the rate of from 100 to 115 cars daily, and is being well received in eastern centers.

AVOCADO SHIPMENTS.

SANTA ANA.—One hundred avocados, weighing 202 pounds, formed a recent interesting fruit shipment from this city to San Francisco and Chicago. The shipper was E. A. White, who has taken the lead in forwarding the new fruit to eastern markets, and the fruits were of the Olinda variety. Small shipments of avocados will be made during the summer, Mr. White said, but the big shipments will be in the fall, when avocado production in Orange county is at its highest point.

TO WATER GRAIN LANDS?

TERRA BELLA.—Whether irrigation will finally be resorted to in raising crops of wheat on the big ranches in the Terra Bella section is just now an important question, in view of the severe loss of grain this year by lack of rain in season. A striking example of results on irrigated lands is found on the Malloy ranch, west of Terra Bella. Sixteen sacks of wheat to the acre were grown on thirty or forty acres of irrigated land. The land was well irrigated before plowing, but not thereafter. The difference between five sacks, a good dry farm crop this year, and sixteen sacks at $3 a sack, might pay for a good pumping plant the first year. The idea is not entirely new in the dry land section, McCloskey Bros. having considered the proposition for several years. Much of the land west of Terra Bella is level, making leveling for irrigation less expensive.

PRECOCIOUS GRAFTS.

RIALTO.—In May of this year Milo Harris cut back a small almond, with a trunk possibly two inches in diameter, leaving two branching stubs, into which he grafted small twigs from a freestone nectarine, growing at the W. S. Farmer place. At the present writing, slightly over two months from the time of grafting, the two nectarine grafts have grown a well rounded top, solidly filled in, having a diameter of 5ft. 3in. and a height of 5ft. 8in.

POTATO HARVEST ENDS.

SHAFTER.—Harvesting and shipping of the first potato crop of the season has ended here. Forty carloads of "spuds" were shipped from here to Washington and Oregon. The potatoes were of the White Rose variety, of excellent quality and appearance. There are about twenty-five growers in this district. The potatoes were shipped in new sacks, 110 pounds to the sack, and 280 sacks to the refrigerator car. Many of the growers will soon begin planting for the second crop.

TO SELECT MILO SEED.

FRESNO.—Experiments with white Egyptian corn and dwarf milo maize are being made by the agricultural extension department of the University of California in the James ranch colony, near San Joaquin. Several acres have been planted, and the corn is making fine growth. A pool has been formed among the farmers to secure 800 pounds of selected seed, and this will be planted on 260 acres on the James ranch. When the crop is harvested, a committee of the farm bureau, consisting of H. E. Fortner, Wilbur Johnson and Frank Snyder, will go through the field, and make a selection of the best of the seed, which will be graded, recleaned and prepared for seed for the coming year. It is also the plan of the farm bureau to make a seed selection from forty acres of choice Mariout barley, which seems to be particularly adapted to the San Joaquin Valley, in that it does not wither or shrivel in times of hot weather, such as comes about the time that fruit is ripening. This year the yield of barley has been rather poor in parts of the valley, but the Mariout variety is showing an excellent yield, and especially is this true with reference to the crop on the James ranch, where the soil is especially adapted to this particular crop.

SCALE INFESTS OFFSHOOTS.

COACHELLA.—Offshoots of imported Hayani dates, sent by the United States Department of Agriculture, have become infested with Phoenicocus scale, and have been placed in quarantine for two years.

LONG STAPLE PLANTINGS.

BAKERSFIELD.—Twelve hundred acres of Pima Egyptian cotton, including 640 acres planted on Herbert C. Hoover's 2500-acre ranch near Wasco, were planted in Kern county this season. W. B. Camp, Federal cotton specialist, said that this represents a heavy decrease from last year's planting of Pima. Last year in Kern county, 11,400 acres were devoted to cotton, including several varieties. The total acreage this year does not exceed 2000, it is said. Adverse market conditions caused the decrease.

GOOD CROP PROSPECTS.

RIALTO.—Crop conditions in Rialo are most satisfactory. Potatoes are giving a fine yield and the quality is good. Especially is this true of the Great Divide variety, the White Rose not turning out quite so well in some fields. Berries are showing their appreciation of the not too scorching weather by producing quantities of large fine fruit. A large citrus crop has been set for next year and the fruit is making rapid and healthy growth. Rialto seems booked for a prosperous year.

GROWERS REAP REWARD.

RIALTO.—Lemon growers who have had the wisdom to keep their courage and their fruit through the recent period of low prices and high freight rates are now reaping a deserved reward. Lemon prices are soaring. With the beginning of rise in prices, a car of lemons sent out by the Rialto Packing Company, of which J. C. Boyd is manager, and sold in Boston, brought $9.80 per box

SQUABS A PROFITABLE BUSINESS SIDE LINE.

DEL ROSA.—That squab raising is a good, practical, commercial proposition, has been demonstrated by Mr. and Mrs. Albert Sanderson of Del Dosa, San Bernardino county. The Sandersons have been raising squabs as a side line for over two years and had, at first, all the details of feeding and care to learn and the marketing problem to solve.

The first six months were the hard ones and they had their share of loss from "going light" and canker, the two pigeon plagues. In the last eighteen months they have had hardly one sick bird.

Mr. Sanderson had been successful with Homers in England and says he thought he knew all there is to be known about raising pigeons. "I find that squab raising is as different from raising Homers for racing as raising cattle is different from raising hogs," he says.

But the Sandersons have mastered the business. Mrs. Sanderson has been a great factor, since her husband has not yet given up his other work, leaving most of the care of the pigeons to her.

They have 500 now and not more than half, if that many, are producers, the others being young stock. These will enter the producing class in a very short time now, but to date they have had to be supported by the others. There has been but one week in the last twelve months when there were no squabs to ship. The squabs will average nearly a pound each and now bring 70 cents a pound. Sometimes it is $1.

The squabs are never allowed to leave the nest and so prolific are the parent birds that they are practically always setting again before the squabs are removed from the nest. The father sets from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., the mother the rest of the day. The varieties raised are White King and Red Carneaux and they are wonderful birds with a glorious sheen on their breasts and the brightest and quickest of eyes. They average twenty-seven ounces at maturity.

They are wonderfully docile birds. The nest boxes are very slightly inclosed on the side and yet the birds never squabble, fall out or push the eggs out. The squabs sit there patiently and wait to be fed and this feeding is an interesting process. The parent bird opens his big bill and the squab inserts his in the opening. The squab gets the food and waits for more. If he were to be allowed to leave the nest he would lose flesh. Usually he is a month old when he is shipped to market, that is, if his younger brother or sister or both have not arrived to push him out. In that case he goes to market anyway, but doesn't weigh so much.

Interior of Squab Plant.

The photograph was taken on the place of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Sanderson, Del Rosa, San Bernardino county. Note the nest boxes in tiers.

Each pair of Mr. Sanderson's pigeons raises at least eight or nine pairs of squabs a year, and some pairs raise actually one pair of squabs for every month in the year. There is no especially quiet time in the squab business and the market pays good prices, since the squab is a rich man's food.

Mr. Sanderson says he could have a ready market for 2000 squabs a week if he had the birds to fill the orders. They ship by express on Tuesday. The birds arrive at destination in three days and in not over a week the check comes back to the shipper.

In preparing the birds for market a knife is used on them once. That is when a small, sharp, pointed knife is inserted in the roof of the mouth just before the head is inserted in the top of a glass jar in a rack conveniently placed against the wall. Here the bird is left until he bleeds to death and so finishes his life as quietly as he has lived. The Sandersons have five of these jars in the rack and kill five birds at a time, as that is the number they can get picked before they get cold if but one person works at it. The birds are never scalded, but always dry picked. They can be picked very easily and quickly. Mrs. Sanderson says she can manage eleven nicely in an hour.

After a squab is bled and picked, its bill is held open under a faucet and the bird is filled with water. It is then inverted and squeezed gently and, having been brought in the day before and fed nothing for twenty-four hours, this process leaves it clean inside. It is then singed and washed in cold water and placed in the ice box until the next day, when it is shipped away in a box packed with ice. Twenty-five per cent is allowed for the weight of the ice in shipping charges, which helps a lot. Indeed, the shipping charges are not at all things to worry over.

The houses in which the birds are kept are sanitary, having high ceilings and being well ventilated, and being whitewashed and kept very clean. Once a week they are cleaned thoroughly. The birds are given a bath every day in hot weather and every other day in cold. They have deep pans which are filled from the faucet in the pen, and emptied after the bath. The nest boxes reach in tiers to the ceiling.

In raising breeding stock, squabs are ringed when they are taken from the nest and begin to fly. Sisters and brothers can thus be told and are never allowed to mate. This is the only rule observed about breeding stock. Pigeons must always have whole corn or other grain or peas, if they are to be kept well. The Sandersons feed theirs whole corn, milo, sunflower seed, dried peas (these are par excellence for pigeons,) and almost any kind of grain except barley or oats, which must be separated from the hulls or rolled to be right for use.

The real health tonic for the birds lies in a mixture of a lot of things kept in a box in each pen all the time. This consists of charcoal and salt and finely ground oyster shells and several other things, all tinged a deep red color by the Venetian red, which forms an important element.

In the accompanying cuts but one pen and a part of one house are shown. There are several as large and all separate and yet this pigeon farm covers less than one-half of a town lot.

MORE COMMENT ON AGRICULTURAL SCHOOL.

Editor Farm and Tractor Section:

Robert R. Benson in the Farm and Tractor Section recently said: "Were I again to undertake the course of university training, even with the object of becoming a farmer, I would not choose a course in agriculture," which I believe is an exception rather than a rule with the graduates from our colleges of agriculture.

Mr. Benson has done some excellent work in agriculture and I will admit that he probably learned more about fruit growing in his experiences in practical work at Banning than he could obtain at a college of agriculture, as it would make the courses too long to go into all the details of every line of farming, and it is a question if results would justify such procedure.

The universities endeavor to give to the students the basis for sound and permanent agriculture, train them to interpret scientific information and connect it with every-day practice, give them all the information found useful in agriculture throughout all ages, and the latest findings in the fields of research. It endeavors to give them in four years what it took their fathers a lifetime to learn, together with what they did not learn, but what others have learned.

To the man who is to practice farming the university course in agriculture is a valuable asset and although it may not pay him in so many dollars and cents, it makes his farm life more interesting, more connected with the other sciences, and gives him a rock foundation upon which to build a successful farm life. His course in agriculture helps him to interpret government bulletins and other scientific information. There are so many farm journals and other kinds of farm information written these days that a farmer must be able to discriminate between what he can use, and what he can afford not to use. So many of our farm writers are the so-called "swivel-chair" farmers who never raise anything but their hats that our farmers will become overwhelmed unless they are farming on a solid foundation. They may obtain this either from bitter experience or from hard work in the courses given in our agricultural colleges.

But some of our students do not learn these things. These are the students who hire some one to cram them full of information just before examinations, get some one to answer for them in the class rooms, and copy other students' note books. These are the students who go out and impose themselves on the public as college graduates and whom the tax payers point to when the question of increased appropriations come up. Can the universities be blamed for these drones?

Sometimes our universities hire instructors who are learning agriculture at the expense of their pupils. The universities can hardly be blamed for this state of affairs for teachers have been hard to secure and our universities have expanded enormously in the past few years. As long as the salaries of men outside of the teaching profession are greater than those in the teaching profession we will not have a surplus from which to choose our teachers. The salaries have been raised a little, it is true, but in 1919 the colored janitor in the agricultural building, with little preparation, was getting a larger salary than I was as assistant professor in the College of Agriculture following years of study and preparation.

There are also many students taking agriculture who should be taking some other course. These are generally from the cities and have had no experience on the farm, but have been lured into agriculture by the expectations of easy jobs. These will in time be culled out, but some of them will learn enough about agriculture to hold down the positions sought. There are some professors who care more for faculty meetings and their jobs than they do for agriculture and their students. This cannot be held against the universities, but the graduates in agriculture know who these boarding professors are and when enough of them return to the farms they will clean up the universities, and in time we may expect only professors who are really interested in agriculture.

Statistics show that many boys in our universities are better prepared to pursue a course in agriculture, because of their farm experience, than the courses they are taking. Some of them realize their mistake before it is too late and change to agriculture, and the results are so surprising that many students think the agricultural courses are easy, but as a matter of fact those students looking for fruit courses fight shy of the colleges of agriculture [illegible] where they are interested in their work and have farm experience as a foundation.

Some farmers are to blame because they encourage their sons to learn something where they can seemingly make a living without doing much work when they should be teaching their sons not to accept a living unless they give value received for their earnings. Unless a farm boy exhibits a spark of genius for some special line of endeavor, he should be encouraged to learn all he can about the basis of agriculture, the beauties of farm life and the economic value of farming. Teach him also that he must be honest, thorough and stand straight and clean in the eyes of the world.

Let the farmers remember that the college of agriculture extends a welcome to them to visit, ask questions, seek first-hand information from those engaged in research work and form their own opinions rather than accept opinions of others.—[W. S. Childs, University of Arizona.

CHICK MEN TO MEET.

The annual convention of the International Baby Chick Association will be held in Philadelphia August 3, 4 and 5, when men and women who this past season have hatched millions of downy youngsters, will meet to discuss their affairs in common. Prominent poultrymen and baby chick experts are on the program to discuss problems and questions of vital interest to this industry, including Prof. Rice of Cornell, Prof. Lewis of New Jersey, Prof. Stoneburn, formerly of Connecticut; H. H. Knapp, George Cugley, Dr. S. B. Smith, James H. Lord and Z. C. Drumm. Among the matters which will occupy a leading position on the program are questions such as the standardization of labels, a standard of values for chicks, postal and shipping regulations, investigations in incubation, breeding stocks, and similar matters.

MANY FRUIT VESSELS GO THROUGH CANAL.

A total of eighteen ships carrying California fruits have been sent through the Panama Canal since January 12, when the steamer Charles H. Cramp sailed with the initial shipment of 1183 boxes of lemons and 496 boxes of oranges. A total of 90,427 boxes of lemons and 41,420 boxes of oranges have been sent by the ocean route to the Atlantic Coast and London.

According to reports made by the California Fruit Growers' Exchange, the fruit sent by water has at least equaled in condition that sent by rail. There is an average saving of 60 cents per box on lemons and 70 cents per box on oranges over the rail rate. The largest shipment was that on the steamship Liberator, which sailed from Los Angeles Harbor June 21 for New York with 16,000 boxes of lemons and 6000 boxes of oranges.

POTATO GROWERS SIGN MARKET AGREEMENT.

VAN NUYS.—As a result of the recent mass meeting of potato growers of the San Fernando Valley, held in Van Nuys, an association of growers, to be known as the California Potato Growers' Exchange, is being formed. Contracts have been drawn, and are being presented to prospective members by committees working from Van Nuys.

The primary purpose of the association will be to market potatoes for its members, under standard forms of marketing agreements, along co-operative lines suggested and approved by State and Federal departments. Through standardization and the elimination of waste and speculation, so far as market conditions will permit, the members may be assured of a constant market at a fair price, and the consumer of a uniform standard grade, at a price in keeping with the cost of production. In addition to the San Fernando Valley growers, the potato men in the San Gabriel and San Bernardino districts are being organized. It is probable that headquarters of the association will be in Van Nuys.

The exchange will be handled on a strictly non-profit basis, and will be controlled by a board of trustees selected by the growers. The following have been selected to act for the San Fernando Valley until the association is permanently organized: W. P. Whitsett, W. J. Pettit, J. L. Olsen, Mark Grimes, H. L. Boyer and J. L. Waring.

It is estimated that the potato acreage of Southern California amounts to 17,000 acres, of which approximately 8000 acres is in the San Fernando Valley. With some assurance of equitable prices for their products, it is probable that the growers will materially increase the acreage in this valley next year. A number of farms are producing yields in excess of 100 sacks per acre.

SCHOOL BOY MAKES SUCCESS WITH BEES.

ONTARIO.—The patience, industry and thrift of Clayton Green, 16-year-old Chaffey High School boy and son of E. E. Green, are attested in the spdendid apiary of 155 hives of bees, which he has built up from a single swarm which he found in a tree two years ago. Putting his study of bee culture in the agricultural department of Chaffey to practical use, young Green has achieved a remarkable success as a "migratory bee man." The migratory apiarists take their swarms to different localities where they can obtain sustenance and honey from different crops at different seasons of the year, going in turn from orange to sage, then to buckwheat, beans and alfalfa.

Young Green took his bees last week to desert land near Victorville, where a friend has twenty acres of homesteaded land covered with wild buckwheat, and where he hopes to be able to keep his hives all summer. When they return, bean fields near Canta Ana are expected to afford a good location for the bees and alfalfa lands south of Ontario are also available for the industrious honeymakers. Transportation of the bees to their temporary home was made by motor truck.

During the two years the youth has been engaged in the industry, he has worked on alfalfa ranches, irrigated orange groves and done other lines of work to enable him to accumulate money for building up his bee farm. Whenever he found a swarm of bees that were to be had at a bargain, he has bought them, adding gradually to his apiary. He found thirty swarms of bees in trees this season. He has been given some slight financial assistance by his father and today his apiary is valued at more than $1500.

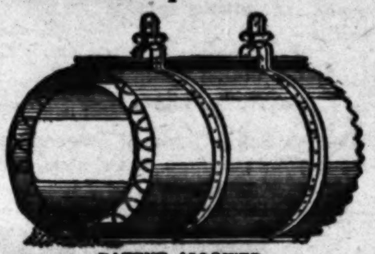
LAYING PLANS FOR ANNUAL MEETING.

At the recent meeting o fthe directors of the Los Angeles County Farm Bureau, steps were taken toward the holding of an annual meeting late this summer or very early in the fall. It is felt desirable to hold the meeting early and elect the new officers in order to complete plans for membership drive before the first in the year. President Neely appointed an annual meeting committee, composed of Secretary W. S. Rosecrans of Gardena, Directors Mark Grimes of Van Nuys, George W. Aschenbrenner of Covina, Glen Allard of Zelzah, Walter Wood of Whittier, W. H. Sawyer of West Covina and W. A. Neibel of Downey.

Following the appointment of the committee an invitation was extended to hold the meeting at Ganesha Park, Pomona. The committee will arrange a date and place of meeting at an early date.

Bonelli System Monolithic Concrete Pipe for All Purposes.



PATENT ALLOWED.

Concrete when properly mixed and poured wet between two forms as contemplated in the Bonelli System, and then allowed to remain contained between the forms for from twenty-four to forty-eight hours before removing the outside forms, makes a concrete pipe that will not leak at all after a few days' time, and will stand a pressure according to the thickness of the wall you make and the reinforcing that is put in. We pour as many feet or miles as are desired, making a continuous jointless pipe with all Ts, Crosses, Elbows, Outlets, Gates, Stand Pipes, Plugs, Expansion Joints, Valves, etc., made and set at the same time without any joints to leak or bother. Local economic conditions regulate the kind of inside forms to be used, which are of great variety. A better pipe for less money. You may be convinced of the above facts by calling at Arthur Black's Ranch, Palmdale, Cal., where it is in use. Ask him or John Boyle, Upatore Ranch.

The Livestock Bulletin.

BY ROBERT T. EVANS.

E. H. Biles, dairy inspector of the State Department of Agriculture, has been participating in a series of meetings for dairymen in the Imperial valley. These meetings were arranged by Mr. Garthwaite, the county agent, and twelve of them were held in different parts of the valley. Mr. Biles in his talks told of the vast difference in the salability of dairy products and the manner of handling the milk. He showed that it abundantly pays the dairymen to use a little care in washing utensils and sterilizing them and in keeping the dirt out of the milk by the use of a small top bucket, and in keeping it cool. He also demonstrated suitable and cheap apparatus. L. H. Moulton of the California Dairy Council told of the advantages to be derived from the use of pure-bred bulls, and Dr. J. [illegible] of San Diego, discussed the control of contagious abortion in cows.

W. P. Hodge of Hinckley, who owns some of the best Durocs in the State and some of the finest Guernsey cattle, his foundation stock being from the Hollow-Hill Farm, has moved to the San Bernardino Valley, being now located at Mill and E streets, San Bernardino, where there is excellent pasture for his stock. Mr. Hodge's Cherry Pathfinder has taken some of the highest honors in his class in the State. In judging him at the recent live-stock day at the county farm, the expert who acted as judge, said that he was a very "typical" Duroc-Jersey.

Gelatine's Olga Lad.

Six-months-old Jersey bull calf bought recently in Oregon by Winsor Ranch, of Bonita, San Diego county.

The Craig Ranch of Owensmouth has sold a Duroc-Jersey boar, sired by High Top Orion, to C. D. Russell of Lankershim, and nine bred sows to the Doheny Land and Water Company.

The Winetka Ranch herd of Guernsey cattle is rapidly taking its place among the leading pure-bred herds of San Diego county. The owner, F. B. Naylor of San Diego, is a very enthusiastic booster for good stock and on his large ranch thirty-five miles east of San Diego, he is building up a high-class herd, having purchased over a score of excellent individuals from the Edgemoor Farm herd at Santee. Included in this purchase is the good cow, Imp. [illegible] of the [illegible], and the well-bred young bull, Emperor of Edgemoor, a bull that will make an excellent herd sire in this splendid foundation herd. Mr. Naylor believes in giving his cattle lots of range, especially the young stock, for in this way, he believes, he has eliminated the possibilities of diseases in his herd to a greater extent than do breeders who keep their stock too closely confined. His ranch is dotted with live oak trees which provide ample shade for the stock, and the conditions on the ranch, he declares, are ideal for the production of good animals. San Diego county is becoming noted for its good herds of Guernsey cattle and with the entrance of Mr. Naylor to its ranks, the breed has obtained a real booster for good Guernseys.

Following is a partial list of the judges who have been selected to make the awards on the stock to be shown at the California State Fair at Sacramento from September 3 to 11: T. E. Robson, London, Ont., horses, mules and Shorthorns; Frank E. Van Natta, Lafayette, Ind., Herefords; Prof. H. H. Kildee, Ames, Iowa, dairy cattle and Duroc-Jerseys; E. W. Major, Los Angeles, dairy cattle; Dr. C. P. DeLangle, Yountville, milk goats; Oran N. Nelson, Corvallis, Or., sheep; Ralph Jenkins, Orleans, Ind., Berkshires; Robert V. Moore, San Leandro, and Charles G. Hinds, Oakland, poultry; William J. Head, West Berkeley, and Robert V. Moore, pigeons; Lewis H. Salisbury, Pasadena, pet stock; Emery F. Mitchell, Belvedere, superintendent. The following assistant judges have been named: Arthur J. Dixon, Fresno, poultry; J. G. Mee, San Miguel, turkeys and water fowls; F. M. Washburn, Sacramento, pigeons; Erwin Weisner, Oakland, rabbits.

Mr. Del Fanta of Van Nuys recently purchased from Burr Farm a registered bull calf for use as a future herd sire. This calf is out of Yama Princess Alcartra Lass, a cow with a seven-day record of twenty-seven pounds of butter as a three-year-old, and 100 pounds of milk to her credit in a single day. His sire's dam has a yearly record of 1100 pounds of butter and 24,554 pounds of milk. One of his grand dams produced 1331.78 pounds of butter and 24,690 pounds of milk in a year, while the other grand dam has a record of 1142.33 pounds of butter from 28,090 pounds of milk in a year, made at the age of 11 years.

HOT WIND CUTS INTO DECIDUOUS YIELD.

SACRAMENTO.—Deciduous fruit growers of the Sacramento and San Joaquin valleys will lose approximately $1,000,000 in crop returns due to the recent heavy north wind, according to reports from the various fruit growing districts.

The hot wind, which raged steadily for more than twenty-four hours at a velocity of from twenty-five to thirty-nine miles an hour, dried up the stems of the fruit and caused a dropping which was as high as 50 per cent of the crop on some of the farms of the Sacramento River Delta section.

The damage was most severe in the delta section, the principal pear-growing district of California, and as a result the pear crop was the hardest hit. The plum crop of Placer county was damaged severely, and cannery representatives reported considerable damage to the Sutter county cling peach crop.

Fruit men are disturbed by the condition of the western fruit market as evidenced by slow sales and weak prices. This is according to local shippers, who are now approaching the peak of the season.

They declare the eastern markets gave no evidence of stimulation usually occurring previous to the July 4th holiday. In all the big eastern cities the situation is said to be the same, and unless the condition is only temporary, the future outlook is not considered bright for the remainder of the deciduous crop.

Modern Machinery.

lands, with fairly steep grades, cannot be easily plowed with an animal outfit, for practically all the strength of the horses is used in overcoming gravity. In the case of the tractor, a certain percentage of its power must, of course, be expended in negotiating the steep hillside, but there will still be power left for doing the work, and tractor manufacturers have worked out schedules showing just how much of the power of a given model is required to propel the machine and how much is left for crop work. In the California foothills, some very steep hillsides are now plowed, cultivated and harvested by tractor outfits which were never utilized before, except for grazing. This ability to operate on steep grades also makes the tractor ideal for orchard cultivation, for fruit trees often thrive best on rolling or uneven areas, and orchardists now depend to a very large extent upon these power machines to keep their soil in good condition.

American implement manufacturers are constantly working toward the improvement and perfection of their machines, and new uses are being devised for the various kinds of farm implements. Even in specialized fields, such as corn culture, rice growing, etc., American machinery is being adapted to the special needs of the growers. The corn cultivator is doing work thought impossible a few years ago, and rice binders and improved rice implements have enabled California growers to develop their rice industry to a marvelous extent. Machinery is doing as much for the farmer as for the manufacturer, and power farming is becoming the universal practice.

have a crop. One of the most interesting things observed was that by far the greatest percentage of trees with a crop were pruned by the "long" system. In fact, it is very difficult to find orchards with even a fair crop on that were headed back. It was rather unfortunate that all of the plots on pruning in the San Fernando Valley conducted by the Agricultural Extension Service were in sections where frost was severe, taking most of the fruit. It is expected that these plots would show a great deal to the deciduous growers of the valley, for there are two in Van Nuys, two in Chatsworth and one in Lankershim.

Another very important observation which Dr. Whitten made was the presence of a disease in apricot trees called "bacterial gummosis." At least two orchards were observed where this disease was very active. It is spreading rapidly throughout the valley and deciduous growers would do well to try to control it. The first case was observed in an orchard where some one had been digging around the roots to see if there were evidences of gophering or disease there. The leaves were dropping and gum was exuding from the bark. It was the last stage of the disease. This disease is first observed through an exudation of dull amber-colored gum. As the disease develops the bark dies. It can be controlled if treated in time by cutting out the affected part and treating with a disinfectant such as Bordeaux paste. Badly affected limbs should be cut off.

ANTELOPE VALLEY.

The primary purpose of visiting the Antelope Valley was to look over the experimental plots for the control of "little leaf" disease of pears, which are being conducted jointly by the Agricultural Extension Service for Los Angeles county, the Horticultural Commission, and the pomology department of the college of agriculture. During recent years "little leaf" has become very prevalent in the Antelope Valley. Many growers have been unable to satisfactorily account for it, though many theories have been advanced. The college of agriculture was appealed to for a possible cause. It was explained that no one definite cause is known, but that it is probably a physiological trouble caused by nutritional disorder. "Little leaf" has been observed under varied conditions so it is evident that the nutritional disorder can be brought about by different conditions. One of the most probable causes for "little leaf" in the Antelope Valley, as pointed out by Dr. Whitten and others, is irregular moisture conditions in the soil. With the limited supply of water and the great water requirements due to climatic conditions, soils are quite liable to become dried out at times. This has reacted on the vitality of the trees with the effect that "little leaf" was produced. From a study of conditions there, it is apparent that soil moisture conditions have much to do with its cause. In order to definitely prove it for the growers in the valley, plots with checks were established to show the effect of good irrigation throughout the entire year.

One year's trial is showing good results. The trees are growing better in general. The old cases of "little leaf" are showing some good leaves, while there are but very few new cases. It was not expected to cure this disease in one season, but to prevent the occurrence of it on trees not now affected and in time to bring back to normal the best of the trees affected. It is advisable to cut out the parts affected and build on more normal wood.

Some growers have observed that it is more prevalent on the lighter types of soil and on soils poorly taken care of. It has given them the impression that it is the soil that causes it. A light soil is less retentative of moisture than a heavier one, consequently there would be greater fluctuations of its moisture content unless water was added more frequently. That is a point which growers should well consider. Such soils should be irrigated at shorter intervals and have less applied at one time. The moisture content would not fluctuate so much then and trees could live more normally. In the case of the soils not handled properly, with the result that "little leaf" was produced, that also can be traced to soil moisture, for there is a greater loss of water where soil is poorly handled.

It was Dr. Whitten's impression that if the pear growers of the Antelope Valley are to succeed, they must practice better irrigation and cultivation to provide the best living conditions for the trees.

Dr. Whitten looked at a large number of pear orchards to determine which of the two pruning systems is carrying the best crops. It was quite apparent that the largest crops are on "long-pruned" trees. Those which are showing the best results are the trees which have been pruned at least three years by the "long" system, showing that the trees improve with continued use of the system.

One of the great objections that pear growers have to the "long" system in the Antelope Valley is that the intense winds of that section will not permit best results with it, especially for young trees. Dr. Whitten stated, and backed up his statements by actual examples in the orchards, that a tree pruned "long" will withstand the wind more than one "headed back." In fact, a young tree should have as little pruning as possible done to it. The long branches serve as windbreaks for the tree, allowing new branches to grow against the wind. A "headed-back" branch will bend more with the wind than one not "headed" because the former is more brittle on account of its succulent nature.

OLIVE CROP SHORT.

VISALIA.—Charles F. Collins, Horticultural Commissioner of Tulare county, reports to State Director of Agriculture Hecke a serious shortage in the 1921 olive crop of the county, due to violent and unprecendented rainfall during the month of May, which destroyed the blossoms. Mr. Collins says in part: "We had a splendid outlook, the trees being loaded with blossoms and on the strength of that I reported a 100 per cent prospect in my last crop report. A week later, the crop outlook was reduced probably 75 per cent or more, but we have not given the matter sufficient attention yet as to be able to form a new estimate."

ACTUAL BREEDERS NOW FAVORED IN SHOWS.

Sec. American Shorthorn Breeders' Association.

BY FRANK D. TOMSON,

There has come a useful change in recent years in the practices of exhibitors of pure-bred live stock and the attitude of the public interested in this branch of live-stock husbandry.

In earlier days it mattered little whether the exhibitor bred the animals which he had on exhibition or not. The fact that he possessed them was regarded sufficient to attach importance to his operations, that is, if his entries were of the winning sorts. Naturally this resulted in a great advantage t othe man who had money and could acquire animals of merit from various sources. It was not even essential that he should own any other live stock. The fact that he appeared on the show circuit with a group of show animals was accepted as sufficient evidence of his desire to be identified with the business. He might compete and win over an experienced breeder who relied on his own productions to make up his show display and little thought was given apparently to the more deserving producer.

But this has all changed. The record associations are placing a premium upon the entries exhibited by the breeder and have arranged the classifications so that in some of the contests none may compete but the breeders of the entries. This is along the line of progress. It is a constructive attitude due in part to the foresight of those who direct the affairs and make the appropriations of the record associations, in part to the claim for recognition by the breeders, and in part to the desire of the interested onlookers who study the problem of live-stock improvement.

So it has come about that in the leading fairs and shows the breeder has been given a place of preference in the classifications—a preference that is substantial because of the extent of the cash appropriations.

This constructive conception of the situation is encouraging beginnings to start with a better class of individuals as a foundation. Another inducement exists. It is the attitude of the buyers in public sales and in private transactions showing preference for animals bred by the seller provided, of course, they represent the standard sought for.

This is the day of the breeder in the pure-bred stock industry and the business is on the most favorable basis as a result.

RUNT ANIMALS IN THE LIVE-STOCK HERD.

The question, "Why is a runt?" has been answered by hundreds of live-stock raisers who have filled in and returned questionnaire reports sent out by the United States Department of Agriculture. These reports—nearly a thousand of them—show that inferior breeding, poor feeding, and parasites are the three principal causes of undersized and underdeveloped animals. In fact, about 75 per cent of runtiness is traceable to these factors. All of these factors are under the control of breeders or stock raisers, who by controlling them can in a large degree eliminate runts, which, according to the reports, constitute 7 per cent of all farm animals.

The information gained from the reports is of much interest and value to live-stock owners. Department specialists consider it dependable, for the replies have been received from a large proportion of farms on the accredited-herd list (having cattle free from tuberculosis,) and most of the remainder are from farms whose owners are cooperating with the Department of Agriculture and State agricultural colleges in the "Better Sires—Better Stock" campaign. Those who answered the questionnaire are, therefore, interested in the control of disease and the improvement in quality of domestic animals, and, in general, are progressive live-stock owners.

In addition to the three principal causes of runtiness previously mentioned, the reports show that there are numerous other contributing causes. A summary of the opinions from 783 live-stock owners shows that the principal causes of runty live stock are: Inferior breeding, 31.6 per cent; inadequate or unsuitable feed, 30.4 per cent; parasites and insect pests, 15.1 per cent; inadequate housing and care, 12.4 per cent; contagious diseases, 4.9 per cent; exposure, 2.9 per cent; accident, 1.0 per cent; other causes, 1.7 per cent. It appears that the breeding of well-selected pure-bred stock produces very few undersized animals, but that with scrubs—especially when inbred—the percentage of runty stock is high.

The reports show that runtiness is most prevalent among hogs, the average percentage reported being 10.1. This, moreover, includes a number of farms which reported no runts at all. One farmer, who is breeding good, pure-bred hogs and feeding them a variety and plenty of feed, states: "We have not had a runty pig in two years, although the litters sometimes contain from nine to eleven pigs each."

The results of the inquiry indicate that the size of an animal of good breeding at birth has but little relation to the mature weight where proper feed, care and management are provided. This is shown in a number of cases of successful hog raisers who report that lack of uniformity in fairly large litters has been overcome by proper feeding. A cattle breeder in Montana reports that proper feeding and care of a runty animal resulted in developing it to such a finish that it took first prize in its class at the State fair.

It appears from a summary of 929 reports that a comparatively small number of animals are born runty, and that most stunting of growth begins a relatively short time before weaning, or soon afterward. More than 50 per cent of runty live stock appears during infancy or before weaning, according to reports, while 35 per cent shortly after weaning, and only 4.4 per cent at birth.

Was Once a Runt.

This pure-bred bull was badly stunted when a calf, mainly for lack of suitable food, but when given adequate feed and proper care developed into a prize winner.

In reply to a question on the practicability of raising runts to market size 74 per cent of the replies indicate that it is not profitable, 14 per cent answered either yes, or yes with qualifications. Comments show that a well-bred animal, even though undersized, will develop into just as good an animal when it is given an equal chance. "With inherited runtiness due to inferior breeding," one stockman declared, "it does not pay. Other cases due to lack of proper feed may be raised with profit."

Several dairymen explained that they have had calves that were small at birth which with good care and feed made very good cows. Another breeder declares "being born small generally has little influence on size of animal at maturity if it has proper nourishment to maturity, but to develop into a high-class animal it must have good breeding back of it, and to do this best we must use pure-bred sires that are good individuals with strong constitutions."

Replies indicated practical unanimity in considering runty live stock a serious drain on the industry and a loss to the owner. Though some estimated that their financial returns would be more than 25 per cent greater if runts were eliminated, the common estimate was between 5 and 10 per cent.

Of 511 replies as to the practicability of reducing runts among farm animals 89 per cent were affirmative and without qualifications. Ten per cent regarded reduction possible, but not always profitable. The remaining 1 per cent were negative replies. In this connection a number of live-stock owners frankly expressed their inability to cope with the runt problem.

CATTLE AND ALFALFA MEN GET TOGETHER.

EL CENTRO.—Fattening of beef cattle is rapidly becoming a big factor in the agricultural life of Imperial Valley, hundreds of steers having already been received by local ranchers from the parched grazing lands of Arizona. A number of ranchers in various sections of the county have purchased small herds of the cattle, and others are now feeding large numbers.

Only a few months ago the alfalfa growers found themselves with large quantities of good hay on hand, which made the future anything but optimistic because of the rapidly falling market. Arizona cattlemen stepped into the breach with various proposals regarding the feeding or purchase of the stock which was threatened with starvation, and what a short time ago seemed to forecast severe losses in hay sales has turned out to be about an even break and in some instances a profit for the hay growers.

The first large shipment of Deglet Noor dates from Algeria arrived at Tempe, Ariz., in 1900.

ON GUARD AGAINST THE ALFALFA WEEVIL.

The recent appearance of the alfalfa weevil in several thousand acres in the vicinity of Reno, Nev., makes it imperative that everyone be on the lookout for this dangerous pest, since it may very easily be brought across the line and the success of any effort to exterminate it, should it become introduced, depends upon its early discovery.

The adult weevil, or beetle stage, is about a quarter of an inch long, brownish-gray in color, and has a long snout. The larva, or immature stage, which does the most damage, is yellowish-green in color with a tiny black head, legless, and generally assumes a curved position. It will generally be found in the crotches or roots of the growing part of the plant and any plant, the leaves of which show feeding notches of insects, should be examined. Any alfalfa insects of which growers are suspicious should be sent to the State Department of Agriculture, Pest Control Service, Sacramento.

PERFECTS MACHINE TO CAP MELONS.

One of the big items in the cost of producing early melons in California is the laborious process of hand-covering the hills with paraffine paper caps. It ordinarily takes two men a little over a day to cover one acre of cantaloupes. The wires must first be arched over the hill and then the paper must be placed over this frame. It is then necessary to put some dirt around the edge of the cap in order to keep it from blowing away. Besides being costly, this operation is tedious, and it requires a great deal of time to set out a large acreage of melons.

To do away with this time-consuming labor, W. V. Stahl, a farmer inventor of [illegible], in the San Fernando Valley, has devised an appliance which he calls a hot cap melon covering machine. The machine, which he has patented, consists simply of one cylinder inside another. There is an inch and a half flange at the bottom of about an inch, covering it at the same serves to hold the outer part of the machine on the surface of the ground while the inner movable cylinder forces the arched paper cap into the ground to a depth of baout an inch, covering it at the same time. There are two metal straps across the top of the outside cylinder, which act as a guide for the short handle attached to the movable cylinder inside.

The paper caps are made by a patented machine which has a capacity of 30,000 per day. These caps are turned out ready to be placed in the capping machine, which by one operation puts the cap over the hill and covers it to a depth sufficient to prevent it being blown away by the wind.

PURPLE VETCH SEED GROWN IN NORTH.

According to reports, apparently well authenticated, in the neighborhood of 2400 acres of purple vetch is being grown this year for seed in Northwestern California for use in the orchards of the southern part of the State. The advantage of purple vetch as a green manure crop lies in the fact that it makes more growth during the winter months and can be turned under earlier than other legume crops. The project of growing seed in the northern counties of the State was largely brought about through the efforts of the United States Department of Agriculture, which has taken a great deal of interest in plans for increasing the supply of seed for this valuable crop.

Purple vetch was first brought to this country from Italy in 1899 and its advantages have been appreciated for a number of years, but it was not possible to introduce it extensively because of scarcity of seed. In the region where it was most valuable it has not been feasible to raise purple vetch seed in large quantities because of climatic conditions. In the north, on the other hand, the seed can be grown successfully, but there the purple vetch is not in as great favor for forage as common vetch, which is hardier and has become established in popularity.

To make a bridge between the two geographically distant localities has been the work of a number of years. It was first necessary to demonstrate the value of purple vetch in the South, and afterward to induce northern farmers to substitute it to some extent for their customary crops. This latter was difficult, because purple vetch was not quoted on the market, and also because, where a sale was effected, farmers were tempted to sell their entire stock, reserving no seed to maintain or extend the acreage.

The assistance of the California Fruit Growers' Exchange was enlisted, and last year 500 acres were grown under guarantee, a large portion of the yield being kept for seed. This year Northwestern California and Oregon farmers will receive 14½ cents a pound for purple vetch seed, which should give them from $150 to $200 per acre in addition to the straw. From now on it is hoped sufficient seed will be available for all needs.

FLORIDA SHORT OF SHOOK.

Forest depletion under methods which do not provide for regrowth has reached a point which makes the question where containers are to come from a matter of very practical concern to the citrus industry in Florida. Conferences have been held with leading officials of the Forest Service to discuss this question. Application of the principles of forestry with a view to the production of sustained supplies of box material is regarded as the only way to meet the problem.

PALO VERDE'S GRAPE MEN OPTIMISTIC.

BLYTHE.—The grape growers in the Palo Verde Valley are receiving nice fat returns from their early maturing Thompson seedless grapes. Grapes have been ripe for some time here and are of excellent quality. These early grapes are selling in local markets at 20 cents per pound and the growers who are supplying the towns with "vini vinifera" are well pleased with the prices this year.

Prof. Frederick T. Bioletti of the University of California recently spent several days in the valley and was well pleased with the growth of the young vines in the vineyards and nurseries. From observation, Prof. Bioletti stated that grapes mature in this valley about the same time as in Coachella and Imperial valleys. The Farm Bureau arranged a field demonstration on the C. C. Hobson ranch, where a model vineyard was planted last March under directions of Prof. Bioletti. Cuttings were planted in this model vineyard and it has proven very satisfactory, having a 96 per cent stand. The young vines are well formed and waist high. Pinching of the laterals and [illegible] so as to properly form the young vine was demonstrated. A three-years' growth in one can be obtained by proper handling, according to Prof. Bioletti.

The grape growers in the Palo Verde Valley are to organise a grape growers' association within the Farm Bureau, there being some fifty growers in the organization at present.

There are sufficient cuttings and vines planted in both vineyards and nurseries this year to plant 925 acres to grapes, providing a perfect stand is obtained. The two principal varieties grown in the valley are Thompson seedless and Malagas. Because of the success the vineyardists are having, the high prices received this year and the ideal growing conditions, many new vineyards will be put in next winter. The Rudd-Maguire Nursery, with its 150,000 cuttings, reports that many inquiries are being made for the planting of new vineyards and that it is contracting now to plant out rooted vines this coming winter.

EL CENTRO.—Growers of grapefruit met here recently to take steps to form a co-operative marketing association. Imperial growers were invited to join. Growers propose to build their own packing-house, or lease the one now built.

VALUABLE DISCUSSIONS AT CITRUS SCHOOL.

The summer meeting of the California Citrus Institute and the fourth annual Fumigation and Pest Control School, held at Whittier on Friday and Saturday, June 24 and 25, proved to be the biggest educational feature of the year for citrus growers, the two activities drawing an attendance of close to 900 persons.

The program of the institute had to do entirely with the economic situation confronting the industry, notably means for holding production costs down, with a critical examination of increases in production costs, together with a general review of the transportation situation as it is affecting the pocket books of the grower.

George B. Hodgkin of the industrial relations department of the California Fruit Growers' Exchange, in discussing the labor item as affecting production costs, demonstrated rather conclusively that merely cutting wages does not necessarily reduce costs as it may and frequently does seriously reduce efficiency. He pointed out that an important consideration in cutting costs is through increasing the efficiency of labor by the providing of better living and working conditions. He also advocated widespread farmer-operated labor agencies for stabilizing the supply and preventing needless and wasteful competition.

I. G. McBeth, manager of the 2700-acre Bastanchury citrus holdings at Fullerton, pointed out that the principal consideration is cutting costs of production per box as against cost per acre. His plea was for reducing orchard operations to the minimum consistent with tree health and maximum cropping, to get the highest yields at the lowest possible per box cost.

Harry Mamerel of the J. M. Riley Fruit Company, Covina, reviewed orchard essentials as he considered them, emphasizing individual tree attention, co-operative ownership of orchard equipment, the use of labor-saving machinery, and co-operative fumigation.

C. C. Teague, president of the California Fruit Growers' Exchange, covered the disastrous effects which the horizontal increases in freight rates is having on the citrus industry, citing the history of freight rate increases, the fight the California Citrus League has been making for the growers and the development and possibilities of water transportation. He brought the subject right down to date with the announcement of the rehearing which the Interstate Commerce Commission has granted the league.

The evening banquet, held in the Woman's Club House, was attended by a hundred or more growers, a musical program and entertainment being provided by the Whittier Chamber of Commerce. Following the banquet, G. Harold Powell, general manager of the California Fruit Growers' Exchange, delivered an address on "Agricultural Co-operation," in which he portrayed the marketing situation faced by practically every organized branch of agriculture, calling special attention to the particularly fortunate situation of the walnut and citrus growers who have successfully marketed their crops in the face of the general collapse in business. This, he declared to be due to these two organizations actually financing the distribution of their crops through eastern sales in quantities which the trade could absorb rather than forcing f.o.b. sales in California on a depressed money market.

FUMIGATION SCHOOL.

The intense interest taken by growers in pest control problems this season was shown by the attendance of over 500 at the fumigation and pest-control school. The morning session was devoted to fumigation. Horticultural Commissioner H. J. Ryan of Los Angeles county reported scale conditions generally as very bad, with dirty orchards the rule rather than the exception. In discussing fumigation results of the past season as checked by him for Los Angeles county, he frankly admitted that throughout the San Gabriel and Pomona valleys the [illegible] given as satisfactory results as were hoped for. He reported much better results from fumigation than from spraying. Concurrence in these opinions seemed to be general.

In discussing fumigation recommendations for the coming season, R. S. Woglum of the field department, California Fruit Growers' Exchange, stated that he believed the poor results in the above-mentioned district to be largely due to the development of resistant strains of the black scale, although partially due to other causes. He called attention to the desirability of improvements in applicators whereby the liquid gas can be vaporized outside the tent before being discharged and recommended the cyanofumer for temperatures below 50 degrees Fahrenheit. It was generally agreed that the pot method is an antiquated practice, but it was pointed out that in view of the poor results with the liquid method which have obtained in some districts for the past two or three years, growers have reason to look back with favor upon older and longer tested practices. For effective fumigation Mr. Woglum urged the necessity of night inspection, exposures of not less than forty-five minutes, frequent testing of applicators, five to six strokes of the pump for each discharge, keeping the nozzle away from small trees, avoidance of wind, fumigation before irrigation, the employment and paying well of conscientious foremen and personal supervision on the part of the owner.

Considerable hope for a solution of the problem of efficient fumigation at a cheaper cost was offered growers by Prof. H. J. Quayle of the Citrus Experiment Station, in his discussion of the use of gas-tight tents, materials for the manufacture of which are now being developed by a number of concerns.

The afternoon program was devoted to the subjects of spray injury and red spider control. Reports on investigational work on effects of arsenical sprays on citrus trees were all in agreement that these sprays have injured the quality of the fruit through decreasing the acid content. Red spider control comment was to the effect that in the coast districts spraying and dusting are seldom necessary, particularly where scale control is effected by parasites or predators, for the reason that the natural insect enemies of the red spider will usually keep it under control. Dusting and spraying were said to kill off the beneficial insect enemies as well as the spider, so that when later generations of the spider appeared they were no longer held under natural control, necessitating frequent spraying or dusting. C. V. Newman of the San Joaquin Fruit Company, declared that control of the Argentine ant aided materially in stimulating natural control of red spider.

For the interior districts summer treatment was generally agreed upon as being far from satisfactory, it being suggested that growers might do well to examine for the presence or absence of the spider predators before undertaking artificial control measures. Where not present, spraying or dusting must be done, although frequently proving ineffective under such conditions. Winter treatment with a cresolis spray was declared to be desirable on account of the killing of the eggs which it effects. It was generally apparent, however, that there is still much to be learned concerning the control of this pest which many growers testified they believed to be next to scale the most serious with which they have to deal.

CONFERENCE DELEGATES.

SAN BERNARDINO.—Those who attended the recent travel conference of the farm bureau from San Bernardino county, were, besides Dr. D. S. Fox, farm adviser, Oliver Pitts, Oak Glen, director of Yucaipa Center; H. S. White of Chino, director at large, and R. B. Peters of Devore, president of the San Bernardino County Farm Bureau. They reported a very enthusiastic and helpful conference, and Dr. Fox brought back some sixty pictures taken on the trip.

BABY TRACTORS DO THE WORK OF HORSES.

SAN DIMAS.—While the growers of this vicinity are alive with orchard tractors, the acreage of tractor-worked land predominating, it is not to be forgotten that the baby trees are likewise machine tended. The R. M. Teague citrus nurseries has thrown out the horse altogether. Its trees are gathered and handled from the nursery with trucks, and while they are growing in nursery form, from seed bed to finished stock ready for sale, they are tended with tractors of the garden type.

Mr. Teague is very pronounced in his indorsement of the garden tractor over the horse. It gets over more ground, goes through tight places, such as narrow rows, and short turns, where a horse would do damage or be impossible, and it never runs over a young tree, or takes a nip of a tender top. It is pulling the furrower and cultivator clear down to good one-horse depth, and it is regarded as a money-saver and a generally good actor. As it has been tried out in this nursery the small tractor is not in any measure a toy or a plaything, but a very earnest and efficient worker. While improvements of certain features would be welcomed, Mr. Teague says the baby tractor now is so good that in his work the horse cannot compete with it.

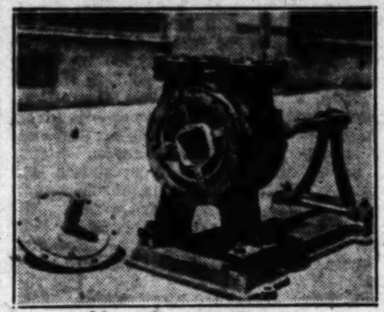
THE MODERN TYPES OF ROTARY PUMPS.

BY HERBERT A. SHEARER.

The new rotary pumps are so different from the old ones that we must revamp our ideas in order to catch up with the improvements.

Modern rotary pumps are built on the same eccentric principle that was adopted many years ago, but the details of construction have eliminated the old-time cylinder friction and wear that formerly caused so much grief.

New oiling systems also have contributed greatly in reducing friction, and the application of new power conveyors helps to increase efficiency, so that for certain purposes and up to their limit the new rotary pumps work very satisfactorily.



New Rotary Pump.

It is so constructed that the valves revolve without actually touching the polished surface of the cylinder, greatly reducing friction. Water enters and leaves from the top, the pump working either right or left.

Modern rotary pumps work at comparatively slow speeds. They prime themselves and are automatically balanced, as liquids enter at the center and are discharged at the center, so there can be no side thrust.

A good rotary pump will work up to a pumping head of 100 feet. It will pump water for irrigation and for fire protection. It is recommended for use in fruit caneries for pumping syrups, fruit pastes at boiling temperatures, and it will pump heavy oils or salt brines or refuse even though mixed with steam, air and gases. It is either right or left so the direction of power makes no difference.

ONE BUMPER CROP THAT'S NOT WANTED.

TEHACHEPI.—This summer's crop of rattlesnakes is the heaviest in years. All through the valley, and the other valleys in this general region, the number of these dreaded serpents is far in excess of their number as observed in any previous year for a long time. They are found all over the orchards and other cultivated lands, in the pastures, and in the grain fields, and the strings that the residents of these regions are reported to have killed are so large that they have an alarming sound. Everywhere these terrible snakes are found coiled or crawling. They haunt the barns of the ranchers, probably for mice to be found in these buildings; they are tangled in the cultivator teeth as orchards are worked, and every rock and log and brush pile and old stump is suspected and shunned by the people as probable harbors of these deadly creatures. Reports of cattle and horses bitten about the head, or the feet, as they have grazed over the dry pastures that these mountains afford, are numerous. [illegible] there are few reports of personal injuries, but stories of narrow escapes are plentiful.

The old settlers, and the Indians who still linger in these parts, agree in ascribing this crotaline invasion to the dry weather, or more correctly, to the generally dry condition of the mountains that has followed as a consequence of the series of three increasingly dry years. These serpent-wise persons assert that at intervals years apart, and always when these dry spells are prevalent, the snakes come down out of the hills as they are doing now, and they believe that the rattlers come to hunt for water. It is noted that there is an unusual proportion of very large snakes among those that are killed, and that long strings of rattles predominate. How long the invasion is to last is not predicted, except that the snakes will not go back to their holes in the higher rocks till there is wetter weather, and a more copious flow from the mountain springs. In the meantime the inhabitants of these parts are stepping high, wide and careful, ready to jump sidewise at the first rattle they hear, and are showing a marked disposition to adopt the big stick as an inseparable companion.

PLAN ASSOCIATION.

As an outgrowth of the recent field day meeting of the potato growers' department of the Farm Bureau held at Van Nuys at which the United States Bureau of Markets grades for potatoes were adopted, a movement has been launched for the organization of a co-operative marketing association of potato growers of Southern California. The market outlook for the potato crop is far from satisfactory and it is felt that co-operative marketing is the only solution for the present situation. At a meeting called at farm bureau headquarters in Los Angeles Thursday, June 30, it was decided to have contracts prepared and a committee was authorized to undertake this work and to conduct campaigns for the signing up of growers in the various potato districts of Southern California. It is expected that within a couple of weeks the new organization will be in a position to undertake marketing of the crop.

VICTORY FOR SHIPPERS.

Bringing victory to long-haul fruit and vegetable shippers in one fight with the rail interests, is the recent decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission against the reconsignment and division service restrictions that the railways attempted to establish last December. After suspending these tariffs until April 30, 1921, in order to hear the growers' side of the question, the commission recently announced that the proposed rules had not been justified and that the reconsignment rules in effect prior to Dec. 1, 1920, would be continued.—[California Citrograph.

CAPRIFYING FIGS IN THE SOUTHLAND.

The caprification season for the Smyrna fig is well under way in Southern California, having recently been finished in the commercial districts of the San Joaquin Valley. The season seems to have been a few days late over the State at large, with the possible exception of the Exeter district, where gathering of the caprifig crop began about June 10. As a general thing the season in Southern California and particularly in the districts lying in coastal influence is from three weeks to a month later than in the San Joaquin Valley.

Earlier in the season a serious shortage of capri figs seemed imminent, fall frosts having caused rather heavy mortality. The late spring frosts evened things up, however, by taking a large part of the Smyrna crop in certain districts and especially on the younger orchards, so that no serious shortage has occurred.

The Calimyrna or Smyrna fig reaches the receptive stage when caprification shuold commence when the diameter of the second crop reaches a half-inch or more. According to a minimum schedule recently worked out by Prof. I. J. Condit, formerly of the State University but now director of the Horticultural Department, California Peach and Fig Growers, the following numbers of capri figs should be used in order to insure thorough caprification and the setting of a maximum crop. In full-grown trees twenty feet or more in diameter, ninety-six caprifigs in three baskets, to be placed in lots of four to a basket at intervals of three days; for eighteen-foot trees, ninety capri figs, three baskets, three or four per basket every three days; sixteen-foot trees, eighty in two baskets, five per basket every three days; fourteen-foot trees, seventy-two in two baskets, four per basket every three days; twelve-foot trees, sixty-four in two baskets, four every three days; ten-foot trees, fifty-six [illegible] eight every four days; six-foot trees, eighteen in one basket, four every six days. Experience has indicated that it is frequently difficult if not impossible to use San Joaquin Valley grown capris for Southern California Smyrnas on account of the difference in season. The best practice therefore seems to be that of using capris grown as close to the place where they are to be used as possible. Growers who have not yet arranged to secure capri figs are advised that lists of capri fig sources in Southern California may be had, by writing to the office of the Farm Adviser, 361 Courthouse, Los Angeles.

TO HELP SCHOOL MEN.

With the end to assisting in efforts for improving and vitalizing the agricultural instruction given in the public schools, the Los Angeles County Farm Bureau, by invitation of the Los Angeles Board of Education, has appointed a committee to co-operate with the school management in determining the character of work to be given students in agricultural courses.

IRRIGATION AND COTTON CULTURE.

BY W. S. CHILDS.

While inspecting the cotton fields of the Salt River Valley last summer and fall the writer noticed that the damage caused by "black arm," bacterium malvacearum, was almost negligible in the fields that had been properly irrigated, but very serious in the fields that had been overirrigated. Much good has been accomplished in the treatment of the cottonseed with bichloride of mercury and weak solutions of sulfuric acid, but nothing can replace proper irrigation as a method of combatting cotton diseases and securing maximum yields.

It should be remembered that the cotton plant, with few exceptions, is one of the most drought-resistant of our cultivated plants and that excessive moisture places it under unnatural and abnormal conditions. Excessive moisture causes the plant to drop its fruit and put on luxuriant vegetative growth which has lost its resistance to diseases and its habit of bearing fruit, while the normal plant retains the bolls and squares already grown, puts on new squares and resists diseases.

But owing to the variations in soils, the climatic conditions and the height of the water table, the number of irrigations will vary considerably and the only guide that can be used is the condition and the appearance of the plants themselves. Because a plant wilts a little in the heat of the day is no sign that it needs water, but rather that the water tubes supplying the leaves cannot bring the water up as fast as it evaporates. If the leaves remain wilted in the cool of the evening and in the morning the plant undoubtedly needs water. After the plants start blooming one can readily tell when to irrigate by looking down the cotton rows, remembering that the blossoms should be just below the tops of the plants. As the blossoms begin to creep over the tops, water should be applied. If too much water has been applied, only leaves and very few blossoms will be discernible and if not enough water has been used only flowers will be discernible, and the row will have a flower garden effect.

In very productive soils a complete irrigation, practically flooding the field, supplies too much water and causes excessive vegetative growth. This can be avoided by running the water down every other row, thereby applying only one-half the amount of water that would be given if every row was irrigated.

If a very heavy irrigation is applied after the plants have been checked for a long time to cause fruiting, the result will be a heavy drop of squares and small bolls. To overcome this, the water should be applied in smaller amounts more frequently, or applied to every other row, alternating the rows with each irrigation.

On light soils there is a tendency to underirrigate rather than overirrigate and therefore the plants must be carefully watched and water applied more frequently than on heavy soils.

Overirrigation is frequently practiced by planters who try to make their late cotton catch up with the earlier plantings, with the result of either very low yield or no yield.

What the planter should strive for is a uniform growth throughout the fruiting season. A very wet soil alternating with a a very dry soil will not only cause the plant to shed its fruit, but will weaken the fiber, making a low-grade fiber. Therefore, in order to combat the dreaded "black arm" disease and secure a maximum yield of the best fiber, the farmer must be careful not to overirrigate, but supply just enough water to secure a uniform growth throughout the fruiting season.

WINDBREAKS AN ASSET.

Windbreaks are in many ways a farm asset. They tend to prevent the soil from drying out quickly and they protect grain and orchards from injury by the wind. A belt of trees near the farm buildings protects them from extremes of weather. Trees make the farm a pleasanter place in which to live. The windbreak may be also a source of wood supply for fuel or for sale.

ADDITIONAL BANS TO BE DISCUSSED.

A ban upon the importation of citrus fruits from Australia, Tasmania, and New Zealand, in an effort to prevent the introduction of the citrus canker into the United States, will be considered at a public hearing to be held at Washington by the Federal Horticultural Board, United States Department of Agriculture, July 19, 1921, at 10 a.m. Any person interested in the proposed quarantine may appear and be heard either in person or by attorney.

The proposed step is the latest of a series of similar safeguards now in force for the protection of the citrus groves in this country. The disease, which is a dangerous one, is not widely prevalent or distributed in this country. Its presence in other countries, however, particularly many parts of eastern and southeastern Asia, has resulted in quarantine against citrus fruits from these infested parts.

With the addition of Australia, Tasmania and New Zealand, the quarantine would be complete against India, Siam, Indo-China, China, the Malayan Archipelago, the Philippines, Oceania, Japan, Formosa and the other islands adjacent to Japan, and the Union of South Africa. All citrus fruits from these places are excluded except oranges of the Mandarin class, which are entered under permit.

TIMING A MAGNETO IS NOT DIFFICULT.

BY E. J. STIRNIMAN.

A magneto may give sufficient spark to ignite the compressed explosive mixture in the cylinder, however, unless it is timed to the engine so as to produce this spark at the proper time and distribute it to the right cylinder, trouble will be experienced. The timing of a magneto to an engine is not difficult if the following steps are observed in the order given:

(1.) Observe rotating direction of magneto drive shaft.

(2.) Determine firing order of motor.

(3.) Find head end dead center compression stroke.

(4.) Retard magneto breaker box.

(5.) Turn magneto in direction of rotation to position breaker points start to open and connect magneto to drive shaft.

(6.) Observe distributor arm position and wire leads to spark plugs in rotation of firing order.

These steps are taken up in order, by number:

(1.) Turn the motor in its direction of rotation and observe if the magneto drive shaft turns "clock or counter clockwise." The magneto operates clockwise if it turns over to the right as observed from its driven end.

(2.) If the firing order is not given in the instruction book or stamped on the motor, it may be determined by the valve action or by the hissing noise of compressed vapor escaping through the open priming cups. To determine the firing order by opening the priming cups, turn the motor slowly observing the order, from either end cylinder, which the hissing takes place. This hissing occurs during the compression stroke and should not be mistaken for a somewhat similar noise sometimes obtained by the exhaust or intake strokes if the motor is turned rapidly. Small pieces of paper may be placed over the open priming cups which will be blown off by the escaping vapor of the compression stroke. This order will be that of the motor firing. This, however, is only possible when the priming cups are placed in the cylinder. The same result of testing can be secured by removing the spark plugs. If the firing order is to be determined by valve action it is necessary to follow in order the opening of either the exhaust or intake valves. The four-cylinder motor will have one of two possible firing orders, 1-2-4-3 or 1-3-4-2, depending on the cam shaft construction.

(3.) In order to secure the complete force of the expanding gas in the cylinder the maximum expansion or explosion force should be exerted just as the piston reaches the top of the compression stroke starting down or outward. If the engine flywheel is not marked indicating the centers "crank end or head end dead center," it will be necessary to locate these. This may be done by inserting a wire through a priming cup or spark plug hole, if located on the cylinder directly in front of the piston, approximate centers may be found in this way, but for more accurate results the following method is preferred:

Establish a reference point near the flywheel and set one piston in a known position in the cylinder on either an up or down stroke, and mark the flywheel with reference to the point selected. Turn the engine to the opposite crank throw and bring the piston in the same position as before and mark flywheel from reference point. We now have two marks on the flywheel which when bisected and turned to coincide with the reference point will place the engine on one dead center. The other point for dead center will be half way around the flywheel, providing the crank shaft is not offset. Having found the centers, turn the motor so cylinder No. 1 is on head end dead center compression stroke. At this position both the intake and exhaust valve should be closed.

(4.) To turn the breaker box (unless it is the set type) in the retard position, revolve it in the direction of the magneto drive shaft rotation. This provides for the obtaining of sufficient spark advance while operating under higher speeds, which is accomplished by turning the breaker box in the opposite direction or against the magneto drive rotation.

(5.) The spark, from the high tension leads or wires which are connected to the spark plugs, is produced just as the breaker points open. In order to deliver the spark to the cylinder when the piston is on head end dead center compression stroke, the magneto must be turned so the breaker points just start to open. The piston being in the position as indicated above, connect the magneto to its drive and securely fasten to base.

(6.) The last operation is to observe the lead or pole which the distributor is feeding and connect it to the spark plug in the cylinder which was set at head end dead center compression stroke. The remaining leads should then be connected in rotation of motor firing order to the spark plugs. The distributor revolves in the opposite direction of the magneto drive shaft and if wired around the wrong direction, only two cylinders of a four-cylinder motor will fire, Nos. 1 and 4. The two remaining cylinders, 2 and 3, receive their spark 180 deg. late or at the end of the exhaust stroke and will not fire. If the above error is made, it is not necessary to retime the motor with the exception of interchanging wires on cylinders 2 and 3.

VALUATION OF CROPS, LOS ANGELES COUNTY.

No corn is raised in Los Angeles county, which was last year first among all counties in value of crops produced. That is, no corn is raised to be sold as grain. Some farmers raise Indian corn for silage and to feed to hogs, and some raise sweet corn, sold green, but, the agricultural department of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce says, looking for a commercial field of Indian corn in the county is as promising a field of endeavor as looking for avocados in Maine.

The total value of all crops in the county, the report of this department says, was $53,758,004. Fruit and nuts gathered during the year brought $32,031,658; truck crops, $10,061,096, and field crops, $11,665,250. The value of the "gold of the orchard," citrus fruits, totalled $21,850,000 or more than the production of real gold, in the entire State.

The acreage in the various crops is given as follows: Apples, 1347 acres; apricots, 5073 acres; peaches, 6066 acres; pears, 1501 acres; prunes, 268 acres; plums, 492 acres; figs, 84 acres; lemons, 10,679 acres; oranges, 37,618 acres; grapefruit, 340 acres; grapes, 3417 acres; almonds, 1526 acres; walnuts, 24,124 acres; avocados, 500 acres. Total acreage in fruit and nuts, 95,811.

Field crop acreage: Corn silage, 8000 acres; oat hay, 12,000 acres; barley hay, 35,000 acres; oats, 300 acres; barley for grain, 6000 acres; beans, 30,000 acres; potatoes, 13,000 acres; alfalfa, 15,000 acres; sugar beets, 15,000 acres; tomatoes, 3000 acres; lettuce, 5500 acres; spinach, 400 acres; cabbage, 6000 acres; cauliflower, 4500 acres; sweet potatoes, 2000 acres; strawberries, 1700 acres; other berries, 600 acres; cantaloupes, 2400 acres; watermelons, 4000 acres; celery, 950 acres; miscellaneous truck crops, 4000 acres.

HOME EVAPORATORS TO BE DEMONSTRATED.

Farm Adviser Hodgson announces that the schedule for the Los Angeles county home evaporator demonstrations to be conducted by Miss Lillian D. Clark of the State College of Agriculture, has been arranged as follows:

Monday, July 18, all-day demonstration at Monrovia, meeting at Duarte school, Buena Vista Road, 10 a.m.; Monday, July 18, 8 p.m., La Verne, Bonita High School; Tuesday, July 19, 2 p.m., Whittier; Wednesday, July 20, 2 p.m., Alhambra; Thursday, July 21, 2 p.m., Lankershim; Thursday, July 21, 8 p.m., Mission Acres, Mission Acres Improvement Hall; Friday, July 22, 8:30 p.m., Tierra Bonita; Monday, July 25, Burbank; Tuesday, July 26, Claremont.

At these demonstrations, it is announced, a cheap, but thoroughly satisfactory home evaporator will be shown and explained.

DUSTING DEMONSTRATIONS.

The Los Angeles county Agricultural Extension Service has made arrangements for a series of dusting demonstrations for the control of insect pests on truck crops beginning July 25. The most effective methods of controlling these different pests will be shown by Roy Campbell, government entomologist at Alhambra. Cucumber beetles, squash bugs and aphis yearly cause considerable damage to truck crops in Los Angeles county and it is the purpose of these meetings to show the most improved methods for the control of these pests. Demonstrations will be held at Long Beach, Norwalk, Downey, Lomita Mission Acres and Zelzah, and possibly other places.

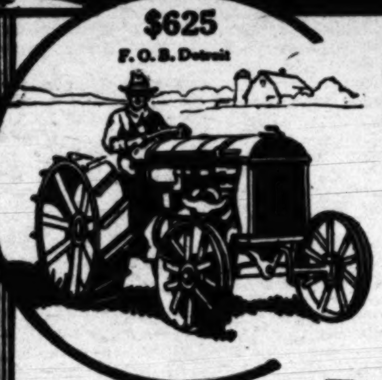
TRACTOR



"Yes I've more Time for Myself Since I Got a Fordson"

The Fordson Tractor is taking much of the drudgery out of farm life; it is solving the labor problem; it is reducing the cost of preparing land by almost one half of what it was with horses; and it is saving one third to one half of the farmer's time; and making farm life more attractive.

The Fordson will run your threshing machine—and at the most opportune time for you. It will operate the milking machines, saw your wood, fill your silo, pump the water, and take care of every kind of belt work—

And don't forget—it will plow six to eight acres in a ten hour day, handling two plows with ease.

Thus the Fordson is the ideal year-round tractor. It will pay for its fall and winter keep in many ways.

There's a big story to tell you about the Fordson—and a true one—come in and get the facts. Or, if you prefer, telephone or drop us a card and we will bring them to you.

Grafting of Native Walnuts Easy for Arizonan.

BY W. S. CHILDS, University of Arizona.

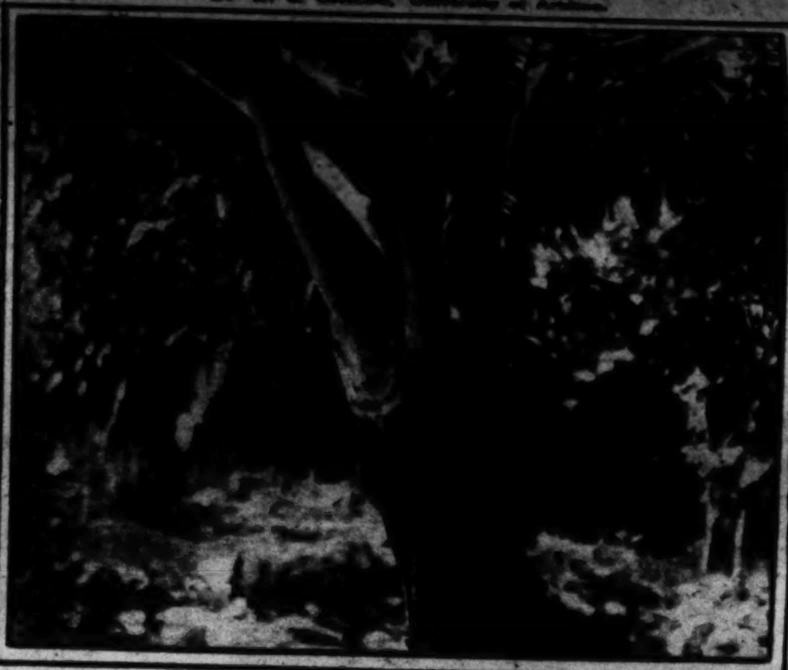
UPON the hills and in the canyons and dry washes near Los Angeles, and extending over Southern California, there are growing today thousands of native walnut trees whose fruit now is practically worthless, but which can be turned into a commercial product to gladden the hearts of many by the simple process of grafting. The native walnut has always been a hard tree to graft, and the French, recognizing this characteristic, have named the walnut "L'enfant terrible." The terrible infant, however, has now been made manageable by the careful work of C. R. Biederman, who gives to the world "the Biederman Bark Graft."

Mr. Biederman is an entomologist by profession and the founder of the first commercial orchard of French walnuts on the Rogue River, Oregon. He has always been interested in walnuts. In Carr Canyon, in the Huachuca Mountains, Hereford, Ariz., Mr. Biederman has successfully grafted over a thousand native walnut trees to commercial varieties, averaging a growth of 97 per cent of all scions inserted.

Mr. Biederman began his first experiments in 1908, grafting for three years according to methods recommended by other walnut growers, but he met with little success. He also corresponded with leading walnut growers of this country and Europe and gathered and read all available literature, but their methods were far from successful. He then began a careful study of walnut grafting, growing tissue, cambium layers, etc., and finally evolved a method which is 97 per cent successful and which he says he gives to science as his contribution to the welfare of humanity.

His success lies in exposing large surfaces of cambium on the cion to large surfaces of cambium on the stock to insure contact and growth at many points. His scion is hollowed out so as to fit snugly the stock, which keeps the scion from swelling out and pushing the cambium layers apart during growth. He selects his scion wood with great care, keeps his grafting tools sharp, does not allow his fingers to come in contact with the cambium surfaces on the scion, and takes great care not to allow the stock to dry out.

The tree to be grafted is cut off at right angles at a convenient height from the ground and the surface is smoothed over so the wax will adhere, care being used not to split the stock. The stock is waxed immediately after smoothing to within one-half inch of the bark. If the tree is old and the bark rough, the outer surfaces of the bark are pared off about three inches below the cut to make the bark more pliable and facilitate the insertion of the scion, but care must be taken not to injure the live bark while the old, rough bark is being pared.



A five-year-old walnut graft on a native walnut in Mr. Biederman's interesting canyon orchard.

Beginning at the top of the stock, a vertical cut is made down the bark for about two inches where the scion is to be inserted.

A scion from three to four inches in length, with two or more buds, is cut with a small amount of wood above the upper bud and about two inches of wood below the lower bud, and the upper end is waxed immediately to keep from drying out, the wax extending over the edges. On the side of the scion, about one-fourth inch below and opposite the lower bud, a diagonal, slanting cut is made, extending to the end of the scion and leaving a long scarf with a pronounced curvature above, and gradually tapering to a blunt tip at the end of the scion. The inside of this scarf is now hollowed out and made concave throughout its entire length, so the cion will fit the stock snugly to prevent pushing apart and separating the cambium layers when growth begins.

The scion is now turned over and the thin outer bark is shaved off on each side of the scarf down to the green cambium, leaving along the center a strip of untouched bark that will lie just beneath the slit in the stock. The lower point of the scion is now trimmed wedge-shaped to prevent the bark from being pushed back when the scion is inserted into place.

A small wedge or bark opener is now inserted in the cambium at the top of the stock on the scion. The wedge is then re-previously made in the stock and pushed down carefully almost the length of the scarf on the cion. The wedge is then removed and the scion pushed carefully into place.

On each side of the scion a small nail is driven near the top of the stock in order to draw the cambium layers closer together and prevent the scion from being moved. Nails may also be driven between the insertions of scions to prevent the bark from being loosened farther than the scion requires. In driving these nails a small hammer and small nails are used and care is exercised that the bark is not injured.

The union, shoulder above the stock, and all exposed surfaces are waxed over carefully.

From two to many scions are placed on the stock, depending upon the size of the tree.

After all scions are placed and waxed, the stock is wrapped with several rounds of stout cotton twine, beginning below and winding upward, and securely tied.

The string and stock are gone over carefully with wax and all crevices and cuts are covered.

To protect from wind, rain, sunshine, and from insects, a large paper bag is placed over the entire operation and securely tied.

Combination Farm Surest Producer of [illegible]

BY ROBERT T. [illegible]

Panoramic view of Winsor Ranch in Sweetwater Valley, near San Diego.

A COMBINATION farm—one that produces good live stock along with excellent fruit and grain crops—is the farm that makes the most direct appeal to the average man, and the farmer who has available land and follows such a system of farming will over a long term of years derive greater pleasure and profit than the farmer who follows a single cropping scheme. The single crop farmer may strike some very profitable years, but, on the other hand, there are sure to be some very lean years which will eat up the profits, while the farmer who has several departments to his farm, all somewhat dependent upon each other, generally manages to at least break even, for if one department shows a deficit, perhaps the others will more than offset it. Then, such a system of farming offers a broader agricultural education in that the farmer by such a plan has a chance to adapt himself to many practical phases of farm life, instead of restricting his knowledge to a single crop. Throughout the Mississippi Valley corn belt the combination farm is more in evidence than in any other section of the country, and the untold wealth that has come from this part of the country with its immense agricultural resources, certainly proves the sound logic of combination farming practice.

Many Southern California farms and ranches are now being operated on a mixed farming basis with wonderful results, and the owners of such farms are firm in their belief that with the addition of a live-stock department to the farm the soil fertility problem is solved. The Winsor Ranch of Bonita is one of those to follow out such a plan with cattle, hogs, fruit, grain and alfalfa. Robert Winsor, a Boston banker, selected this big 600-acre ranch in the Sweetwater Valley, ten miles southeast of San Diego, because of the possibilities of developing there a place particularly suitable for a combination farm. While a considerable portion of this ranch is of a mountainous nature, the fertile valleys offer splendid possibilities for the raising of pure-bred stock and bumper crops of alfalfa. About 200 acres are under cultivation, seventy-five being dry farmed, fifty acres being in alfalfa and thirty-five acres having been set out to lemons.

The pure-bred Duroc-Jersey hog plant covers twelve acres of ground, and is equipped with every modern convenience to handle the big herd of 400 head. All of the pens are partially shaded at one end by trees which adds greatly to the general appearance of the landscape and the comfort of the hogs. Each pen is equipped with automatic drinking founts and cement feeding floors, while the yards are cleaned regularly, the manure being used to fertilize the lemon grove and the field crops. The Winsor Ranch herd of Durocs has won many prizes in close competition at the big shows throughout the country, and Carl Woosley, who is in charge of the swine department, now has a choice lot of yearling sows and spring gilts from which to select this season's show herd. Among the herd boars in use in this herd are to be found Winsor's Giant Orion, Great Sensation 3rd, Winsor's Critic Sensation, a March yearling, and California Pathfinder, out of the good sow, Miss Pathfinder 12th, and sired by Premier Pathfinder. One of the splendid features of this hog plant is the convenient arrangement of the pens and their accessibility to the adjoining alfalfa pastures by means of runways, which materially assist in the management of so large a herd. Crops of milo and barley are raised to supplement the alfalfa and finish the pork.

Some of the Winsor Ranch Jerseys.

The Winsor's pure bred Durocs have oak-shaded yards for their comfort in the summer.

In the dairy department, which is in charge of Francis Brown, is found an excellent herd of Jerseys, fifty head of these being registered stock of well-known blood lines. The milk is bottled and sold as guaranteed milk to San Diego hotels, restaurants and cafes. Recently eight head of pure-breds were purchased from the Ed Cary herd at Carlton, Or. Included in this lot are four females sired by Rosaires Olga Lad, and two by Poppy's St. Mawes. These are two Cary herd bulls which have become noted as gold medal bulls of the Jersey breed. Then there is a heifer by Susie's St. Mawes, and a promising bull calf sired by Rosaire's Olga Lad, which will be used as a future herd sire. The herd sire now being used is Beauty's White Sox, a two-year-old that was made reserve grand champion at Riverside last fall. Among the many fine cows in the herd are to be found the high-producing seven-year-old cow, St. Mawes Landseer 3rd, and the good four-year-old Mona's Eurybia, together with other high-producing females which are making excellent returns in the Winsor Ranch herd.

Morris Allen, the ranch manager, keeps records of each department of the business to know just what is being accomplished in each. Fertilizers are credited to the swine and cattle departments and charged to the fruit and crop departments.

"Before the lemons came into bearing," says Mr. Allen, "it seemed as though the citrus project was a losing proposition with the manures charged to it, but now that they are producing something, the results are different, and with the prices of lemons high and a prospective lower transportation rate, this department of the ranch will soon be in a position to care for itself financially. With other departments to draw from until crops can be produced and marketed, the argument is clinched in favor of the mixed farming plan, and what Winsor Ranch is doing in a convincing manner is being done on other farms and ranches with remarkable results."

THE END OF THE QUEST.

BY WILLIAM A. [illegible]

A DIM light sifted down through the thickly woven pine tops, like the mysterious emanation from cathedral windows, and rested softly on the face of the dying man.

One of the men arose from beside the figure stretched on his back on an old quilt, and beckoned the other two aside.

"What'll we do if he dies here?" he asked, anxiously.

The two men whom he addressed exchanged inquiring glances, but made no reply.

"It won't do to leave 'm here on the ground, unburied," went on the first. "He must be buried, of course."

"Why, of course not—of course it won't do to leave him here," agreed one of the other two. "He must be planted. But you go plantin' anyone in this State—in the State of Georgia—without a doctor's certificate an' see what'll happen."

"But, see here," objected the first speaker. "You forget that they will hold an inquest on this man and we'll all three be held as witnesses. That won't be the worst of it, though. We may be accused of his death."

"But they can't prove that we killed 'm; he died—or is dying—of some disease. And as fer bein' held as witnesses—well, come to think of it, we might all get a dose in the workhouse fer vagrancy," argued one of the others. "I don't want to be arrested fer vagrancy or anything else fer that matter," he went on. "Probably my character wouldn't stand probin'," he added grimly, turning away his head and gazing into space, as if he there saw the specter of what prompted his remark.

Something in the appearance of the figure on the quilt attracted the notice of the three men at this moment, and they hurried over to his side. The peace of death had spread over his face like a white mantle.

"He's dead!" exclaimed the first, he who had anxiously watched at the side of the dying man for days.

The question was again propounded by one of them, "What'll we do with him?"

"I have made up my mind in the last few minutes," answered the first speaker, "and I want you both to agree to it, for it is the only safe thing to do. And, then, besides—well, I may have another reason to advance, though not as cogent as that of personal safety. We have canvassed our chances of escaping serious trouble if we let the authorities into this. Our consciences need not bother us any, as we will not have to violate any moral law." Here the speaker paused for some minutes, as if he yet had some doubt as to what he was about to suggest.

"What was your idea, George, about what you'd do with him?" asked one of his listeners.

"We must do something pretty quick," urged the other, "before some one stumbles in here."

"I'm going to bury him in this lagoon or swamp here, just on the other side of us. Do you agree to it?" The other two nodded.

"I will see how deep it is first," said George, picking up a long, dry limb.

In a minute or so he returned. "It's all right," he said. Then he placed his hands under the dead man's neck and motioned to one of the others to grasp his legs. Together they lifted the corpse off the quilt; spread it out and laid the dead man on it again. Then the quilt was wrapped about him and tied in three places, the head, the waist and the feet. Then, to prevent the body from rising to the surface, several pieces of an old stove that had been left behind by members of a camp meeting were tied about his waist. Two of the men then carried the dead man through the dense bushes that fringed the lagoon, out to a fallen tree, and dropped the body into the stagnant waters.

The three men returned, silent, almost solemnly, to their lounging-place. Evidently they realized the seriousness of what they had done. George threw himself upon the ground and motioned to the others to sit down.

"No one has seen us here, as far as I know," said George, after a moment's silence, "but I think we had best leave here in the morning, not together, but separately. It may be safe enough to stay tonight, but no longer. I am going to tell you a story before we part. It will serve to while away the time between now and bedtime"—with a smile—"and it will probably interest you.

"Twenty years ago I was city editor on a large daily in New York City. The family consisted of my father, my mother, myself and a sister; we were the only children. We had a fine home; in fact, were moderately rich—were as happy, perhaps, as a family could be. My father occasionally was away from home for a few days, but as he always explained his absences satisfactorily to us it caused no friction.

"On one occasion my father had been gone for two days. I had been detained at my office late and did not get home until near 10 o'clock. I had just taken off my hat when the door bell rang. I answered the ring. A man stood on the dimly-lighted porch. He asked if my mother was in. I said she was and asked him to come in. He said he had a parcel for my mother which he had been instructed to deliver to her personally. I called my mother, and the man handed her the letter, for that was what it was, not a package. But it was a very peculiar appearing letter, I noticed from where I stood; for I did not follow her to the door after going back to the end of the hall to notify her.

"I saw her receive the letter and then close the door. Then she turned about, holding the envelope in both hands, with her head lowered, as if trying to decipher an address on it. I saw her squeeze the letter between her hands as if endeavoring to ascertain its contents. As she did this, there was a horrible explosion and my mother fell to the floor dead. She had been killed by an infernal machine.

"My sister died in about a week from this time from the shock produced by her mother's horrible death. My father was terribly affected by the tragedy, too. But this didn't prevent him from marrying about two months after my mother's death.

"The object of the act puzzled my sister, my father and myself, profoundly, and we could give the police, Coroner and District Attorney no hint of why it was done. In fact, we hadn't even a theory to advance, except that it was a mistake on the part of the murderer; he had probably intended the bomb for another. This theory seemed to have been gradually accepted by the authorities, and all active effort at a solution of the mystery subsided, except on the part of myself.

"I had obtained a view of one feature of the man which I have never forgotten—his eyes. They at once drew my attention from every other part of his form; I could not to this day or immediately after he fled, describe anything else about him. This information I imparted to the detectives and the District Attorney. It seemed, though, to have been too slight a clew to aid them. But always those wild and sinister black eyes kept looking past me into the hall. Why I did not at once pursue the scoundrel I do not know to this day, except that thought and movement were paralyzed by the awful and unexpected tragedy that had just been enacted before me. Something urged me to look for that man; there could not be two men in the world with those eyes.

"My life was wrecked and I cared for nothing but to find this monster. A terrible hatred took possession of my soul; it blinded me to every other desire; I lost all interest in everything but those eyes—those terrible eyes. I have often wondered since if I was not in a way insane. I gave up my position, drew my savings from the bank and left home. I walked the streets of New York for two years, living in low tenements, visiting every saloon I could locate, and made the acquaintance of every police character I heard or read of. But I never saw or heard of the man with the terrible eyes. Then I left New York and went to Chicago. Here I searched and wandered and talked with a hundred policemen and a hundred characters of the underworld. By this time my money was beginning to run out; I had wasted so much of it, in fact, that I was obliged to seek ordinary employment.

"One day a Chicago paper contained an account of a bank robbery in Cincinnati. The bandits were unmasked, and one of the tellers declared that one of the robbers had such remarkable eyes that he would at once recognize him at any time. I at once concluded that this might be the murderer of my mother. I bought a ticket for Cincinnati, and spent a month there, and in other cities in Ohio, in search of the man, but failed to catch sight of him or anyone that resembled him.

"I drifted to Los Angeles and then to San Francisco. In these two cities I spent two years. I had used up all my money in these twelve years of wanderings, and had become a mere tramp, sleeping in vile lodging-houses, in rooms without light and scarcely big enough to turn around in, and [illegible] I began to like the carefree life I had lived so long. Perhaps it would be more correct to say that I had lost all interest in society and in a desire to labor and had become a good-for-nothing.

"I determined to make my way to the South, where the weather was better suited to my mode of living. For what had at first, and for years after I first started out, been a quest, had now degenerated into a mere desire to live a free and idle life; the memory of the horrible death of my mother, while it had not been forgotten, had been softened, and time had almost erased the vision of the man with the terrible eyes.

"I joined several groups of hobos in the last five years, and shared their degradations and their hardships—and, of course, whatever of fascination and pleasure there is in such a life.

"I have now been with you, you know, for about two months. I—"

"What'll you do now?" interrupted one of his listeners.

"Beat my way back to New York City and take possession of my property," answered George.

"But your father and his wife?" questioned the comrade of the road again.

"She deserted my father shortly after he married her and died afterward."

"But how did you know this?" he was asked again.

"From my father."

"From your father!"

"Yes. The desire for vengeance drove me to this life, and the desire to escape it led him to the same. The man with the terrible eyes, I have learned, was merely an instrument. The man we buried in the swamp just now was my father."

What Our Presidents Saved.

If Hayes, as is said, saved $44,000 a year, he had at the end of his four years a tidy little sum of $176,000 as a souvenir of his Chief Magistracy of the nation. And if he invested this at 5 per cent, he enjoyed for the balance of his days from his Presidential savings an income of $8800 per annum.

Garfield was in office only five months before he died, but Arthur, who succeeded him for three and a half years, is believed to have saved over $50,000 in that time.

Cleveland went into the White House a poor man; he retired to private life with a competence. A large part of this estate [illegible] through wise investment on the [illegible] of his friend, the financier, E. C. Benedict, but the initial capital came from his savings from the Presidential salary.

Benjamin Harrison is believed to have spent only about half of his salary.

McKinley went to Washington in debt. During his five and a half years as President he managed to pay off his debts, and on his death, Mrs. McKinley was found to be adequately provided for.

Roosevelt saved money in the Presidency. He received, during his lifetime, in legacies from his father and other relatives sums that aggregated between $175,000 and $200,000. His estate, on his death, amounted to very nearly a million dollars. While in his later years he received a handsome income from his writings, his savings were partially represented by accumulations laid aside during his seven years in the White House.

Taft was in debt when he became President. After four years he was out of debt and had a little money laid by.

What was the Presidency worth in cash to Woodrow Wilson? We know that previously to 1912 he had practically nothing, and that early in 1921 he bought a residence in the city of Washington and paid for it $150,000, all in cash or its equivalent. At the same time he is planning to spend a similar amount on a country home, and is so independent that he can casually refuse an offer of $250,000 for a book on the Peace Conference. And this is the man who twenty years before had applied to the Carnegie Fund for a pension.

It is true that Mrs. Wilson has a small fortune, but no such amount as is indicated here.

It is altogether likely that Mr. Wilson saved $50,000 a year, at least, during each of his eight years in high office. This $400,000, added to the income from his books, an income greatly accelerated, due to the prestige of his station, has made him independent.

Judging by the new President's early months in office it is hard to see how he can fail to retain something of a nest-egg out of that monthly check of $6250.—[Richard Barry in Leslie's.

THE SUN GAZER.

gerous claws. He felt them sink into his injured leg, but that was already anguishing so vehemently that a little more or less did not matter. In a few moments he had his captive bundled up with helplessness, and was dragging it to a sturdy bush near the middle of the terrace. Here without much further trouble, he wrapped one of its legs with the strip of flannel from his shirt, twisted on a hand-length of wire, and then tethered it safely with a couple of yards of his double and twisted cord.

Just as he had accomplished this to his satisfaction, and was about to undo the imprisoning shirt, it flashed across his mind that it was lucky the old eagles had not been on hand to interfere. He glanced upward, and saw a dark form dropping like a thunderbolt out of the blue. He had just time to fling himself over on his back, lifting his arm to shield his face and his foot to receive the attack, when the hiss of that lightning descent filled his ears. Involuntarily he half-closed his eyes. But no shock came except a great buffet of air on his face. Not quite daring to grapple with that ready defense, the eagle had opened its wings when within a few feet of the ledge, and swerved upward again, where it hung hovering and screaming. Horner saw that it was the female, and shook his fist at her in defiance. Had it been his old acquaintance and challenger, the male, he felt sure that he would not have got off so easily.

Puzzled and alarmed, the mother now perched herself beside the other eaglet on the edge of the nest. Then, keeping a careful eye upon her, lest she should return to the attack, Horner dexterously unrolled the shirt and drew back just in time to avoid a vicious slash from the talons of his indignant prisoner. The latter, after some violent tugging and flopping at his tether and fierce biting at the wire, suddenly seemed to conclude that such futile efforts were undignified. He settled himself like a rock, and stared unwinkingly at his captor.

It was perhaps an hour after this, when the sun had grown hot, and Horner, having slaked his thirst at the spring in the rock, had tried rather ineffectually to satisfy his hunger on grass roots, that the male eagle reappeared, winging heavily from the farthest end of the lake. From his talons dangled a limp form, which Horner presently made out to be a duck.

"Good!" he muttered to himself. "I always did like fowl better'n fish."

When the eagle arrived he seemed to notice something different in the situation, for he wheeled slowly overhead for some minutes, uttering sharp yelps of interrogation. But the appeals of the youngster at last brought him down, and he delivered up the prize. The moment he was gone Horner crept up to where the youngster was already tearing the warm body to pieces. Angry and hungry, the bird made a show of fighting for his rights; but his late experience with his invincible conqueror had daunted him. Sullenly he hopped away, the full length of his tether; and Horner picked up the mangled victim. But his appetite was gone by this time. He was not equal to a diet of raw flesh. Tossing the prize back to its rightful owner, he withdrew painfully to grub for some more grass roots.

After this the eagle came regularly every three or four hours with food for the prisoner. Sometimes it was a fish—trout, or brown sucker or silvery chub; sometimes a duck or a grouse, sometimes a rabbit or a muskrat. Always it was the male, with the grim black streak across the side of his white face, who came. Always Horner made a point of taking the prize at once from the angry youngster, and then throwing it back to him, unable to stomach the idea of the raw flesh. At last, on the afternoon of the third day of his imprisonment, he suddenly found that it was not the raw flesh, but the grass roots, which he loathed. While examing a fine lake trout he remembered that he had read of raw fish being excellent food under the right conditions. This was surely one of those right conditions. Picking somewhat fastidiously, he nevertheless managed to make so good a meal off that big trout that there was little but head and tail to toss back to his captor.

"Never mind, pardner!" he said, seriously. "I'll divide fair nex' time. But you know you've been havin' more'n your share lately."

But the bird was so outraged that for a long time he would not look at these remains, and only consented to devour them, at last, when Horner was not looking.

After this Horner found it easy enough to partake of his prisoner's meals, whether they were of fish, flesh, or fowl; and with the ice-cold water from the little spring and an occasional mouthful of leaves or roots, he fared well enough to make progress toward recovery. The male eagle grew so accustomed to his presence that he would alight beside the prisoner and threaten Horner with that old, cold stare of challenge, and frequently Horner had to drive him off in order to save his share of the feast from the rapacity of the eaglet. But as for the female, she remained incurably suspicious and protesting. From the upper ledge, where she devoted her care to the other nestling, she would yelp down her threats and execrations; but she never ventured any nearer approach.

For a whole week the naked hours of day and dark had rolled over the peak before Horner began to think himself well enough to try the descent. His arm and shoulder were almost well, but his leg, in spite of ceaseless rubbing and applications of moist earth, remained practically helpless. He could not bear his weight on it for a second. His first attempt at lowering himself showed that he must not be in too great haste.

It was nearly a week more before he could feel assured, after experiments at scaling the steep above him, that he was fit to face the terrible steep below. Then he thought of the eaglet, his unwilling and outraged preserver! After a sharp struggle, of which both his arms and legs bore the marks for months, he caught the bird once more, and examined the injured wing. It was not broken; and he saw that its owner would be able to fly all right in time, perhaps as soon as his more fortunate brother in the nest above. Satisfied on this point, he loosed all the bonds, and jumped back to avoid the indomitable youngster's retort of beak and claws. Unamazed by his sudden freedom, the young eagle flopped angrily to the farther end of the ledge; and Horner having resumed his useful shirt, started to climb down the mountain, whose ascent he had so heedlessly adventured nearly two weeks before. As he lowered himself over the dizzy brink he glanced up, to see the male eagle circling slowly above him, gazing down at him with the old challenge in his unwinking golden eyes.

"I reckon you win!" said Horner, waving the imperturbable bird a grave salutation, "but you're a gentleman, an' I thank you for your kind hospitality."

It was still early morning when Horner started down the mountain. It was dusk when he reached the lake, and flung himself down, prostrated with fatigue and pain and strain of nerve, beside his canoe. From moment to moment, through spells of reeling faintness and spasmodic exhaustion, the silent gulfs of space had clutched at him, as if the powers of the solitude and the peak had but spared him so long to crush him inexorably in the end. At last, more through the sheer indomitableness of the human spirit than anything else, he had won. But never afterwards could he think of that awful descent without a sinking of the heart. For three days more he made his camp by the lake, recovering strength and nerve before resuming his journey down the wild river to the settlements. And many times a day his salutations would be waved upward to that great, snowy-headed, indifferent bird, wheeling in the far blue, or gazing at the sun from his high-set watch-tower of the nine.

III.

Two or three years later, it fell in Horner's way to visit a great city, many hundreds of miles from the gray peak of "Old Baldy." He was in charge of an exhibit of canoes, snowshoes and other typical products of his forest-loving countrymen. In his first morning of leisure, his feet turned almost instinctively to the wooded gardens, wherein the city kept strange captives, untamed exiles of the wilderness, irreconcilable aliens of fur and hide and feather, for the crowds to gape at through their iron bars.

It was the cages of the great cats to which Horner first found his way. Whether padding restlessly to and fro, or staring past him with far, enigmatic eyes, neither the tigers nor the lions excited his sympathy. He was impartially interested in them, as a child might be. They were too remote to touch him. The leopard he did not regard so impersonally. It aroused his antagonism at once by staring, not past or through him, but straight into his eyes with a sort of vigilant malevolence which trusted that its time might come. But the pacing gray wolf touched him with a kind of fellow feeling. He had no love for wolves; but this fellow, with his grim, sad, hating eyes, was in some sort, a kinsman though an enemy, and had [illegible] beautiful North. He would have trapped or shot the fierce marauder with unmingled satisfaction in the wilderness; but here he felt almost friendly to him.

From the wolf cage he wandered aimlessly past some grotesque, goatish-looking deer, which did not interest him, and came suddenly upon a paddock containing a bull moose, two cows and a yearling calf. The calf looked ungainly and quite content with his surroundings. The cows were faded and moth-eaten, but well fed. He had no concern for them at all. But the bull, a splendid, black-shouldered, heavy muffled fellow, with the new antlers just beginning to knob out from his massive forehead, appealed to him strongly. The splendid, sullen-looking beast stood among his family, but he towered over and seemed unconscious of them. His long, sensitive muzzle was held high to catch a breeze which drew coolly down from the north, and his half-shut eyes, in Horner's fancy, saw not the wires of his fence, but the cool, black-green fir thickets of the North, the gray rampikes of the windy barrens, the broad lily leaves afloat in the sheltered cove, the wide, low-shored lake waters gleaming rose-red in the sunset.

"It's a darn shame," growled Horner, "to keep a critter like that shut up in a 7-by-9 chicken pen!" And he moved on, feeling as if he were himself a prisoner, and suddenly homesick for a smell of the spruce woods.

It was in this mood that he came upon the great, dome-roofed cage containing the hawks and eagles. It was a disheveled, dirty place, with a few uncanny-looking dead trees stuck up in it to persuade the prisoners that they were free. Horner gave a hasty glance and then hurried past, enraged at the sight of these stronged-winged adventurers of the sky doomed to so tame a monotony of days. But just as he got abreast of the farther extremity of the cage, he stopped, with a queer little tug at his heart strings. He had caught sight of a great, white-headed eagle, sitting erect and still on a dead limb close to the bars, and gazing through them steadily, not at him, but straight into the eye of the sun.

"Shucks! It ain't possible! There's millions o' bald eagles in the world!" muttered Horner, discontentedly.

It was the right side of the bird's head that was turned toward him and that, of course, was snowy white. Equally, of course, it was, as Horner told himself, the height of absurdity to think that this grave, immobile prisoner gazing out through the bars at the sun, could be his old friend of the naked peak. Nevertheless, something within his heart insisted it was so. If only the bird would turn his head! At last Horner put two fingers between his lips and blew a whistle so piercing that everyone stared rebukingly and a policeman came strolling along casually to see if anyone had signaled for help. But Horner was all unconscious of the interest which he had excited. In response to his shrill summons the eagle had slowly, very deliberately, turned his head, and looked him steadily in the eyes. Yes, there was the strange black bar above the right eye; and there, unbroken by defeat and captivity, was the old look of imperturbable challenge!

Horner could almost have cried, from pity and homesick sympathy. Those long days on the peak, fierce with pain, blinding bright with sun, windswept and solitary, through which this great, still bird had kept him alive, seemed to rush over his spirit altogether.

"Gee, old pardner!" he murmured, leaning as far over the railing as he could, "but ain't you got the grit? I'd like to know who it was served this trick on you. But don't fret. I'll git you out o' this ef it takes a year's arnin's to do it! You wait an' see!"

And with his jaws set resolutely he turned and strode from the gardens. That bird should not stay in there another night if he could help it.

Horner's will was set, but he did not understand the difficulties he had to face.

At first he was confronted, as by a stone wall, by the simple and unanswerable fact that the bird was not for sale, at any price. And he went to bed that night raging with disappointed and baffled purpose. But in the course of his efforts and angry protestations he let out a portion of his story, and this, as a matter of interest, was carried to the president of the society who controlled the gardens.

To this man, who was a true naturalist and not a mere dry-as-dust catalogue of bones and teeth, the story made a strong appeal; and before Horner had quite made up his mind whether to get out a writ of habeas corpus for his imprisoned friend or commit a burglary on the cage, there came a note inviting him to an interview at the president's office. The result of this interview [illegible] captive by another specimen of his kind; and he carried in his pocket an order for immediate delivery of the eagle into his eager hands.

To the practical backwoodsman there was now no fuss or ceremony to be gone through. He admired the expeditious fashion in which the keeper of the bird house handled his dangerous charge, coming out of the brief tussle without a scratch. Trussed up as ignominiously as a turkey—proud head hooded, savage talons muffled, and skying wings bound fast—the splendid bird was given up to his rescuer, who rolled him in a blanket without regard to his dignity, and carried him off under his arms, like a bundle of old clothes.

Beyond the outskirts of the city Horner had observed a high, rocky, desolate hill, which seemed suited to his purpose. He took a street car and traveled for an hour with the bundle on his knees. Little his fellow passengers guessed of the wealth of romance, loyalty, freedom and spacious memory hidden in that common-looking bundle on the knees of the gaunt-faced, gray-eyed man. At the foot of the hill, at a space of bare and ragged common, Horner got off. By rough paths, frequented by goats, he made his way up the rocky slope, through bare ravines and over broken ridges, and came at last to a steep rock in a solitude, whence only far-off roofs could be seen, and masts and bridges, and the sharp gleam of the sea in the distance.

This place satisfied him. On the highest point of the rock he carefully unfastened the bonds of his prisoner, loosed him, and jumped back with respect and discretion. The great bird sat up very straight, half raised and lowered his wings as if to regain his poise, looked Horner dauntlessly in the eye, then stared slowly about him and above, as if to make sure that there were really no bars for him to beat his wings against. For perhaps a full minute he sat there. Then, having betrayed no unkindly haste, he spread his wings to their full and splendid width and launched himself from the brink. For a few seconds he flapped heavily, as if his wings had grown unused to their function. Then he got his rhythm and swung into a wide, mounting spiral, which Horner watched with sympathetic joy. At last, when he was but a wheeling speck in the pale blue dome, he suddenly turned, and sailed off straight toward the northeast, with a speed which carried him out of sight in a moment.

Horner drew a long breath, half wistfully, half glad.

"Them golden eyes of yourn kin see a thunderin' long ways off, pardner," he muttered, "but I reckon even you can't make out the top of 'Old Baldy' at this distance. It's the eyes o' your heart ye must have seen it with, to make for it so straight!"

When Weary of the Jostling Crowd.

When weary of the jostling crowd,
And its confusing rush and roar,
Oh, Wanderer, with spirit bowed,
When darkness seeks the lonely shore,

Go, watch the great birds, flying low,
Above their shadows, in the sea,
And clouds, that drift, serene and slow,
Forever onward, silently.

Then, know how boundless is the Plan,
In which each creature has a part,
And find, again, the haunts of man,
With strength renewed, within your heart.

The Second Battle.

"I DRINK when I have occasion, and sometimes when I have no occasion," said old Don Quixote de la Mancha once upon a time—probably after he had come out of his historic encounter with the windmill.

Anyway, as the fellow said, there are still a great many people that way, the prohibition laws to the contrary notwithstanding. They say that the "home brew" industry was never so thriving as now. And that there is nothing that is so little trouble as for a man to "wet his thirst" any time he feels like doing so.

If you will look back over history you will find that one of the greatest battles ever waged was the battle to make America dry. And it is a battle that was won at last—at least so far as succeeding in making the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors unlawful.

Booze is at the present time as unlawful as murder in these United States.

And yet there is no end of booze. It is about as plentiful now as it ever was, or more so. In the homes of the rich and the well-to-do in this country the proverbial cocktail is as much in evidence as it ever was. Those whom we call "the best Americans" break the dry law without the slightest compunctions of conscience. And it is the most difficult thing in the world to enforce a law that is held in contempt.

The second great battle of our friends, the prohibitionists, is to make stick the laws they have won, as the saying is. And it is a battle compared with which the first battle must be reckoned as a mere skirmish.

Aristomachus.

THE way that the talk fell upon old Aristomachus in the green Verdugo Hills, the other night, came about logically enough.

It was June-time, and the bees were swarming. Thousands upon thousands of them were in flight. Slender, golden queen bees had deserted hives that had become overcrowded, owing to the birth rate. These queens found their sway disputed by other queens. And so they had fared forth to make new kingdoms of their own. And their loyal subjects had fared with them.

We awoke one morning, hearing a great clamor of bees at the outside of our little house on the sunny slope of the hill, and we were amazed at the tremendous excitement that was going on. After all, you see, we are still a very ignorant person, having had the misfortune to have been town-bred and town-born.

We are not yet long enough emancipated to have acquired that full, wide knowledge of the world that makes it so beautiful to those who have been educated in the School of God.

Well, sir, we ran down to the neighbors in a state of wild excitement. By gollies, we certainly were in a turbulent state of mind. And we told the neighbors to come up to our little house on the slope of the hill. All the bees in the world were there, we told the neighbors. And we felt scared to think what they might do to us. Bees had once defeated a British army by stinging them all up just before a battle, we told the neighbors. And we quoted the old song to them, which said:

> "There was a man who loved the bees;
>   He always was their friend;
> He used to sit upon their hives,
>   But they stung him in the end."

And all that the neighbors did then was to laugh and to say, "Well, we'll be up there after a bit, and we will take care of the trouble."

And so they did come up, and one of the neighbors said, "By gollies, this is just what I have been looking for. I want a few more bees," he said, "and here they are just waiting for me to corral them and take them home."

And so this fellow took his hat off and went shooing gently around and caught the queen bee and put her royal highness in his hat, and all her loyal subjects jumped into the hat after her, and the man covered them all up with his handkerchief and took them home with him to a nice new hive that he had made.

And there they all are now, as happy as you please, and working to beat the band from sunup till sundown, every day. And pretty soon that fellow will have big slabs of honey to sell and to share around among the neighbors.

And so that's how the talk fell upon old Aristomachus. And it was the man who used to be a statistician that told us about him.

Three thousand years ago, said the man who used to be a statistician, old Aristomachus, in Greece, found out nearly everything we know now about bees—about their habits, their wonderful form of government, and even did he discover the solution of the many mysteries concerning them.

Aristomachus spent sixty years of his life wholly upon the study of bees. For sixty years he did nothing else, said the man who used to be a statistician.

Well, sir, it was a wonderful thing to think of—that a man should spend sixty long years at the study of bees or at any other one thing. Sixty long years, more than two-thirds of the ordinary lifetime, studying bees.

Again and again was the tobacco can passed around that night, and again and again was the room of the house where we were sitting filled with blue haze before we got through with the wonder of thinking and talking of old Aristomachus, dead in Greece these 3000 years.

Who were the bankers of Greece 3000 years ago, who were the minters of money, who were the fops and dandies, the office holders, the bridge builders, the engineers, the generals, we do not know. And no man knows.

But here were we, in the green Verdugo Hills, far from Greece and far from its ancient times, talking of Aristomachus, who spent sixty years 3000 years ago studying bees. Old Aristomachus, so well remembered still.

"The world remembers only that which is worth remembering," said the man who used to be a statistician, as we knocked the ashes from our pipes, and each man wended his way homeward under the glory of the serene and eternal stars.

Song.

When I am dead, my dearest,
* Sing no sad songs for me;*
Plant thou no roses at my head,
* Nor shady cypress tree.*
Be the green grass above me
* With showers and dewdrops wet;*
And if thou wilt, remember,
* And if thou wilt, forget.*

I shall not see the shadows,
* I shall not feel the rain;*
I shall not hear the nightingale
* Sing on, as if in pain.*
And dreaming through the twilight
* That doth not rise nor set;*
Haply I may remember,
* And haply may forget.*

Live Oak Springs.

ONE evening, there a while back, when we told the great tin god, "Duty," to go chase itself, as the saying is, and were trapesing on a high road in the north where we were going to have a talk with the waterfalls, we put up, as lodger for the night, at a little wayside caravansary that goes by the name of "Live Oak Springs."

For miles and miles along that road we longed to "meet up with" Live Oak Springs. We had been reading sign after sign on trees telling us we could have raspberries and cream, and milk and honey, and apple pie and doughnuts, too, when we reached that place. And it seemed that we would never reach it. But, we came to it at last.

And it was all true. There was a mountain towering above the place that we called Olympus, and we challenged its nine gods to come down and compare their nectar with ours.

And we slept out on the porch on a couch and heard the crickets singing in the dark. And a kind old dog would come in the night to rub his nose against our hand to assure us that we were as safe there as though we slept in the hollow of God's hand.

In the morning there was the clamor of children, and one wee, sleepy laddie who came late and gave us the greetings of the day—a wee, sleepy laddie with hair like spun gold and eyes as blue as the sky above him.

And now that we are back again, and the voices of the waterfalls are far away, and the great tin god "Duty" has its foot again upon our devoted neck, we often think of Live Oak Springs.

And, most of all, we think of the wee sleepy laddie with the spun gold in his hair, and the blue of his eyes, and the greetings of the day that he gave us from his lisping lips.

Sun and Shadow.

LIFE is beautiful and should be lived in beauty. It has, and must have its shadows, but there is a beauty in the shadow as well as in the glint and glimmer of the sun.

In grief and trouble, and even in disaster, we can make life beautiful—beautiful with courage, with resignation and a sublime faith in the wisdom of that Creator "who doeth all things for the best."

Sometimes there are sorrows that are good for us, because they clear our hearts of selfishness and teach us to sympathize with our fellow human beings. Grief has made many a heart gentle that was not so before. We must take the joy and the sorrow together, permitting neither the one nor the other to make us forget life's real reason for existence.

A Page Conducted by John Steven McGroarty

Put Them in Jail.

ONCE in a while we have a seance, as the saying is, in the Captain's house in the Verdugo Hills. And then the talk invariably turns on war.

You see, the Captain's folks have had a lot to do with wars. Not that they were or are quarrelsome folk. But they are an American breed and have had to go out and fight, now and then.

The Captain's folks were in our wars before he was born—at Lexington, Trenton and Monmouth, and at sea with John Paul Jones. They were with Hickory Jackson at New Orleans. And the Captain, himself, was an officer in the greatest army that ever fought—the army that put down Robert E. Lee and Stonewall Jackson. And, by ginger, it took some army, as the saying is, to do that.

And the Captain had sons and grandsons in the last war. And his folks will be in the wars that are to come, if any should come, which God forbid.

And we were talking a few nights ago, in the Captain's house, about what we would do if we were to have a war with some foreign nation now. The man who has the phonograph was saying that we ought to have a whale of a navy to keep the enemy off.

"No," said the Captain, "what we need is a nation of young fellows trained to fight. They can be trained on their spare time. Grow them from Boy Scouts right up. And then if an enemy force lands on us, why, we would go right out and arrest it and put every dodgasted one of them in jail; that's what we'd do."

By gollies, you would think that this is a funny thing for a sane man to say. But, the more you think it over, the more you know it is a great idea.

Arrest them and put them in jail, just as the Captain says.

Break Away, Brother.

WE HAVE received a letter from a man in Chicago. And he must be a very good man, too, because he inclosed $5 in his letter which he asked us to turn over to Mrs. J. T. Anderson to help her get more poor little town kids out to the Verdugo Hills, where she has grabbed the old tavern at Sunland for their use so that they can have a place to shelter them at night, and a place to eat while they are romping under the live oaks and drinking mountain water and getting strong and filling their hearts and souls with the gladness of God and His beautiful world.

Well, sir, this man says that he buys The Times in Chicago every Sunday, and he reads this poor, blundering page, and when he sits at his office window all the other days of the week, with the roar of that Bedlam in his ears, and the dust and cinders hitting him in the face, he dreams of the Verdugo Hills and wishes he could just break away and come out here.

By gollies, all we have to say to him is to do it. Just pack up and come. For him to tell that old office and the dust and the cinders and the noise and everything to go plumb to the dickens.

By ginger, that's no place for a man to live; and it is no way for a man to live—bursting his ears with noises and swallowing dust and cinders all day long.

You have only one life to live, brother. One little life that will slip away from you all too soon, no matter where you are. And the thing to do is to live that life out in God's country, among green hills where there is no dust, no cinders, and only the peace and quiet and the gladness of the world.

Brace up, O Brother of the Kindly Heart! Brace up and break away.

Ten Minutes a Day.

WHEN the neighbors were all gathered together on the stone fence, one evening lately, watching the wonder and the glory of the sunset on the Ventura Mountains, who should come along but the man who reads the papers.

And, of course, he spoiled everything. We were all deep in the holy silence of the entrancing hour, enthralled in the peace of God. It was no time for speech and useless noises. But, you can't keep a man who reads the papers quiet.

"I see," said the man who reads the papers, "that they have a tractor now that can plow up enough ground, plant enough seed, and harvest wheat enough, just with one man running it, to feed a whole army for a year. And it says in the paper that with a few more machines like that nobody will have to work more than ten minutes a day."

"And what will happen then?" asked the man who lives in the little gray house in the hollow that has the lilac bush in front and the two big rocks behind it.

"Why, then," said the man who used to be a statistician, "the world will have, as you might say, nothing to do; and God help it then. The thought is absolutely appalling," he said. "The human race would bust up and fly to pieces. We would tear one another by the throats. The devil would be busier then than he has ever been since Michael the Archangel hurled him from the parapets of heaven. And, believe me," said the man who used to be a statistician, "there have been times when the devil was a busy little cup of tea.

"Pray that this ten minutes a day stuff will never happen," said the man who used to be a statistician.

The Married Life of Helen and Warren.

Helen's Decoy to Test Her Maid Brings Only Humiliation and Defeat.

BY MABEL HERBERT URNER.

WITH a blue pencil from her sewing basket, Helen made a small but distinct cross in the corner of each of the three $5 bills.

Then viewing them critically, the cross emed too conspicuous. Besides it could be ased! Ink would be much better.

Rubbing out the blue marks, she proceed- l to remark the bills with ink. This time ie made a small circle on the white "V" f Lincoln's shirt front.

Returning the money to her new change urse, again her indignation flared up as she ought of the one that had been stolen. It as the loss of that purse with its contents almost $10 that had prompted this trata-em.

In the last week she had missed three things—the purse, a stickpin that was always in her pin cushion, and a string of favorite but inexpensive beads.

She had been loath to suspect Cora, but there had been no one else in the apartment who could have taken them.

Almost reluctantly she placed the purse on her dressing table. As it was Wednesday, the day for cleaning the silver, Cora would have to come to the dressing table for the toilet silver.

The bulging pocket-book now lay just beside a silver-backed hair brush, where Cora ould not help but see it. If she took one the marked bills it would be reasonably ertain that she had taken the other things.

Ready for the street, Helen gave a final apprehensive glance at the dressing table as she left the room.

"Cora," she swung through the pantry door, "when you clean the silver, I wish you'd try that now powder. Use it on just a few pieces and see how it works."

Cora, who was already laying out the flat silver, nodded a sullen assent. She was never enthusiastic about new methods. Her mind worked in worn grooves from which she was stubbornly unwilling to depart.

"If anyone calls up, you can say I've gone to Mrs. Stevens for luncheon. They can get me there. You know the number."

Outside in the warm benign sunshine Helen felt suddenly guilty. The marking of that money seemed almost underhanded. She wanted to go back for it, but there was no time. The luncheon was at 1:30 and it was now ten minutes after.

Hurrying on, she kept worrying over the purse. Was it fair to deliberately tempt the girl that way? What if she were innocent of the other thefts—and now succumbed to their enticement?

"Mrs. Stevens, who had called yesterday to invite her to luncheon, had suggested the scheme. She had tried it successfully with one of her own maids. The finding of the marked bill in the girl's possession had led to the recovery of a diamond brooch taken a few days before.

At first, the ruse had appealed to Helen as quite legitimate, but the more she thought of it, the more perturbed she felt.

During the luncheon and the three rubbers of bridge that followed, the incident of the marked money was crowded from her thoughts. One cannot play bridge and brood over other things, so she had a fairly enjoyable afternoon.

But on the way home, again those intriguing bills haunted her with a vague depression. The moment she entered the apartment she was conscious of something unusual. The very air seemed ominous.

There was no sound from the kitchen. The silence was curiously hostile.

Glancing through the dining-room to the closed pantry door, Helen hesitated, then passed on to her own room.

There lay the purse, beside the silver that shone with the usual Wednesday luster. Her heart beat fast as she took it up. What would she find? Were all the bills there? She shrank from opening it.

Some silver clinked to the floor as with nervous clumsiness she took out the bills. One—two—three! So it was all right!

But the rush of relief was only temporary. Her suspicions were still active. Cora was very shrewd. Perhaps the trap had been too apparent. She might have noticed that the bills were marked.

How foolish to have marked them all! How much simpler to have made a note of the numbers! The bills were new and clean. That circle on the shirt front might easily have been detected.

Again unfolding the bills, Helen held them up to see just how conspicuous the marks were. A startled cry escaped her.

Amazed, bewildered, she stared at the three cuts of Lincoln. There were no marks on the shirt front! On each bill the small white "V" below his cravat was unblemished.

What did it mean? She had marked them distinctly—with ink! And there were no signs of erasure.

Then it dawned upon her that these bills were not fresh. The ones she had marked had been crisp and clean, direct from the bank. These were crumpled and worn—and one was decidedly soiled.

Cora had changed the bills! But why? Slowly the hot blood crimsoned Helen's face. This was the girl's answer. She had uncovered the plot and had struck back.

But she HAD opened the purse! She had taken out the money. That fact alone proved her dishonesty. If she had had no thought of theft, she would not have touched the purse. The changed bills were a flagrant admission of her intention to steal.

And yet—were they? In spite of her deductions that seemed conclusive, Helen vaguely felt there was more to this than she knew.

She must see Cora at once. But she must make it seem casual. What excuse could she give for going out to the kitchen now?

Consumed with a mingled dread and curiosity, she approached the pantry door. She would say something about dinner—oh, yes, not to boil so many potatoes. She had intended to speak of that.

Entering the pantry, she was met with the fragrance of roasting meat and the sound of the chopping board.

"Oh, Cora, I forgot to tell you—you needn't boil so many potatoes. Just enough for tonight. Mr. Curtis doesn't like them creamed the next day."

Cora, chopping the celery for the salad, did not look up. A barely perceptible nod acknowledged Helen's instructions.

"You can cut up a few o' those radishes with the salad — some o' the small, crisp ones," Helen was fumbling for some excuse to linger. "Oh, this faucet's dripping again. They didn't fix it at all."

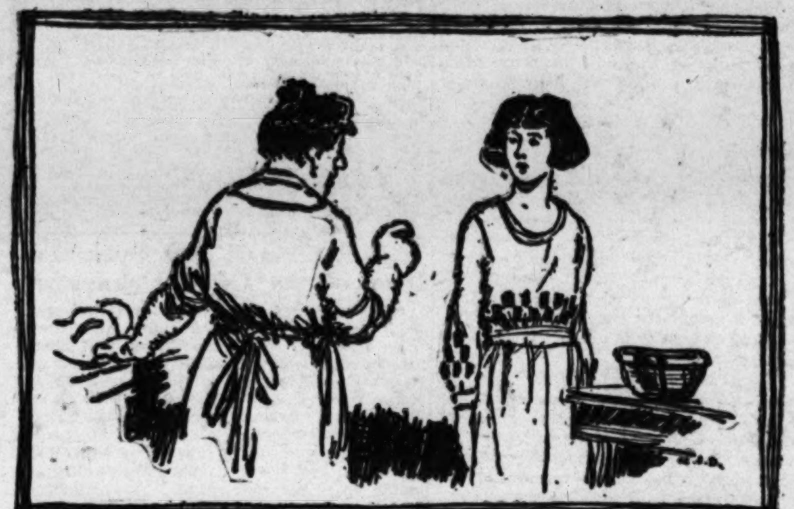
Still that insolent silence.

Flushed and disconcerted, Helen moved toward the door.

Suddenly the chopping ceased.

"Mrs. Curtis!"

"Yes?" Helen turned back, tensely expectant.



"Aint my month up next Tuesday?"

"Why, yes—I believe it is. Why do you ask?"

"I'll be leavin' then."

In the pause that followed the chopping grew more vicious.

"Why—I—isn't this rather sudden, Cora?"

"Maybe 'tis," still slashing the celery.

"You mean you're not satisfied here?"

"I wouldn't be leavin' if I was."

Helen had felt the inanity of her question, but she was groping for words.

"Very well, Cora," she tried to say it with dignity. "Of course I don't wish you to stay if you're not satisfied."

Again she started through the pantry door and again Cora called her back.

"When you get another girl — don't talk about her so loud she can hear. And you can tell Mrs. Stevens for me that just 'cause a girl works in the kitchen ain't no reason why she ain't honest. And to my way o' thinkin' it's mighty small to be layin' traps. No self-respectin' girl's gonna stay in a place where they play tricks like that."

So she had overheard the plan to mark the money! And changing the bills had been her indignant retaliation.

"—I'm very sorry, Cora, if I misjudged you," stammeringly. "But I couldn't know—there hadn't been any one else in the apartment."

"That man who scraped the floors—how d' you know it wasn't him?"

Helen did not know. With a sense of deepening guilt, she realized that it might have been the man who scraped the floors. That she had wholly forgotten him, added to her mortifying contrition.

"Cora, I said I was sorry. I can't do more than apologize. Perhaps if you think it over—you may decide to stay."

"I don't need to think it over," scraping the celery into a bowl. "I don't work for nobody that's always suspectin' me — and snoopin' around."

Helen found herself in her own room standing before the dressing-table which reflected her crimson face. Mechanically jabbing her hatpin through the inoffensive pin cushion, she recalled her conversation with Mrs. Stevens.

Cora had had her revenge. Her "to my way o' thinkin' it's mighty small to be layin' traps" cut deep because it was true.

It was small — contemptibly small. All the uplift and new thought books she had been reading exhorted her to think kindly, to believe in everyone, to give out only love and trust.

In her application of these principles she had failed miserably. She had stooped to the most sordid suspicions. She was a poor disciple of the creed she was trying to follow.

And she would have to admit it all to Warren. He would want to know why Cora was leaving. He loathed anything that was not straightforward and he would harshly condemn her entrapping method of testing the girl's honesty.

Deeply contrite, Helen realized that what had seemed a clever ruse had brought her only humiliation, discomfort, and the dismal prospect of breaking in a new maid.

Boy Scouts.

Wellington's famous remark that the Battle of Waterloo was won on the cricket fields of Eton, when translated into our own language means that Chateau-Thierry was won on the back lots of any city or town, U.S.A., where Tom Jones, Mike Delehanty and Tony Cherochi showed qualities of leadership at "one ol' cat"—qualities which were later developed in team athletics or Boy Scout hikes.

Whether or not the United States is forced into another conflict, the Boy Scout movement, which has lately attracted renewed notice, is one of the best breeders of citizenship which this or any other country has hit upon. A new phase of their activity is the use of Boy Scouts to protect the first model airway of the United States, which is being laid out between Washington, D. C., and Dayton, O. There are eighty-seven towns along the route, and arrangements are being made through the Scout commander in each district to lay designated landmarks in whitewashed cobblestones near each town. These marks, which can be seen from 5000 feet altitude, are to the nerve-racked pilot as a harbor lighthouse is to an ocean liner; they are beacons of a safe landing field.

Maj. John Bartholf, one of the first Americans to cross the continent alone in a single-seater airplane, made a forced landing during the transcontinental race near a little town in Colorado. Night came along, he was desperately in need of rest, but a crowd of souvenir-hunting lovers threatened to pick his car to pieces. A Boy Scout shoved through the crowd and saluted.

"Sir, I am on guard!" Bartholf said later that he took one look at the lad, and rolled over peacefully in his blanket until the same Boy Scout aroused him from a life-saving slumber at dawn.

Perhaps of a holiday morning on the outskirts of your home town you have watched a tramping group of Boy Scouts of America, in khaki shirts and bare knees, with field hats cocked rakishly to one side, as they swing along the road to better citizenship. As they disappear into the woods, you observe them enviously. If your son happens to be one of the group, undoubtedly you are proud of him. And you have a right to be.—[From Leslie's.

LANDS END

By Daniel Wilbur Steele.

ILLUSTRATED BY C. D. BATCHELOR.

THE year was dying; day was dying; there was a tale that the woman in the house on the last hill was dying; the wind alone was making.

It seemed fit that this should be the last house in the world. There was about the hollow thing something so wasted and blighted, and yet unconquerable, like an enduring disaster.

There was a long, loose-boarded porch with pillars across the front of the house and above it a second porch open to the sky, serving the "plastered tenement." Summer visitors sometimes took the plastered tenement. They never stayed long, and they never came back another season because they could not bear the tragic beauty of the outlook from that hilltop. The land was no longer like itself, but already half in the grip of the ocean; at the end, a huddle of sand-bars; and then nothing but the ocean and a bell.

The woman on the bed in the plastered tenement was listening to the bell: a faint, repeated note borne in the bosom of the wind.

She might be 25 years of age, or 40. She was of rather slight figure. Looking at her face, one saw only the eyes at first. Large, clear, quick-moving between the low-arched lids, brown almost to golden and yet carrying an illusion of great depth, all the vital inspirations seemed to have come to center there, and the replica of the draughty candle, flickering either orb, seemed at home in them, as if they had been used to flame and wind. Save for a sanguine feather on either cheek-bone, the rest of the face was glass white, the features tooled to a fineness so exquisite that they seemed transparent and almost luminous.

She was talking to herself.

"I've been so happy here with the sun and the stars and the wind and the bell. Sweet bell, so patient, so kind, calling to me, day in, day out! Mrs. Sparrow, where is the bell?"

Mrs. Sparrow, middle-aged, worn and fleshy, answered from her rocker in a shadowed corner:

"The bell, dearie? Why, it's out to the Head, dearie."

"The Head?"

"Yes. Yes. The end—b'yond the marshes, 'know. B'yond ever'thin', dearie."

"Oh! The end! So if I could go out to the end, then I could see the bell. I wonder, I wonder—"

"Hush, dearie! Now, now! Just be quiet, dearie. There! I hear Mr. Mendal coming up now." Mrs. Sparrow was already busy with her shawl and bonnet, relieved by the footfalls beyond the door. "I hope y'll feel smarter 'n the mornin'," she cast over her shoulder and stepped out of the room and closed the door behind her.

On the landing she confronted Mr. Mendal.

"She says how her money's all gone," she announced in a worried undertone. "She 'xpected to go a week back, she says."

She would have liked to be an idealist, this Widow Sparrow; she would have loved not to have to think of the money part.

"If you was t' have four to home, an' the eldest too young yet t' fish!" She peered up at him. "'Tain't 's if I knew the first thin' about 'er—where she come from—if she's got folks or no!"

"Don't you worry about the money, Mother Sparrow." Mendal's voice was rich and quiet. "How does she seem tonight?"

"Oh, dear, 'bout the same. Waitin' to be took. I declare she don't seem t' worrit much, though. She begins t' talk queer, though—talkin' 'bout goin' out t' the Head an' the like. It give me a start t' hear 'er."

"She's been out on the porch?"

"Yes, a while. I carried 'er in 'bout an hour ago. She don't seem t' care much what—"

"Yes, yes. Well, I guess that's all. Good night, Mother Sparrow."

Entering the room, he drew the rocker from its corner and sat down beside the bed, leaning a little forward.

"Well," he said, "and how are you tonight?"

"Ah, dear friend, dear friend, you know how I am—this last night."

"Pshaw! You've said that every night the past week."

"Yes, my time was up almost a week ago. I've stolen a week, Mendal — a week of sweetness."

Her eyes went back to the candles, two of them now, on the washstand. Mendal's chin sank farther into his neck, and his beard, square and brown and thick, covered his chest. Both were thinking of what was to come.

The woman began again, her voice low and powerless and yet full of a kind of color.

"It's like a balcony here hung over the edge, beyond noise and hurry and naggings and heartbreaks, little loves, tiny hates; beyond everything but the bell and the end. I—I've been wondering—" She drew one hand from beneath the bedclothes.

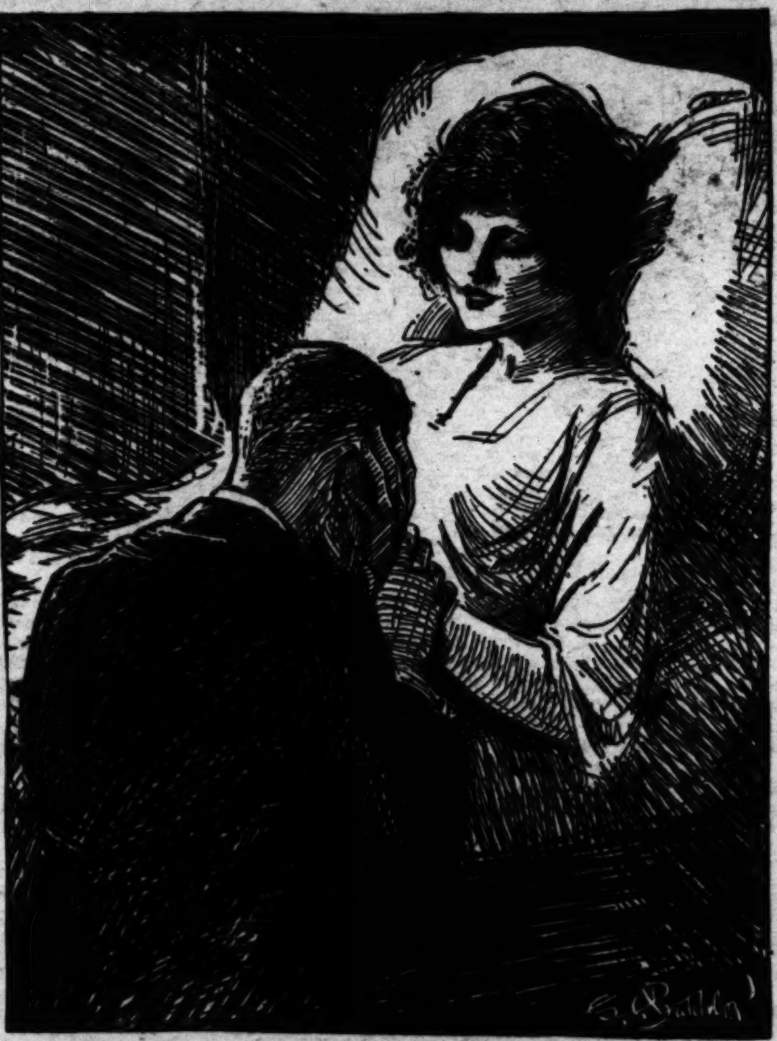
"I wonder if you would hold my hand, Mendal?" she asked. He leaned forward awkwardly and covered the white hand with his own brown one.

"Mendal, I wonder if you know—how—how—if you know what you've been to me. Down here at the end of things: you've always known everything so well, you people here—your neighbors, your plastered tenement, your marshes, your yesterday, your tomorrow. Dropping out of nowhere as I have, unexplained, nameless even, I must have seemed like a—like—"

"Like an angel!" There was a curious harshness in the man's voice.

"You see, we're not so countrified down here at the Head, after all. It's a great comfort; makes things more equal. I can sit down and listen to Caruso or Farnoe sing here as well as your man in New York City can. Now, here's one called the 'Mad Song,' for instance—'Mad Song' from 'Lucia' it is."

It was Farnoe singing there in the shiny horn. The record was old and badly marred in places; and yet, with all that, perhaps that "Rose of the World" had never sung her "Mad Song" against a background like this tonight—against fitful candles in a rocking house, against the stark orchestration of the wind, the distracted sand pelting the clapboards, the voice of the bell, remote and disembodied, like a lost sentinel, telling the breakers. At times the silver thread seemed to go out of the chamber, mount up through the roof, searching for something not to be found, and then come back again to break its heart in play.



And there he was down on his knees with his face buried in her hands.

"Is that why you've been so good and never asked? It was raining that night. And you were driving along the road in your buggy in the rain, thinking of — what were you thinking of, Mendal?"

"I was thinking how late it was."

"I remember hearing your voice before I went down—other voices, too. Were there some men with you, Mendal?"

"Yes, some neighbors. They got out and walked.

"And you brought me up here! Why did you bring me up here, Mendal, instead of taking me on into the village?"

"The village is noisy sometimes, the carts on the cobbles, children playing, and all. And you were sick and frightened."

"Frightened! Oh, how terribly frightened, Mendal, at first. But now—only peaceful and happy, watching the sunlight drift across the wall, listening to the bell there at the last end, calling—"

Mendal got up suddenly to trim one of the candles. He stood staring for a moment out of the window that had grown black; then he wheeled around abruptly.

"How would you like a little music tonight for a change?"

The woman started to shake her head, and then, seeing by his face how he wanted it, she smiled and nodded. He left the room to return after a few minutes carrying a phonograph, a black-enameled horn, and a handful of records.

The woman did not once move her eyes from Mendal, who sat hunched on his elbows in a curiously relaxed posture. The aria came to a close, and the needle whirred on untended in the blank.

"It seems queer to me," he dreamed aloud, "how anybody could make-believe like that about a thing like insanity; make a thing that isn't real so much more real than anything else. I suppose that's what they call being an artist."

"That isn't artistry!" The woman raised herself on an elbow. "That's not make-believe, as you call it. No, no—that was Farnoe herself—inside — something she was searching for, a flame for her to play with. Remember, Mendal, when she sang for that record she had just—just—it was about Terry Kew."

"In the play?"

"In the flesh! It was perilous, singing that, Mendal. No one could have dreamed how perilous but I. I could—because—I am Mary Farnoe."

For a moment the man continued in the same posture, as though he had not heard, or, hearing, had failed to comprehend.

"Mendal! Look at me!"

He turned his head slowly.

"This is Mary Farnoe, here. Do you understand? This is 'The Beloved'; this is 'Rose of the World,' Mendal—'Fleur d'Amour'—'Farnoe'!"

He got up finally and stood with his hands behind his back.

"My house is honored," he stammered with an awkward bow. Then he continued to stare down at her till she cried at him in her strengthless voice:

"And still you don't ask me how I came here—why I came? Have I had to come to the end of the earth to find a man who would ask nothing of me? Sit down again! Nearer! There!

"I'll tell you, Mendal. Because I couldn't bear their watching and waiting and pretending; I couldn't bear their not knowing that I knew. Oh, Mendal, I couldn't look forward to the whisperings and telegrams and bulletins. I've amused the street all my life, Mendal—wasn't that enough? Must I die for them in the paper each morning along with their ball games and stocks and coffee? And then I was frightened too. Mendal, do you know what it is to be frightened?"

A faint color dyed her cheeks, like the sun seen through a shell. She raised herself higher on the pillow, and her voice grew stronger:

"If they'd only told me, Mendal! I went to pieces at the Symphony that night, but they were so kind and made nothing of it. I had to get it from a hysterical, eavesdropping maid at the hotel. Three weeks to live! Mendal! Mendal! I who had loved life so, faithless as it had been!

"And then there was the train; the hot, bright, varnished cage rushing me away through the dark; the nurse in and out; little Blomberg in and out, puckering his fat forehead, smoking hard, trying for once in his life to be gay. Poor little Blomberg; after all, I made him—the Great Manager. Norway was somewhere in the train, too, covering me for the A. P.—like a—a hanging, Mendal.

"They were taking me somewhere for a rest, Blomberg said. But why then the wire for Dr. Westcountry to meet us? Didn't they imagine I knew who Dr. Westcountry was, what he was?

"They were all asleep, even the nurse. The train was a nightmare. It smothered me. I got to thinking. 'Am I Mary, or am I Farnoe?' I said over and over and over, out loud.

"The train stopped for something. I crept out. I had to have air. Another train from the opposite direction came in between me and my own. It was like the hand of God. I turned my back and started to run away along a road. I must have been quite out of my head with it all, for the train, I remember, turned down the road after me. I could hear it thundering through the trees behind me—the rain, I suppose. How far did I come, Mendal?"

"Five miles—or better."

"How could I? I don't remember it. There was a signpost under a lantern with three white fingers weeping for me, and there was a dog that trotted beside me for a while; I don't know how long. And by and by you were behind me, and that frightened me more than anything else had. You were Blomberg coming to get me; you were Dr. Westcountry coming to do something to me; you were Norway coming to 'cover' me; you were—Oh, you must think me a silly, hysterical thing, Mendal."

"No!"

Getting to his feet, Mendal thrust his hands deep in his pockets and then took them out again, his beard still shaking with the savage negative. The woman went on talking, as if to herself now, arms outspread and eyes on the ceiling, her voice scarcely audible above the wind:

"Perhaps I died that night, really, and this is another life. It's been so sweet here; it seems as long already as the other was, looking back—that other little life, so crowded, so empty, so happy, so sad! There were triumphal moments in it, Mendal; I try to get hold of them now, and they slip away one by one as I come to them: mist, nothing. Only one stays, very small, so small that I had forgotten it till I lay here in the quiet sky. Just a man in the dark; a boy, really — a feverish boy crying for me to stop. It's like a fairy tale, where the thing that seemed so little eats up all the other things that seem so big.

"'Fleur d'Amour' they called me. 'Flower of Love' that means, Mendal. Whatever would the Sunday papers have done without Mary Farnoe? What reams on reams they filled with their Farnoe, their queer, distorted Farnoe whom I never knew. They wanted me complex, and I couldn't be anything but simple; they made me a butterfly, and I was a rock for faith. I forgive them. I can begin to understand an all-forgiving God. It's so easy to forgive—in heaven. I can even forgive the men who never loved toward the normal, and when we see anyone mentally or physically diseased, we know that something has disturbed the natural forces. Wrong methods of eating are the dietary causes of disease, and the correction of the wrong methods of eating will bring a return to the normal path and to health. It is therefore evident that the 'curing' of disease, dietetically, requires the removing of the causes—the dietetic errors."

A "Cold."

"COLDS" are really fevers, as the Italians call them.

They are caused by overeating mucous-forming foods, and should be encouraged, not suppressed, as they are an effort of nature to expel waste from the body. Suppression is dangerous.

This is also true of the more severe forms of "colds," like pneumonia and grippe and tuberculosis. They are all "caught" at the table.

Following is from the American Journal of Clinical Medicine:

"A cold is not a cold to me—
It's nature's way to tell
That I've been dining recently,
Not wisely, but too well.

A snuffly nose has come to mean
That I've enjoyed erstwhile,
Some breaded pork chops, nestled deep
In sweet spuds, 'southern style.'

And when I puff germ-laden coughs
At 'L' trains full of boobs,
I know it's lobster, broiled alive,
That fouls my bronchial tubes!

Or else, perchance, a wondrous steak
With onions crisp and brown
Has made my liver make of me
A menace to the town.

Or it might be a chunk of cheese
Or mince pie, hot and sweet,
So, a cold is not a cold to me—
It's just too much to eat!"

The Medical Trust.

IT IS encouraging to note that an increasing number of independent physicians are coming out openly against the growing aggression of the Medical Trust, notwithstanding the fact that we are assured "there ain't no such an animile."

At the opening session of the tenth annual convention of the Allied Medical Associations of America, in Atlantic City, Dr. W. Wallace Fritz of Philadelphia criticized the Public Health Service, an adjunct of the A.M.A. He said:

"The autocratic and bureaucratic medical associations now under the financial patronage and political protection of the Public Health Service desire to enslave the public and to choose the physician who shall minister to them when they are sick. This is taking away the liberty of the individual.

"Even today there is little democracy or true Americanism in the medicine of this country. The profession, as a whole, has but little to say of its condition, and if 'State medicine' comes in vogue and the people become pauperized thereby, we may expect to be further hidden under the bushel as a whole, with but a favored few in the limelight."

Physicians in the Pulpit.

THE Medical Trust is not only invading the newspapers and the schools and the women's clubs and the movies, but also the churches.

During the annual convention of the American Medical Association in Boston, physicians preached from twenty-six pulpits, giving their opinions of disease from the M.D. point of view.

There has always been a close affiliation between the church and the medical fraternity. In olden days the priest and the physician were one. Now, poor man crawls around on three crutches, giving his soul to the care of a priest, his body to a physician and his worldly goods to a lawyer.

A Day of Jubilee.

UNTIL recently, our school histories have been largely concerned with wars, and children have been expected to memorize the dates of great slaughters.

If disarmament is agreed upon, that will be a date and an event that should be printed in all textbooks in red letters, for it will mark the beginning of a new and better epoch.

"Mad, My Masters, Mad!"

A GROUP of Philadelphia physicians meeting with the Art Alliance of that city, lately, according to the American Art News (New York,) "publicly discussed the [illegible] of the Pennsylvania Academy exhibition.

"These physicians came to the conclusion that "futurist" artists are insane—although they did not put it quite so bluntly.

For once I have the pleasure of agreeing with the M.D.'s.

They might have added that jazz musicians are also suffering from a "pathological mental condition."

When You Are Sick.

WHAT should you do when you are sick? First, cleanse the bowels thoroughly by enemas of tepid water. Then stop eating, absolutely. Sip cool water with a little lemon juice. Take a hot bath and oil the body. Go to bed. Open the windows. Apply hot cloths where there is pain, cold cloths where there is inflammation. Keep away from doctors, hospitals and trained nurses.

In a few days you will be well, unless, by years of wrong living, you have accumulated a great amount of waste in the body, when nature's healing process will take a longer time.

Universities.

IN THE United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland there are eighteen universities.

In the United States there are 600 universities, which number might be increased to nearly 1000, by inclusion of those institutions that do not come up to the full attainments of a university standard.

me. I can even smile at them now. They all thought they loved me, poor things! Youth was what Tom Lord loved, I think. Bennington loved me for the crowds; Von Luhr because I was so essentially American; Belham because I was so essentially un-American. Terry Kaw loved himself.

"I say, I forgive them. They slip away, mist, nothing. How I should have smiled then had any one told me I was to look back out of the future and remember that boy as the only lover of Mary Farnoe. It's queer, isn't it, Mendal?"

"What?"

"To call him that. When he never spoke a word of love to me. I never saw him except once, and that in the dark; I don't so much as know his name. But why do you listen to my maunderings, Mendal? Haven't I asked enough of you, first and last?"

"No. I will listen."

"You won't hear. It's too phantasmal. It's just that he seems to fit in here with the wind and ocean and marshes and sea birds. He was an interne, I think. (Oh, just then I was getting well in a hospital, slowly.) He must have been an interne; he wore white, I remember, and he looked like a ghost standing at the foot of my bed in the dark. I knew he had no business there, but, oddly enough, that wasn't my first thought. If he had a queer flair about me, perhaps I had a sort of one about him, too. It may have been just his attitude. At any rate my first impulse was to say aloud: 'You poor boy!'

"He started and stammered that he hadn't known I was awake. I don't believe there was ever such a queer conversation as that.

"'Why do you do it?' he asked, out of nothing.

"'Do what?'

"He wouldn't listen to my questions, but shook them off with a fevered impatience, his words seemed to get in the way of his thoughts.

"'I wish you'd stop! I wish to God you'd stop!'

"'Stop what?'

"'They're eating you up—burning you up! Can't you see they're eating you up as fast as they can?'

"'Who are?'

"'I wish, for dear Christ's sake, you'd run away from them,' he cried in a passionate whisper.

"I sat up in bed and stared at him. You can't imagine, Mendal, how weird it was. I wasn't frightened in the least. I forgot who I was and who he was.

"'Come around here beside the bed,' I said to him. He came, sank down on his knees, and buried his face in his hands, and when I laid a hand on his hair he was shivering all over. I had a sense of being a thousand years older than he.

"'You poor, poor child,' I said. 'You've fallen in love with Mary Farnoe, like the rest of them. What a pity! And you want me to run away with you, is that it?'

"He protested wildly. No, no, no! That's what I'm trying to tell you—not with anybody! Never let any one get a hold on you again. If only you could be turned to ice somehow. Ice, cold, quiet! Close the doors on them. Lock them out. They don't bring you anything! Always taking—taking you away, little by little, till one day there'll be nothing left of you!'

"He may have been older than I in years; I might have been his mother. I smoothed his hair, but I couldn't help smiling at him, he seemed so utterly outlandish. I tried to tell him how we weren't made that way; how what there was to spend had to be spent.

"'You don't understand, poor lad,' I was saying when the night nurse's flash found him there beside my bed. He was discharged next morning, I heard."

For a time there was silence; everything in the world seemed to have been said. Mary Farnoe's sentence had carried a curious feeling of finality, like the settling of a last account. She lay on her side with her hands clasped, searching Mendal's half-lowered face.

"Mendal!"

He looked up, moved by the change in her voice, and found her embarrassed as a girl with the color coming and going across her face.

"I—I don't seem to know how to say it, Mendal. You seem so big and solid and dependable; sometimes it almost frightens me to find myself clinging to you so for everything. You've been like a breath of clear air to me after the other sort of thing—their precious frailties, their precious personalities, their precious spirits, their whims. But out here, Mendal—why, you're Nobody. And I'm Nobody. It doesn't seem to matter much whether you—" She broke off for a moment. "I don't want you to laugh at me," she implored.

"Laugh at you!"

"No. It's about the bell, out there at the last end of everything."

Mendal [illegible] her there by [illegible] out a hand that covered both hers.

"You've been thinking about that bell a good deal lately."

"Oh, please, don't think I'm romantic or melodramatic. No; it's deeper than that, Mendal. It's me. I've always had that same passion, to carry through, to go through to the end, whatever it might be. Listen, Mendal! Hear!"

"Do you mean," he put to her slowly," that you would like to go out there tonight?"

He got up and moved to the door, where he turned with his hand on the latch.

"Do you think you're strong enough, on a night like this?"

"Yes, yes! I feel stronger than I have for weeks."

"I'll be back in a minute."

He came back into the room and stood over her, studying the face against the pillow.

"You look like a bride," he said.

Bending over suddenly, he wrapped the bedclothes tight about her, picked her up in his arms and went downstairs and out of the house.

Once beyond the half shelter of the porch, the wind claimed them. Mendal's first rush carried him as far as the break of the hill, but there he hesitated and looked down at the face against his shoulder, dim gray in its mufflings. His own face was gray, and a bead of perspiration clung for an instant on his forehead before the wind whisked it away.

"Do you want to go?" he asked, bending so that his lips were close to her ear.

"Am I heavy?"

He shook his head savagely.

"What's that, Mendal—over there?"

He followed the direction of her eyes, slanting over his shoulder. Beyond Barnham Head Village the moon was rising, casting a dome of light before it into the sky and vertically across this dome, from a further abutment of the hill, rose, the stark black shape of a cross. "That?" he hesitated an instant. "That's the telegraph."

"But I didn't know—"

"It's come lately."

"Oh! What difference does it make, after all? Why do we stop here so long, Mendal?"

He started down the slope, waded through the bit of marsh at the bottom that sucked at his shoes, found the hard, uneven footing of the breakwater, and passed out once more into the wind.

It was one of those nights that come once or twice in an autumn, swept clean of all the dusts and mists of the world, everything shorn and incisive: even the sound of the water lashing through the crevices of the sea wall had an edged quality, like liquid blades playing in the rock. Mendal had to keep sharp watch of his path, for even in the growing light the tilted slabs were treacherous footing. When the arm about his neck, tightening, begged his attention, he had to bring up and stand balanced against the wind.

"What is it?" he asked. He bent to catch her answer.

"I'm getting so small, Mendal, and you're growing bigger and bigger all the while. And I don't hear the bell any more. You—Mendal, you're not fooling me?"

"No!" His voice was sharp. "The surf at the Head drowns it now. You won't hear it any more till we come up with it."

He went forward again. Her weight, frail as it was, began to tell. When he had reached the square hewn boulder rising like a sort of keystone at the center of the wall, he had to pause a moment in its lee, resting his back against the rock.

"Is it here?" she asked him.

"No, no!" I'm only getting my wind; that's all."

"Why won't you look at me, Mendal?"

For some reason or other it seemed an effort for him. For a moment she lay there watching him.

"Why won't you say it, Mendal?"

Her hand crept up to touch his cheek, and it was whiter now than her own.

"You would have said it, Mendal, if I hadn't told you about—about me. But what difference can that make—now—out here? The world's gone. We're all there are, Mendal, one man and one woman. But why should I want you to tell me, after all? It's so different from anything else that ever happened. I can love you to the last depths, Mendal, without it's seeming so fatal a thing whether you love me or not. Of course that would be sweet, incredibly—"

He had forgotten to be careful with her or with himself. His kiss left them both shaken and breathless. "You— You—" He seemed unable to say anything but that: "You— You— You—"

He was going forward again, almost at a run. The breakwater came to an end: he was floundering up the rise to Barnham Head; one instant in the lee, the next, crushed and deafened, face to face with the [illegible] driven out. [illegible] drummed at his cheek.

"Where is it, Mendal? Mendal!"

"Look!" He pulled the blanket away from her face. A puff of spray like cannon smoke drove across them, blinding the eyes. warmth and light.

"Look again!"

Grayness swooned into blackness; a thin, wide tongue lashed out of the smother, glistening with dim stars, clotted with ropes of spume; licked up at them across the sand with a sinister hunger; fell back again, leaving a serpent of kelp at Mendal's feet, writhing and faintly luminous.

"Look!" he shouted for the third time, shaking her. "Out there! Beyond!"

But she had turned her face the other way.

"Why do you do this? Mendal! Mendal! Why do you frighten me so? Why don't you take me to the bell?

"I am! It's out there—over the outer bar. Come!"

He started down the shining slope, but now she was crying terribly in his ear: Mendal! Mendal! Mendal!"

"Good God!" he shouted. "What's the matter?" Stumbling back again, he stared into the staring eyes.

"Don't you want to go?"

They looked incredibly old, both of them!

They were on higher ground and wire-grass was catching at Mendal's shoes and trying to trip him. He stumbled once and went down on one knee, but the sand was soft and he did not lose hold of his burden. A building with two yellow windows came around a hummock to meet them.

It was hard for Mary Farnoe to remember what happened after that for a time. Whatever it was, it led to a kind of bed built into the side of a small room filled with papers and outlandish instruments and warmth and light.

Some one had hold of one of her wrists. She began to realize that it was Mendal and that his eyes, fixed and unwinking, were holding her up out of something. There were others in the room: an old man with a blue coat and gray whiskers; still other men behind him.

"Where am I?" she asked with her lips, for she seemed to have no voice.

Mendal's eyes came down a little closer, still holding her tight.

'You're at Barnham Head, Mary Farnoe; at the life-saving station."

"I'm so weak. Dear me, so w-e-a-k."

"Of course you're weak. You'll be stronger by and by!"

Without moving his eyes, he gave some word or sign that sent the others out of the room.

"The broth," Mendal called after the captain. And then to Mary Farnoe: "Open your mouth and swallow this. It's a little brandy. There!"

She lay quiet as death itself, watching him. He began to speak with a painful deliberation, making each word count as a separate thing, hammering, hammering!

"Mary Farnoe, listen! You couldn't go through! You failed in that role; that gesture is gone. I proved it to you. You had hold of a fine fancy there; a deep, dramatic symbolism—Land's End, Eternal Ocean, the Bell calling, calling, day and night, from the bosom of Oblivion. A big idea—yes, yes. But it fell flat. Now you're starting all over again, on something new. Listen, Mary Farnoe! I want you to understand this; learn it by heart; it's the lines of your new role: There is absolutely nothing organically wrong with you now. That was all over two weeks ago. In a month you will be yourself. Here's another swallow of brandy and then a little broth. You'll see how thoroughly I have it over you; the captain here will tell you I phoned about this broth before we left the house an hour ago. I'll hold you up a moment, so!"

The spirits and hot broth began to tell; a new color crept into her cheeks as she lay there, with no will of her own.

"You talk so queerly, Mendal; so different, so new. I—I hardly know you, Mendal." It may have been five minutes before she spoke again. "Why did they give me three weeks to live, then?"

"Three weeks as you were living then—on your heart and nerve."

"Why didn't you tell me before, Mendal—that I was all right?"

"What would have been the use? You wouldn't have believed me. No, no, Mary Farnoe; I don't think you'd believe anything in the world unless the stage were set for it—as if—well, you wouldn't have your life saved except in a life-saving station. Truth is a denouement or it is nothing."

Another minute passed while she gazed at him dreamily.

"Will I sing again, Mendal?"

"That's on the knees of the gods, Mary"—he tried to smile—"the gallery gods! You'll [illegible] do what your audience expects of you, even the impossible."

"But M-e-n-d-a-l—" A hand came toward him across the covers, appealing.

"You remember what you said once, Mary? 'What's to be spent must be spent'?"

"But what if I was wrong, Mendal?"

He looked terribly tired and white. "And what if you were right?" he said.

He got up suddenly as if he were afraid of himself, and, turning to a telephone on the wall, took down the receiver: "Is this the Barnham Head House? . . . May I speak with— Oh, it is you, Blomberg? Yes? We've turned the corner, Blomberg. May I speak with Norway? . . . Thanks!"

It was hard to wait there, staring at a knot in the paneling; he seemed actually to grow whiter and gaunter with every dragging second.

"Oh, hello! hello! Norway? . . . It's Westcountry speaking, Norway. I'll give you a leader, Norway; put it on the wire tonight. 'Farnoe will sing in three months.' That's all. . . . Thanks. Thanks, Norway. Good night!"

"Now," he said, his eyes still on the knot, "now you're playing to the old audience again. I'm tired." he went on. "And I'm afraid to look at you."

"Westcountry," came her wondering voice. "Westcountry! You're — you're Westcountry!"

"You're angry!"

When she didn't speak he had to cover up the silence somehow.

"Blomberg will be glad to get away. Poor Blomberg! the Barnham Head House isn't quite up to Blomberg's style, though he's been a surprising brick about it. And Norway. How they've played chess down there, and how they hate chess! I've wanted them to go, but they wouldn't. They were the ones you saw in the buggy with me that night. That was my train that came in between you and yours. It took us a little while to pick up the trail. Mary, Mary, if you knew how I'd dreaded this moment, when I should have to tell you."

He had to look at her when she spoke so, and now it was his eyes that were bewildered and hers sure and full of light.

"I was afraid it might—Mary, can't you see that—what you called the 'balcony hung over the edge'—'one woman and one man—nobody and nobody'—"

"Was that sweet to you, too?"

"Sweet? Is it sweet when a dream comes true, even for a little while—a dream one's been alone with for ten years? Once I knelt in the dark, Mary, beside a bed in a hospital, very young and foolish and feverish—"

And there he was down on his knees again with his face buried in her hands, and she was smiling at him again, but not because he was outlandish this time.

"I knew," she whispered. "I began to know almost a week ago. Do you know how? Well, there couldn't be two of you. I—I thought you were going to tell me tonight."

Her lips were against his cheek.

"Does that mean, Mary—that kiss, that it doesn't matter, after all? That even without my romantic trappings: rather gray and prosaic—"

Her low laughter was like a caress.

"The sea must be going down," she whispered, after a long time. "I heard the bell, just then, very faintly."

"Yes! The bell's a masquer, too. It's gone back to the role that made it famous—warning people off the bar."

The Laggard.

I waited for Love thru' the tender May-time,
(Pink, pink was the bloom on the hawthorn tree,)
My heart's door open, in dark and day-time,
But the shy god dallied on far-off lea.
Came a wild sweet wind at the twilight's gloom
And scattered the hawthorn's misty bloom.

I waited for Love thru' the luscious June-time,
(Red, red bloomed the rose by the garden gate;)
Thru' dewy morning and sunny noontime,
And sweeter the welcome to one so late.
But a cloud came shading the summer sky,
My red rose blossomed; I watched it die.

Love came at last in a bleak December,
(White, white was the frost on my window pane;)
And burned to ashes each once warm ember,
What power could breathe them to life again?
Oh, Love, you laggard, who came too late,
Dead, dead is the rose by the garden gate.

"I may be a fish. I am not contending that Dr. Abrams's discoveries may not prove of some value to science. But should such a delicate and all-important question as the paternity of a child be decided in a court of law by a blood test whereby the race of the father is alleged to be determined, when a similar test, conducted by the same scientist, apparently proves that blood taken from another man—myself—is not that of a human being?"

Why should the medical profession be permitted to jeopardize the lives, liberty and happiness of men and women by these unreliable and misleading laboratory tests?

In the "Altogether."

OF LATE years, the Japanese custom of promiscuous public bathing of both sexes has been abandoned, in places frequented by foreigners. On the other hand, it seems to be gaining ground in America. Following is a press dispatch from Chicago:

"The epidemic of nude bathing which broke out along the South Shore beaches and along the classic Desplaines River has now spread to Glencoe, a haughty and aristocratic suburb, the inhabitants of which are all financially able to buy bathing suits.

"Every night brings pseudo bathers to the beach—all of them apparently well dressed, nice looking young people who dance instead of swim. This would be all right, but they dance in the altogether. They divest themselves of all clothing, which is left in the costly cars—for this is not an aggregation of roughnecks—after which they disport themselves in Greek, Russian and other dances, to the strains of uquleles.

Sleep.

IF, IN this nervous age, people would eat less and sleep more, it would be better for them.

Sleep is indeed "tired nature's sweet restorer."

A man tramps over the hills all day. He comes home too tired to eat. He sleeps eight hours. In the morning he awakes like a giant refreshed. What from? Not from food.

It has remained, not for M.D.'s but for trainers of prize fighters, to realize this. Following is from the New York Herald:

"The most important news for the general public that ever came from a pugilist's training camp is that which asserts that a man training for a much-discussed prize fight, found to be overweight, has been restricted to two meals a day, breakfast and dinner, and that he 'will doze at noon hour and while sleeping he will easily pick up the strength food might have given him.'

"The epoch-making decision to substitute sleep for food as a means of maintaining and strengthening a human being in training chiefly for the purpose of building up strength to endure a terrific and possibly a prolonged physical struggle was not made by a faddist or a scholar of a new school of medicine but by experienced, hardheaded trainers for prize fighters.

Doctors and Drug Addicts.

I HAVE received several complaints that soldiers have been made drug addicts while in military hospitals.

"Shots" of deadly, habit-forming drugs are given with criminal recklessness. This is not surprising, when we find medical journals deploring the fact that many medical men have themselves become drug addicts.

This is a far greater menace than alcohol.

Health and Success.

E. M. STATLER, the world's most famous hotel manager, is quoted in Physical Culture as saying that business success is 99 per cent health. He added:

"The greatest thing in the world is to feel that every bit of red blood in your body is backing you up in a definite purpose, and I think that the failures and the misunderstandings in business come more from people not keeping themselves in good physical condition than from any mental deficiency or lack of business ability. When you are feeling fit, troubles make very little impression, and are forgotten before they have a chance to sink in."

The Diet Cure.

FOLLOWING is from Dr. Charles C. Froude's "Right Food and Right Remedy," which I recently reviewed:

"The dietetic cause of disease lies in wrong eating habits—overeating, insufficient mastication, [illegible] the result of these dietetic errors is fermentation (auto-intoxication or self-poisoning) and a reduction of nerve energy, which weakens resistance to disease, especially such as one may inherit. Predisposition to disease varies—the predisposition may be tuberculosis, cancer, catarrh, rheumatism, Bright's disease, diabetes, colds, skin diseases, typhoid, scarlet fever, smallpox, measles, paralysis, etc. Dietetic 'curing' depends upon the correction of the dietetic errors producing the fermentation which incites the disease.

"Dietetic 'curing' should not be shrouded in mystery. It means simply that, with dietetic errors removed, nature will take advantage of the opportunity to bring the individual back to the normal condition of man—health. The tendency of nature is always

Latest Radium Discovery

Many discoveries have been made with RADIUM, but the last eclipse them all except the discovery of RADIUM Sulphate as a cure for the lungs. This last one is THE REJUVENATOR, an aluminum apparatus filled with RADIUM Sulphate which when applied cleans out all diseases from and including the colon down to the knees and rejuvenates the tired, worn, feeble, middle aged and elderly people of both sexes, making them feel twenty years younger. With those people who must labor while standing and walking all day, its influence is wonderful. After applying it one hour each day for a week, they prefer to stand in a street car to riding home seated on a bench.

It is absolutely safe to use, because there is no operation connected with its use like that discovered by Mme. Curie and to prove that it is a better RADIUM than Mme. Curie's discovery, we invite any and all those affected in the parts already named to use one of them free of charge for a limited time and we will send a free booklet to any address. Write us.

Geronimo and the Chiricahua Apaches.

BY WILLIAM SPARKS.

AFTER Geronimo's first surrender, and return to the reservation, his band camped near San Carlos agency until he and several of the sub-chiefs visited Turkey Creek and selected a little valley on that stream as their future home.

This valley was situated in one of the most beautiful spots in Arizona. The creek, which had its source near the foot of the White Mountains, ran out through an almost level mesa, and gradually gaining depth as it meandered through groves of cedar, oak, pinon and pine, entered a narrow box canyon just below the place selected for the camp.

The altitude at this place was about 6000 feet; which, because of the nearness of the great pine and spruce-covered mountains, insured plenty of rain and snow to make pasturage for the large herds of ponies; and there were usually abundant crops of acorns here, which could be gathered by the squaws and children. When these were dried, hulled, and ground on metates into a yellowish looking paste, they were made into a sort of bread, that no Indian would trade for the best product of the white man's bakery.

On all sides of the triangular shaped mesa, which is about twenty-five miles long, and almost as wide on its eastern end, were large streams of water. Black River on the south ran through a narrow canyon, about 800 feet in depth, to its junction with White River, which bounded the mesa on the north. The latter stream ran through rolling hills, after it debouched from the White Mountains to its mouth, but was paralleled on the south by a rampart, or cliff, that constituted the mesa's northern limit.

South of Black River are long timbered mesas and ridges that slope back to the foot of the pine-covered Nantanes Range. A few miles north of White River is the rim of the Mogollons. This range is a southern continuation of the Continental Divide. It runs from 8000 feet to a few feet less than 13,000 feet in altitude; and is, below the 7000-foot limit, covered with a dense growth of pine, oak and juniper.

On the north hillsides and gulches, above 7000 feet altitude, oak does not grow, but spruce and quaking aspen mingle with the giant pines. When 9000 feet is reached the pines are replaced by balsam or spruce, and great forests of spruce and fir, that sometimes reach a height of 175 feet, stretch for miles and miles over level mesa lands and rolling hills. For this range, like the Nantanes, is not a narrow ridge of mountains, but a great tableland that seems to have been tilted, by some convulsion of nature, to its greatest height at its southwestern limits, which, until it connects with the White Mountains, form an almost perpendicular rampart, with only occasional ridges and openings where it can be climbed.

East of Turkey Creek Mesa is Corn Creek and the Bonito, whose canyons form the mesa's eastern rampart. Sloping back from the canyon rim of these creeks are long pine and oak covered ridges that lead up to the White Mountains and Blue Range, spurs of the Mogollons.

With the exception of the San Francisco peaks, over a hundred miles to the northwest, the highest points in any of these mountains are Mt. Ord and Mt. Thomas; two connected domes of the White Mountains, that rise above timber line, and whose melting snows supply the tributaries of both Black and White Rivers with floods of ice cold water in the hottest of summers.

Off to the southeast of the mesa, across Black River Canyon, are level prairie mesas. These soon change into broken, hilly country, almost all of which is covered with dense forests of pine, oak, juniper and pinon. Scattered through the forests are thickets of scrub oak; sweet acorn, manzanita and buck brush; all of which is intersected with creeks of pure mountain water. Along these streams, usually, are narrow valleys, covered with cottonwood, willow, alder, ash, walnut, cherry, sycamore, and many kinds of oak.

Uplands are Rich in Every Variety of Wild Game.

ALL this country at the time we are writing of—and most of it until the present time—was inhabited by many kinds of game. Blacktail and whitetail deer were plentiful. Turkeys were to be found everywhere, grouse in great numbers were in the spruce and quaking aspens, and bear of several varieties were numerous.

Of these the Chiricahua Apaches hunted only the deer and grouse.

The Apache, no matter what particular band or clan he belongs to, is probably the most superstitious mortal on earth. While he has no conception of a God, as white men understand the creator of the universe, he believes in spirits, good and evil, and like his white brothers, must have mortals like himself as go-betweens to intercede with the good spirits, and to placate those evil ones who may meditate harm against him.

From these priests, or medicine men, have grown up many interdictions and superstitions. Within the memory of members of the tribe who were still living when the writer first went among them, was the year of the great drouth and epidemic.

For a long time there was no rain. Although the medicine men danced and made rain medicine, the clouds rolled back on the horizon, and a blazing sun beat down on the country that lay between the mountains and the desert. It was here, where usually fine streams of water rushed down from the foothills, that several large bands of Apaches made their homes, and cultivated small farms in the little valley where the water was easily taken out of the streams before they sank in the hot sands of the desert.

But this season there were no spring rains. The grass withered and died. The streams dried up. The acorn and mesquite trees did not bear a crop. The game all died, or left the country, and there was nothing left for the Indians of the foothills to do but to emigrate to the mountains where there was still grass and water.

So they packed their belongings on the backs of the squaws and the few remaining ponies that were strong enough to carry a load, and after a tiresome journey arrived in the country of their kinsmen, the Cibicue, and Coyotera Apaches.

Because of Superstitious Tendencies Bear and Turkey Not Eaten.

THESE people were glad to receive them, and willingly divided what food the country was capable of producing with their more unfortunate relatives. But it was very dry in the mountains also, although the drouth was not yet as severe as it was in the low country. The deer had emigrated to some more favored locality. Bear and turkeys were not eaten by Apaches because of superstitions that reached back into the mists of time so far that none knew when, where or how the knowledge that turkeys provided a home for the reincarnated souls of their women ancestors had been given them.

And who would dare deny that if the souls of men must find newborn animals to give them shelter after the body's death, the most appropriate place for a dead Apache warrior's soul would be in the courageous brain and mighty body of a silvertip bear?

So turkeys and bear were out of the question; and they, like the deer and small game, were almost gone anyway, which left only the fish in the streams, wood rats, and such vermin, for the sustenance of all the tribes of the Apaches.

Now the sweetest meat of all meat to an Apache, until a very short time ago, was the flesh of his enemies' unbroken horses, or of worthless horses of his own. But his herds of ponies had been decimated by the long drouth, and he had neither food nor horses to take him to Tucson, the only Mexican settlement within striking distance at that time.

So the whole tribe lived for months on fish and wood rats, with now and then an occasional squirrel, quail or rabbit that had survived its poverty only to fall a victim to some well-directed arrow or straight-flung stone.

As the warm sun of another spring began to blaze and burn, long lines of swiftly-moving lead-colored clouds came drifting in from the west and began banking up against the mountain peaks. Soon the floodgates opened, torrents of water fell on the parched and dusty earth, and the long drought was ended.

Tribes Ravaged by a Deadly Disease Taking Off Many.

BUT before the starving Indians had regained their accustomed strength, a great sickness came upon them. Not a tepee escaped. In some families not one person was left to mourn those who had gone before.

The sickness began with a hot fever. Then the patient would forget his friends and acquaintances, and converse with the spirits of the air. After a time small spots would break out on his face, and sometimes on his body. In a little while these spots would become festering sores, and if the patient did not die of the disease, the spots would become permanent.

The medicine men consulted and decided to make a big medicine without delay. So all the tribe who were strong enough to attend gathered around the head medicine man's tepee to learn why they were stricken, and what they might do to placate the evil spirits who were sending this scourge among them.

The women who had not yet been afflicted gathered great loads of dry wood, and cut and carried small poles to a level place near the bank of the river. Fixing the large end of these poles firmly in the ground, in a circle, they bent all of them toward the center until the tops could be tied together. They then covered the dome-shaped skeleton structure with boughs and bark.

All that remained to be done was to set up a medicine pole in the center of the level space, near the medicine tepee, and tie the tail feathers of a hoot owl to its top.

Medicine Pole Set Up and Spirits Invoked.

WHEN the twilight began to darken into night, fires were lighted, and the head medicine man and his assistants entered the tepee, and began an invocation to the spirits that were angered against them. While they prayed and sang, they beat on the tom-toms, and nine strong young men, stripped to their gee-strings, shuffled around the medicine pole to the music of the drum-beat and song.

When the young men were almost exhausted the music ceased. The head medicine man came out of the tepee and told the waiting Indians he had learned the cause of their affliction.

They had lived for many, many moons, he said, on the only fish that were in the mountain streams. These were trout, and as they were thickly covered with small round spots, and the victims were covered with small round spots, it was plain the fish were the cause of the disease; and it had been made known to him that the fish were inhabited by the evil spirits, and it was as a punishment to the Indians for eating the tenement of these spirits that the sickness had been sent among them.

All that was necessary to be done, he said, was to cease eating the fish, and the bad spirits would withdraw and take the sickness with them.

The rains had started many sprouts and buds that were good to eat, and the game was coming back. As there were not nearly so many mouths to feed, there was soon plenty for all and the sickness soon disappeared. But no Apache, no matter how hungry, will eat fish until this day, except possibly now and then one who has been educated in the white man's schools.

But it was not necessary for Geronimo's band to either go hungry or eat fish. There had been no drouth for many years. There was plenty of deer and grouse, and the government issued rations of flour, coffee, bacon, sugar and beef. There was no civilian agent to rob them; for Lieut. Gatewood alone had authority over them in the camp.

But to make sure that none of the bucks could leave the reservation long enough to raid, and kill, and steal, Gatewood issued an order that all the Indians should line up to be counted every morning and evening.

The Chief Objected to His People Being Herded Like Goats.

TO THIS Geronimo objected very strongly. It was an imposition, he said, that his people should be herded like goats and counted at sunrise and sunset. So many of the members of the band moved away from the camp, and out into the mountains that surrounded the mesa, where they could sustain themselves by hunting. One band of about fifteen warriors returned to Mexico, and were soon raiding and killing Mexicans again.

Gatewood told Geronimo that if he did not bring all his people to the camp, and turn them out to be counted every morning and evening, he would have soldiers surround them and bring them in. Geronimo refused to do so, and matters drifted along until early in May, 1885. Gatewood became more insistent that the Indians should come in, and Geronimo just as determined that they should not be herded and counted like goats every morning and night.

So when the new grass was high enough to insure good feed for the Indians' ponies, the squaws of Geronimo's band bought corn from the Corn Creek Indians and made a large supply of tulpi. When the tulpi had fermented sufficiently, the squaws pounded up a radish-looking root that grew in the pine timber, and adding it to the liquid placed it again on the fire. The result was a beverage that would make a jackrabbit fight a bulldog.

It was now time to call in the Indians who were out in the hunting camps. When they had all arrived the drinking began. About 2 o'clock on the second night, Geronimo gave the order to bring in the horses and pack up. Before daylight the whole band was across Black River on the way to Mexico.

Striking across the Black River mesas, the Indians traveled through the low hills around the head of Willow Creek, and turning east, crossed Eagle Creek about six miles above the Double Circle Ranch.

The Deadly Work of the Indians Soon Became Evident.

A HUNTER named Wood Dodd was camped about one mile below where the Indians crossed the creek, but knew nothing about the outbreak until a soldier, who had been sent ahead of his troop to warn the people of the ranch, rode up the creek to see if the Indians had crossed yet, and ran onto Dodd's camp.

Dodd had been a squaw man among the Navajos. That tribe and the Apaches were enemies at that time, but both tribes speak the same language, with about the same difference that there is between the way Englishmen and Scotsmen speak English.

He knew the settlers were not expecting an Indian outbreak, because of the fact that more than half of the Chiricahua Apache tribe, men, women and children, had been killed within five years. And Geronimo himself had sent for Gen. Crook to go to Mexico to receive his surrender, and give him protection from the people of Arizona when he was returned to the reservation.

Some time before this Dodd and three others, Jim Randall, Tom Welsh and Ed Montgomery, had located squatter claims on a creek called Little Blue, about forty-five miles east of Dodd's camp on Eagle Creek. After they had built one cabin, Randall had gone to Clifton, where he owned some mining claims, and Dodd had moved over to the camp on Eagle Creek. Welsh and Montgomery were still at the cabin.

It was plain the Indians would soon strike the trail that ran from Fort Thomas, Ariz., to Fort Bayard, N. M. The cabin Dodd's partner's lived in was only a few hundred yards above where this trail crossed the Little Blue. Several hunters lived on Blue River between Eagle and the Little Blue, and about thirty-five miles east of Dodd's camp, but all were away from home except Perry Benton, who lived about three miles below where the Indians would cross the river.

If these men, who were hunters, and necessarily good marksmen, knew the Indians were out they were well able to take care of themselves. For it was hard for the Indians to get ammunition, and they seldom wasted cartridges, at either white man or game, by shooting at a distant target. Their usual custom, where their proposed victim was armed and ready, was to pass him up if they could not ambush or sneak up on him; and although they were probably the most expert people in the world at this, the American hunters were just about as expert in detecting them, when they knew there was likelihood of danger.

Dodd Makes Brave Attempt to Warn His Friends.

DODD decided to attempt to pass the Indians, and try to warn his partners and friends. He was a small, gray-whiskered Civil War veteran, and always rode and packed mules instead of horses. He saddled up his best mule and started. It was late in the evening. The soldier concluded to wait until his troop caught up, as his horse was almost exhausted.

Dodd did not expect to meet any white man on the thirty-five-mile ride to Blue River, as there was only one settler, a prospector named Smith, between Eagle and Blue. Smith had gone over to New Mexico a short time before on a trip he expected would keep him away from home several weeks.

When Dodd got to the trail it was nearly dark. It was evident the whole band of Indians had been traveling night and day in an attempt to distance the soldiers they knew would be sent after them from Forts Apache and Thomas. The trail was beaten down by the feet of hundreds of ponies, and as he rode along he passed much camp equipment that had been abandoned by the Indians, who were at least twenty-four hours ahead of him. When he arrived at the forks of the trail about three miles west of Blue River, he dismounted and, holding his hat over matches to hide the light as much as possible, examined the trails beyond the forks. It was soon apparent that the main body of Indians had followed the left-hand or main trail, but there were several pony tracks on the branch that led to Benton's cabin.

When Dodd arrived at Benton's he found and herbs supply the different glands of the body with vital, organic material to so chemicalize the accumulated wastes that they are readily eliminated.

"Many of our garden vegetables were crude herbs before they were put under cultivation. Overcultivation has robbed many of their choicest properties and it is sometimes necessary to go back to the cruder forms when we require eliminators. Herbs are vegetables. If 'medicine' has extracted their active principles and concocted therefrom poisonous, life-destroying drugs, shall we condemn the herbs? Reason is all that is required in this matter."

The Little House.

FROM my old friend, William A. Spalding, with whom I was associated on The Times, thirty-five years ago, I received a volume of verses which he has named "Snatches of Song." They are grave and gay, humorous and sad, and evince poetical spirit above the average. Here is an extract from one of them, entitled "Forty-five Years":

I mind a little house set on a hill
O'erlooking all the village and beyond;
And it was such a cozy little house,
And it was such a spacious little house,
And it was such a grand affair, all told,
Because it was our own—our very own.
And there was room to spare (for surely two Did not require so large a place) and so
We took a lodger—Happiness—to stay;
And he brought friends enough betimes
To fill the little home chock-full. E'en then,
As time winged on, there still seemed ample room
To bring another guest—and then the baby came.

Ah, well, my dear, it seems but yesterday,
And what a sweet, brief day it was! Again
I seem to stand within that sacred room
And move with muffled step and bated breath;
I see the fond girl-mother lying there,
Her white, wan face illumined with a smile
That God vouchsafes alone to motherhood
And angels. In the nurse's arms behold
Wonder of all the ages!—a new life.

But came another guest one day, unbid,
A somber guest—and set his mark upon
The lintel of our door, and entered in;
And we were poor, indeed, and desolate,
And all our merry company was gone.

Garbage Fed Hogs.

SIX members of the Los Angeles City Council voted in favor of the city's returning to hog feeding, for a period of ten years, as a method of disposing of the city's garbage.

Hog flesh is an undesirable food at best and is shunned by Jews and Mohammedans. However, when hogs are kept in cleanly quarters and fed on clean vegetable food, it is about as good as any animal food. Garbage fed hogs are filthy and disgusting, and a menace to those who eat the flesh.

A few years ago, when garbage was fed to hogs in Los Angeles, they wallowed knee deep in rotting, maggoty corruption, and many died of disease before they could be killed.

And this while we are taught to fear "germs" and are quarantined against colds and chickenpox.

Blood Tests.

AS I have heretofore said, "blood tests" are largely "bunk." Following is from the San Francisco Bulletin:

Dr. Albert Abrams's theory that the race of an individual, or the race of that individual's parents, may be decided by certain tests of the blood is still worrying the local medical fraternity.

The latest direct cause of such worry comes from a test made by Dr. Abrams of blood sent to him by Dr. C. F. Buckley, one of the senior members of the profession in San Francisco.

Dr. Abrams, on examination, found that the blood was not human, and therefore declined further to pursue investigation with regard to its racial characteristics.

Dr. Buckley, shocked and mortified, now admits that the blood he submitted to Dr. Abrams was his own blood, and wants to know, is he a fish?

"My inquiries," said Dr. Buckley, "were prompted by the recent decision in a local court of law, wherein the judge, acting upon the evidence of Dr. Abrams, decided the contested paternity of a boy.

"The case was very important from a medical point of view.

"Personally, I did not share the commonly prevalent professional belief that Dr. Abrams is, as it were, a 'faker.' I have always inclined to the theory that he was inclined to be prematurely enthusiastic over phenomena that seemed, in his eyes, to presage discoveries of great scientific value.

"The decision in the case of the boy's paternity, however, was one of such far-reaching importance—one that might fasten the paternity of any given child upon any selected father were it not proven to be wholly reliable—that I felt justified in asking Dr. Abrams for a test that would be satisfactory in one particular instance.

"Accordingly, I secured samples of blood from a perfectly healthy boy at the Wasserman Laboratory and sent them to Dr. Abrams to test them so as to determine to what race the boy belonged.

"Dr. Abrams acknowledged the receipt of the specimens in a letter dated June 9. In that letter he also stated that 'in order to make the examination more effective and conclusive it would be necessary to obtain the blood from the fathers.

"As the three specimens I had sent were all taken from the same boy, I felt that it would serve the purposes of the test if the parental blood was all taken from one individual. Accordingly, I took some specimens of my own blood and duly forwarded it.

"Dr. Abrams acknowledged the receipt of those specimens and described the result of his examination in a letter that briefly sets forth the facts as follows:

"'On examination of one of the blood specimens sent to me by you, I found that the blood did not react to human blood. I therefore made no further examination of

Hath Not an Editor

BY MAUD HART LOVELACE.

"YOU'RE a lamb," declared Victoria, ecstatically; "a little, white, soft, woolly lamb."

"Really," protested Harley Cox.

"You're an angel," pursued Victoria, waxing lavish. "You're a 'cherubim and seraphim continually do cry,' like they tell about in the prayer book."

"'Continually do cry'?" Harley Cox murmured, questioningly.

"You're a dear," she ended, breathlessly.

"Well, that's something like," he rejoined, brightening. "Why don't you marry me then?"

"Why don't I? It's the mystery of my life," returned Victoria, shrugging. "Oh, to think of meeting a real live editor!"

That Harley Cox was a dear I must concede. And the assertion "continually do cry" had elements of truth, although the cherubic and seraphic statements may be questioned. At least he had cried after Victoria persistently and consistently since the first time he saw her, and that despite the fact that Victoria just as persistently and consistently was crying after fame.

But the accusation of lamblikeness was entirely unfounded. He did not resemble a lamb in the least as he sat beside the fire in the Anderson library that glittering December afternoon. I must admit that he suffered a certain loss of dignity from endeavoring to balance a cup of tea on his finger and to avoid disposing of his wafer in one gulp. But he adored afternoon tea and only drank it to please Victoria, who adored it and asserted that it made her feel just too English for anything.

He was one of those big, strong, steady men. You know the kind I mean. A smile like sunshine and a handclasp to make your fingers tingle, a trick of rumpling his hair and of thrusting his hands into his pockets. His devotion to Victoria was complete. He was the despair of vampires and artful mothers. His tenacity was absolute. He had adhered like glue to his original intention of marrying her. Victoria was slight, fragile, temperamental, impulsive, enthusiastic and perverse. He always regarded her with the oddest mingling of tenderness, reverence and indulgence. People said that Victoria wound him around her little finger. But people are cats.

And now he had arranged for her to meet an editor! Meeting Harding, Wallace Reid and Babe Ruth would have been insipid experiences to Victoria compared to meeting an editor. All of her life she had been besieging editors with volleys of verse and prose. No billet doux held such charms for her as a slim envelope with an editor's check. Editors were being divinely endowed with the power to glorify her stories with passionate illustrations, to flaunt her name on dear, unattainable magazine covers, to herald the fame of Victoria Wren Anderson from New York to Los Angeles.

She leaned toward him with pink cheeks and luminous eyes. She had put down her cup at his first intimation of the boon he was to bestow.

"Oh, to think of meeting a real live editor!" she cried, rapturously.

"He's live, all right," replied Harley Cox, finishing the wafer with obvious relief. "There never has been a happily married couple between the covers of his magazine."

"I should hope not," said Victoria, loftily.

"It's Eustace Smith of the Spotlight."

"Eustace Smith!" exclaimed Victoria, starting up.

"And the affair is a studio tea. You know Marjorie Greenwood, the portrait painter?"

"Marjorie Greenwood!" ejaculated Victoria, wringing her hands. "My giddy hat! Harley, you insufferable slowpoke, hurry up!"

"He's an old friend of Marjorie Greenwood's," began Harley Cox, placing his cup on the tea wagon and speaking with maddening deliberation, "and he's promised that he'll come to her tea. It'll be quite a triumph for her, for he doesn't go in for that sort of thing. I know her pretty well through Harry Greaves, and she happened to tell me about it. I thought of you at once, and when I explained to her that you were a writer and that it might mean a lot to you if Eustace Smith could get a slant at you, she said for you to be sure and come. Of course, you met her that night at Harry's, but even so your mother may think it's rather raw."

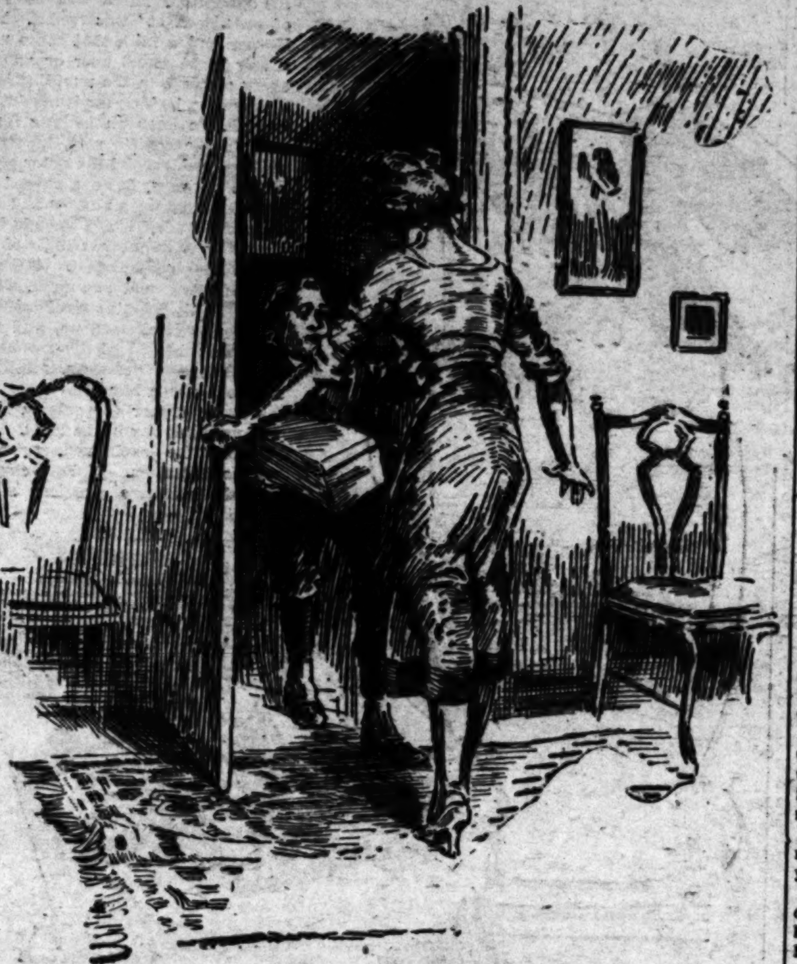
"As if that mattered!" said Victoria in fervent interjection. "As if anything in the whole world mattered, when I have a chance to meet Eustace Smith of the Spotlight!"

"It's all right, anyway," he answered positively. "It's only a studio tea. And anyone as well known as Marjorie Greenwood—Good Lord! Besides, she wrote something on her card for me to give you." He produced a bit of pasteboard. Victoria snatched at it impatiently.

"Can't you take tea with me at my studio next Friday afternoon?" the celebrated artist had scribbled in pencil across her name. "There are to be some scribblers and warblers and daubers, and we want you very much."

Victoria clapped her hands, seized the handle of the tea wagon and shook it till the dishes jazzed, grabbed the pillow which she had tucked behind her back and hurled it at Harley's head, and then raced down to the piano and dashed off the initial strains of "Little Birdie is Dead," her one musical achievement.

"A studio tea!" she shouted, jumping up again. "Eustace Smith and Marjorie Greenwood and Victoria Wren Anderson! I haven't a doubt I'll meet Mary Garden and Mary Roberts Rinehart! Why, presently people will be wearing Victoria Wren Anderson spats, and a special delegation of police will be stationed in front of my parental domicile to keep back the reporters, and I'll have to hire a stenographer to typewrite my autograph for country trade. Harley, you great, big, nice, dear lamb, you angel, you—"



She unlocked the door and little brother tumbled in.

"Don't repeat yourself," begged Harley Cox. "Call me your husband for a change, or your fiance or even your best beau."

"You're my bestest beau," said Victoria, obediently, "and I have oodles of them, too."

She subsided into the chair by the fire. Harley Cox took the precaution of wheeling the tea wagon out of harm's way.

"I wish I could take you myself," he remarked as he seated himself opposite her again. "There's a directors' meeting on Friday afternoon that sudden death couldn't excuse me from cutting. But Marjorie will see that you meet him."

"I'll see that I meet him," put in Victoria, linking her hands about her knee.

"You may not know him," suggested Harley, mildly.

"Know him!" echoed Victoria, in scorn. "I'd know him in the Fiji Islands."

"Have you ever seen him?"

"Of course not. If I'd ever seen him, I'd have nabbed him then and there. But I have an intuition as to how he looks," she added, smiling to herself.

Harley waited expectantly.

"He is young," she proceeded dreamily, gazing through half-shut eyes at the banished tea wagon. "He is young and alert, active, intensely alive. He is tall and of slender build. He has keen, pleasant eyes, horn-rimmed glasses, of course, on an aristocratic nose, and a crisp little mustache."

"Look for the label," jeered Harley Cox. "None genuine without this signature."

"I'll know him all right," Victoria went on confidently. "He'll know me, too, after Friday afternoon. Know me! He won't be able to put me out of his mind for an instant. I'll infest his thoughts and haunt his dreams. He'll attack his morning mail with feverish haste looking for something from me, and he'll carry my manuscripts around in his inside pocket."

"But, see here," Harley broke in wrathfully.

"You don't need to worry," Victoria reassured him. "There's going to be just one literary person in my family. And I'm going to be the one. But he'll know me," she repeated, spreading her fingers to the blaze.

"May I ask," Harley interposed sarcastically, "what your methods will be?"

"You may," returned Victoria graciously. "They will be very primitive. What does Shakespeare say? 'Hath not a Jew eyes? Hath not a Jew ears?' Editors have eyes and ears, I guess. That's the theory I'll work on, Harley," she said earnestly. "You never saw anything so fascinating, so intriguing, so alluring as I'll be. I'll have magnetism, an indefinable charm. My conversation will scintillate, and I'll look like Vogue."

"Wear what you have on," he advised.

Victoria gave him a pitying glance.

"This old rose-colored dress is a rag," she proclaimed. "It's falling to pieces, and it's been to the cleaner so many times I've lost count, and it's long when it should be short, and narrow when it should be wide. It belongs at the Salvation Army and I only keep it because you happen to be fond of it."

"It's the prettiest dress you have," said Harley Cox.

"On Friday," Victoria continued, reflectively, "I shall be all in white. Even my hat will be white, all soft white feathers, and my white boots will be the smartest things you ever saw. I'll wear a white taffeta frock, ruffled down to the hem, with loose sleeves ruffled down to where my hands peek out like little white mice——."

"I don't seem to remember such a gown."

"You don't. It isn't even made yet. But this is only Monday and Du Lac can hurry it up. Mamma may say I can't afford it, but I'll say I can't afford not to look my best. It would be stooping over a dollar to pick up a penny not to make the most of this opportunity. Don't you think so, really?"

"What kind of flowers shall I send?" asked Harley Cox.

But Victoria did not wear any flowers at all. She carried one rose, one gloriously crimson rose. She held it in her fingers in the most sweetly deprecatory way, as she paused in girlish timidity upon the threshold of Marjorie Greenwood's studio the following Friday afternoon. It was quite late. The scribblers and warblers and daubers were all assembled, as Victoria had intended they should be. And, also in accordance with Victoria's anticipation, they all started when they look up and saw her hesitating in the doorway.

The costume was of a delectable whiteness, the rose was of a delectable redness, and Victoria was of a most delectable demureness as she faltered at the entrance to the room.

Marjorie Greenwood—tall, brusque and kind—rose and went forward. She welcomed Victoria cordially, brought her into the circle affectionately, and eyed her benevolently as she said:

"Now, isn't she a sweet little thing? Does she look as if she had an idea in her head? Aren't you surprised to hear that she writes eight hours a day? This is Miss Anderson. It's Victoria Wren Anderson, officially, I believe.

There was a murmur of amusement, admiration and dissent. Victoria blushed and hung her head in the most appealing confusion. Then, fearful lest he get the impression that she had no sense of humor, she allowed a dimple to flicker at the corner of her mouth.

"Look up and meet these people," urged Miss Greenwood. "Some are worth meeting, and some will be, and some are supposed to be, which answers the purpose just as well."

Victoria lifted her long lashes and her wide gaze swept the circle. She saw perhaps a dozen people — several long-haired men, several short-haired women, an oldish gentleman with an air of shabbiness, a red-haired girl with a snub nose, a thin, wild-eyed creature in an apricot-colored dress, and—him. He was just exactly as she had pictured him. It was the crispest little mustache. The keen eyes were even now bent on her, somewhat quizzically, through the horn-rimmed glasses of her dreams.

Miss Greenwood launched into breezy introductions. Victoria did not even listen to them. Her eyes still held those keen ones. She waited tensely for their owner to be named.

"And Mr. Smith," said Miss Greenwood, reaching him at last, "who is an exemplary young man——"

"And who is going to get little Miss Anderson some tea and make her drink it with him over in that window seat," interrupted Mr. Smith.

"'Far from the madding crowd,'" observed the thin, wild-eyed creature in the apricot-colored dress.

"Exactly," he agreed.

Victoria permitted the dimple to flicker again. It was really going splendidly. He obtained the tea and led her away to a window seat. Then ensconced themselves cozily.

"Snow maiden!" murmured Mr. Smith.

Victoria glanced up sharply.

"Did that tribute fall involuntarily from his surprised lips?" she inquired. "If so, of course, she didn't hear it."

"It did," Mr. Smith responded readily. "But if she had heard it, what would she have said?"

Victoria pondered—then looked at him straightly.

"I'm snow and ice and fire and sunshine and color," she said with a thrill in her voice.

Mr. Smith's eyes narrowed slightly.

"And brains," he added pointedly.

"Do you prefer a woman with brains or without?" asked Victoria ingenuously and returned to her tea.

He seemed rather an astute young man. She would have found it more reassuring, though, perhaps less interesting, if he had been a bit more confiding.

Presently she lifted her eyes to his.

"I'm studying you," she informed him. "I hope you don't mind?"

"Au contraire," he assured her. "But aren't you very industrious?"

"I have to be. You see, I have you here. And I'm writing—." She broke off in some confusion, and turned the talk to Mrs. Asquith. But even young men with keen eyes

CARE OF THE BODY

CONDUCTED BY HARRY ELLINGTON BROOK, N. D.

"Divine Healing."

ONE of the foundation stones of the Christian religion is divine healing. The primary work of Jesus was healing the sick. He is known as the Great Physician.

Yet, if anybody seeks to emulate and imitate the work of Jesus, he is at once persecuted and prosecuted by the medical authorities, unless he does so under the auspices of some church organization.

Some years ago the Episcopalean church inaugurated the "Emanuel movement" of divine healing, mainly to offset the activities of the Christian Scientists, who treat disease by the simple formula of denying its existence.

The Roman Catholic church has relied mainly for "divine healing" on the asserted efficacy of saintly relics. However, I recently received a copy of a booklet by P. Gavan Duffy, priest superior S.D.C., entitled "Is Any Sick Among You?" (American Church Publishing Company, New York,) "being a manual of counsel, instruction and preparation for receiving the ministry of healing, in holy unction, or the laying on of hands, based on over twenty-one years' priestly experience of such ministering." In his introduction Father Duffy writes:

"Over twenty-one years ago I was called to anoint an epileptic. I had long believed in the unchangeableness of God's will to banish disease from the body, as well as to destroy sin in the soul, and this belief became quite clearly defined when I was still but little more than a child. Naturally, when I was ordained a priest, I taught what I believed, and within a year or two of my ordination, when ministering in a great city where I was a stranger, the request came to me, both forcefully and suddenly. I felt at the time that God was calling me, there and then, to practice what I had taught; I anointed the epileptic and his fits ceased from that hour. Since then I have ministered in many places, on both sides of the Atlantic, and given holy unction for bodily restoration to many people, suffering with divers diseases. In a number of other cases I have laid hands on the sick, in the name of Jesus, and have seen them made whole, through the divine goodness responding to the cry of faith. I have known epileptics to be restored, the lame to walk, the deaf made to hear, fevers suddenly to leave, and nervous ills to be banished. I have seen recovery brought in cases of infantile paralysis, angina pectoris, pernicious erysipelas, paralysis and other illnesses of many kinds. In all of these cases, with very few exceptions, medical men had abandoned hope; in a number of instances have worked hand in hand with the doctor and, in some cases, men eminent in the medical profession, though making little or no religious profession, have asked me to minister to their patients, where medical science was baffled; or have directed the patient to get in touch with me. Not all the people I have ministered to have recovered, but where the spiritual ministry has failed, I am convinced that the cause lay in only one thing: lack of faith to take hold of the gift of healing, which I believe is unfailingly given; and the number of failures has been, comparatively, very small."

As to inunction, or oiling, to which Father Duffy refers, for thousands of years the oiling of the body has been esteemed in oriental countries as a most helpful hygienic measure. The passage in the Epistle of St. James: "Is any among you sick? Let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord," does not refer to the mere making of the sign of a cross on the forehead, with a finger dipped in oil, but to the custom of oiling the whole body. This was usually done after a warm bath. Costly oils, mixed with perfumes, were used for this purpose by the rich.

All faith cures, whether they take the form of hypnotism or mental suggestion, or autosuggestion, or relics of a saint, or fervent prayer, or homeopathy, or sacred water, or bread pills, are forms of suggestion— the influence of a person's own mind on his own body.

There can be no possible doubt, whatever, that myriads of cures have been effected by all the methods named. At the Grotto of Lourdes, in France, and at the shrine of St. Anne de Beaupre, in Quebec, one may see thousands of crutches and other testimonials left by grateful patients.

If a person has religious faith, then suggestion should take a religious form. To those who are not religious, such suggestions will not work, but should be given "straight."

Jesus undoubtedly utilized suggestion in making his cures. His whole teaching revolved around the necessity of faith. "Thy faith has made thee whole." Without faith on the part of the patient he could do nothing.

A good illustration of the power of suggestion is furnished in that old story about the man suffering from asthma, who retired in a hotel bedroom, and during the night woke up choking. He remembered that all the windows had been closed when he went to bed, so fumbling around in the dark, tried to open what he thought was a window. At length, being unable to do so, he shattered the glass. Then he went back to bed, where he slept peacefully until daybreak. On awakening he found the window tightly closed. The glass he had shattered was in a bureau.

Thousands of similar instances might be cited, but it is unnecessary to prove that there is no need to inject the divine element.

The true physician will utilize this great power of the mind over the body. August Comte has said that doctors who bear in mind only the animal side of human nature should confine their practice to animals—they should become veterinary surgeons.

At the same time, let us avoid falling into the other extreme. To say "all is mind" is as foolish as to deny the influence of the mind over the body. Man has both body and mind—brain and brawn. Let us recognize and utilize both, in striving to achieve a high grade of efficiency, for in no other way may this be done.

In short, let us avoid extremes. That seems, for many, to be the most difficult of all things.

Then there is personal magnetism, a great force which abounds in those whose blood, unimpeded by waste matter, courses freely through their veins. Animal magnetism and health are synonymous. And that such health may be transferred from one to another is more reasonable than that one may "catch" sickness from another. Bob Ingersoll, when asked to state one of the mistakes of God, said that he should have made health instead of disease "catching." He has.

Is it any more wonderful that health should pass from one human body to another, by contact, than that the human voice should carry from the Pacific to the Atlantic?

None of these things are "miracles." None are "super-natural." There is not, nor can be, anything "super-natural," as that would be contrary to nature. "There are more things in heaven and earth than man hath dreamed in his philosophy," but they are all natural.

We underestimate the power of strong desire, whether evinced in the form of fervent prayer or otherwise. All development of species through the ages is due to this. Nor is it confined to the animal world. In "Youth" Dr. George Starr White writes:

"All evolution is the product of desire, taken in the broad sense of the word.

"Some will say that desire belongs only to animal life, but I believe that vegetation also possesses that attribute. Appetite is one of the meanings given for desire, and we know that plants have an appetite for water, or their special food. This is well illustrated by the manner in which the roots reach out for the food the plant desires. I once dug up the skeleton of a horse, buried years before. While digging it up I found some roots, and as no vegetation was anywhere near the spot, I looked around to see when the roots came. I finally traced them hundreds of feet away, to a grape vine. The 'soul' of this grape vine must have had a desire for some of the elements in that skeleton, or it would not have sent its tentacles that great distances to obtain it.

"Recently I had some excavation done where water had drained for several years. In this excavation I found roots of palm trees that were nearly 200 feet distant. The palm trees desired water, and by some unexplained force they were able to push their roots out through the hard adobe soil until they reached this place where the ground was wet. Had there been no water poured there these roots would never have gone there, because where there was no water there were no roots."

There are pretenders and fakers in all branches of human activity, but it is unreasonable and irrational to persecute and prosecute faith healers because some die under their ministration, so long as we permit "medical science" to slay thousands by drugs and dope and operations.

However, all "cures" effected in such manner are merely temporary if the wrong mode of life that has produced the disease is persisted in. You cannot thus escape the inevitable consequences of your physical sins. The only permanent cure is to cease to do that which makes you sick. This involves patience, perseverance and self-denial. There is no other way, nor will there ever be any other way.

Weight and Health.

IN A press dispatch from Washington announcing the appointment of ex-President Taft to the Supreme Court bench, the correspondent said:

"Mr. Taft is in his 64th year, and is said by his friends to be in robust health, despite the fact that he has lost considerable weight since he left the Presidency."

This shows the prevailing ignorance in regard to health. For "despite" you should substitute "because of."

Herbs.

FOLLOWING is from the Herald of Health:

"A new health publication in a recent issue, refers to us as a hypocrite for carrying herb advertisements when we profess to be drugless.

"Sebastion Kneipp, one of the greatest natural physicians of recent times, used herbs but condemned drugs. The practice of herbalism in England is outside of the practice of medicine. Nonpoisonous herbs vary little from our common garden vegetables, such as celery, parsley, onions, etc., and can be used to good advantage, on occasion, to supply certain needs of the body. The principle behind the use of these simple remedies is quite different from the administration of poisonous and metallic drugs, which contain no vital principle and cannot be metabolized by the animal body. But as Omar the poet expressed it, perhaps a hair divides the false from true, and for one who is educated to the use of powerful drugs it would be a hard matter to find this hair line.

"It does not worry us to be called a hypocrite by one who does not understand how nature cures. It is not therapeutic substances or treatments that cure, but the forces of the body through its natural power of reaction. Cure is brought about through the elimination of encumberance and the raising of vitality. Anything which operates to the contrary — lowering vitality or increasing encumbrance—is detrimental and acts to prevent the cure. Fruits, vegetables

The Sun Gazer

BY CHARLES G. D. ROBERTS.

To Jim Horner, it seemed as if the great white-headed eagle was in some way the uttered word of the mountain and the lake—of the lofty, solitary, granite-crested peak, and of the deep, solitary water at its base. As his canoe raced down the last mad rapid, and seemed to snatch breath again as it floated out upon the still water of the lake, Jim would rest his paddle across the gunwales and look up expectantly. First his keen, far-sighted gray eyes would sweep the blue arc of the sky, in search of the slow circling of wide, motionless wings. Then, if the blue was empty of this far shape, his glance would range at once to a dead pine standing sole on a naked and splintered shoulder of the mountain—which he knows as "Old Baldy." There he was almost sure to see the great bird sitting, motionless and majestic, staring at the sun. Floating idly and smoking, resting after his long battle with the rapids, he would watch, till the immensity and solitude would creep in upon his spirit and oppress him. Then, at last, a shrill yelp, far off and faint, but sinister, would come from the pine-top; and the eagle, launching himself on open wings from his perch, would either wheel upward into the blue, or flap away over the serried fir-tops to some ravine in the cliffs that hid his nest.

One day, when Jim came down the river and stopped, as usual, to look for the great bird, he scanned in vain both sky and cliffside. At last he gave up the search, and paddled down the lake with a sense of loss. Something had vanished from the splendor of the solitude. But presently he heard, close overhead, the beat and whistle of vast wings; and looking up he saw the eagle passing above him, flying so low that he could catch the hard, unwinking, tameless stare of its black and golden eyes as they looked down upon him with a sort of inscrutible challenge. He noted also a peculiarity which he had never seen before in any other eagle. This one had a streak of almost black feathers immediately over its left eye, giving it a heavy and sinister eyebrow. The bird carried in the clutch of its talons a big, glistening lake trout, probably snatched from the fish-hawk; and Jim was able to take note of the very set of its pinion-feathers as the wind hummed in their tense webs. Flying with a massive power quite unlike the ease of his soaring, the eagle mounted gradually up the steep, passed the rocky shoulder with its watch-tower pine, and disappeared over the edge of a ledge which looked to Horner like a mere scratch across the face of the high mountains.

"That's where his nest is, sure!" muttered Horner to himself. And remembering that cold challenge in the bird's yellow stare, he suddenly decided that he wanted to see the eagle's nest. He had plenty of time. He was in no particular hurry to get back to the settlement and the gossip of the crossroads store. He turned his canoe to land, lifted her out and hid her in the bushes, and struck back straight for the face of Old Baldy.

The lower slope was difficult to climb; a tangle of tumbled boulders and fallen trunks, mantled in the soundless gloom of the fir forest. Skilled woodsman though he was, Horner's progress was so slow, and the windless heat became so oppressive to his impatience, that he was beginning to think of giving up the idle venture, when suddenly he came face to face with a perpendicular and impassable wall of cliff. This curt arrest to his progress was just what was needed to stiffen his wavering resolution. He understood the defiance which his ready fancy had read in the stare of the eagle. Well, he had accepted the challenge. He would not be baffled by a rock. If he could not climb over it, he would go round it; but he would find the nest.

With an obstinate look in his eyes, Horner began to work his way along the foot of the cliff, toward the right. Taking advantage of every inch of ascent that he could gain, he at last found, to his satisfaction, that he had made sufficient height to clear the gloom of the woods. As he looked out over their tops a light breeze cooled his wet forehead, and he pressed on with fresh vigor. Presently the slope grew a trifle easier, the foothold surer, and he mounted more rapidly. The steely lake, and the rough-ridged, black green sea of the fir tops, began to unroll below him. At last he rounded an elbow of the steep; and there, before him, upthrust perhaps a hundred feet above his head, stood the outlying shoulder of rock, crowned with its dead pine, on which he was accustomed to see the eagle sitting. Even as he looked, motionless, there came a rushing of great wings, and suddenly, there was the eagle himself, erect on his high perch, and staring, as it seemed to Horner, straight into the sun.

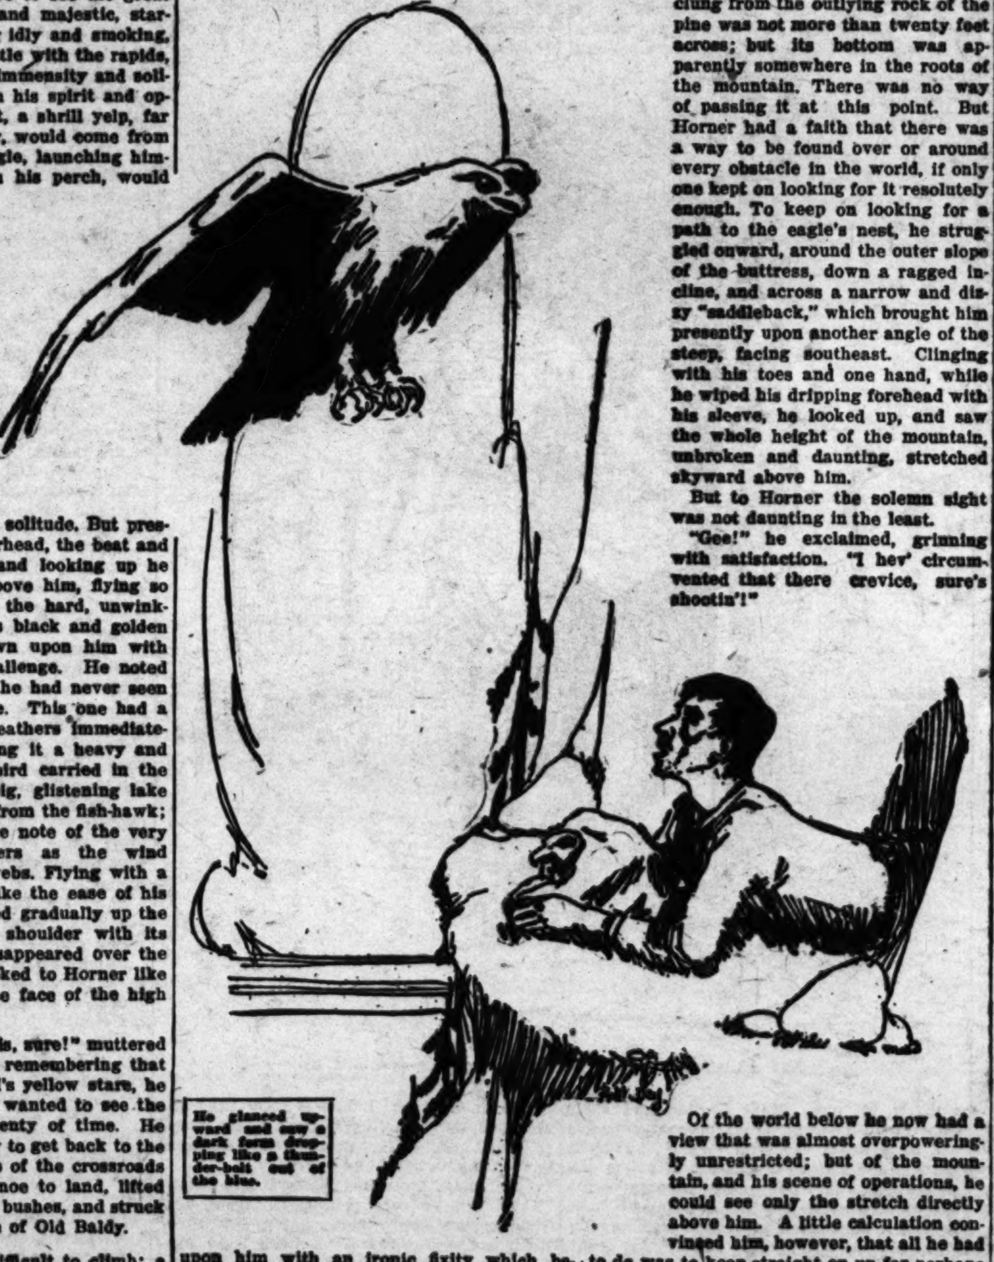
When Horner resumed his climbing, the great bird turned his head, and gazing down upon him with an ironic fixity which betrayed neither dread nor wonder. Concluding that the nest would be lying somewhere within view of its owner's watch tower, Horner now turned his efforts towards reaching the dead pine. With infinite difficulty, and with a few bruises to arm and leg, he managed to cross the jagged crevice which partly separated the jutting rockpier from the main face of the cliff. Then, laboriously and doggedly, he dragged himself up the splintered slope, still being forced around to the right, till there fell away below him a gulf into which it was not good for the nervous to look. Feeling that a fate very different from that of Lot's wife might be his if he should let himself look back too indiscreetly, he kept his eyes upon the lofty goal and pressed on upwards with a haste that now grew a trifle feverish. It began to seem to him that the irony of the eagle's changeless stare might perhaps not be unjustified.

Not till Horner had conquered the steep and, panting but elated, gained the very foot of the pine, did the eagle stir. Then, spreading his wings with a slow disdain, as if not dread but aversion to this unbidden visitor bade him go, he launched himself on a long, splendid sweep over the gulf, and then mounted on a spacious spiral to his inaccessible outlook in the blue. Leaning against the bleached and scarred trunk of the pine, Horner watched this majestic departure for some minutes, recovering his breath and drinking deep the cool and vibrant air. Then he turned, and scanned the face of the mountain.

There it lay, in full view—the nest which he had climbed so far to find. It was not more than 100 yards away. Yet, at first sight, it seemed hopelessly out of reach. The chasm separating the ledge on which it clung from the outlying rock of the pine was not more than twenty feet across; but its bottom was apparently somewhere in the roots of the mountain. There was no way of passing it at this point. But Horner had a faith that there was a way to be found over or around every obstacle in the world, if only one kept on looking for it resolutely enough. To keep on looking for a path to the eagle's nest, he struggled onward, around the outer slope of the buttress, down a ragged incline, and across a narrow and dizzy "saddleback," which brought him presently upon another angle of the steep, facing southeast. Clinging with his toes and one hand, while he wiped his dripping forehead with his sleeve, he looked up, and saw the whole height of the mountain, unbroken and daunting, stretched skyward above him.

But to Horner the solemn sight was not daunting in the least.

"Gee!" he exclaimed, grinning with satisfaction. "I hev' circumvented that there crevice, sure's shootin'!"



He glanced upward and saw a dark form dropping like a thunder-bolt out of the blue.

Of the world below he now had a view that was almost overpoweringly unrestricted; but of the mountain, and his scene of operations, he could see only the stretch directly above him. A little calculation convinced him, however, that all he had to do was to keep straight on up for perhaps 150 feet, then as soon as the slope would permit, work around to his left, and descend upon the nest from above. Incidentally, he made up his mind that his return journey should be made by another face of the mountain—any other, rather than that by which he had rashly elected to come.

It seemed to Horner like a mile, that last 150 yards, but at last he calculated that he had gained enough in height. At the same time he felt the slope grow easier. Making his way to the left, he came upon a narrow ledge, along which he could move easily sidewise, by clinging to the rock. Presently it widened to a path by which he could walk almost at ease, with the wide, wild solitude, dark green laced with silver watercourses, spread like a stupendous amphitheater far below him. It was the wilderness which he knew so well in detail, yet had never before seen as a whole; and the sight, for a few moments, held him in a kind of awed surprise. When he tore his gaze free from the majestic spectacle—there, some ten or twelve yards below his feet, he saw the object of his quest.

It was nothing much to boast of in the way of architecture, this nest of the King of the Air—a mere cartload of sticks and bark and coarse grass, apparently tumbled at haphazard upon the narrow ledge. But, in fact, its foundations were skillfully wedged into the crevices of the rock, its structure was so cunningly interwoven, that the fiercest winds which scourged that lofty seat were powerless against it. It was a secure throne, no matter what tempests might rage around it.

Sitting half erect on the nest were two eaglets, almost full grown, and so nearly full feathered that Horner wondered why they did not take wing at his approach. He did not know that the period of helplessness with these younglings of royal birth lasted even after they looked as big and well able to take care of themselves as their parents. It was a surprise to him, also, to see that they were quite unlike their parents in color, being black all over from head to tail, instead of a rich brown with snow-white head, neck and tail. As he stared, he slowly realized that the mystery of the rare "black eagle" was explained. He had seen one, once, flying heavily just above the treetops, and imagined it a discovery of his own. But now he reached the just conclusion that it had been merely the youngster in its first plumage.

As he stared, the two young birds returned his gaze with interest, watching him with steady, yellow, undaunted eyes from under their flat, fierce brows. With high-shouldered wings half raised, they appeared quite ready to resent any familiarity which the strange intruder might be contemplating.

Horner lay face downward on his ledge and studied the perpendicular rock below him for a way to reach the next. He had no very definite idea what he wanted to do when he got there; possibly, if the undertaking seemed feasible, he might carry off one of the royal brood and amuse himself with trying to domesticate it. But, at any rate, he hoped to add something, by a closer inspection, to his rather inadequate knowledge of eagles.

And this hope, indeed, he learned the next moment, was not unjustified. Cautiously he was lowering himself over the edge, feeling for the scanty and elusive foothold, when all at once the air was filled with a rush of mighty wings, which seemed to overwhelm him. A rigid wing-tip buffeted him so sharply that he lost his hold on the ledge. With a yell of consternation, which caused his assailant to veer off, startled, he fell backwards, and plunged down straight upon the next.

It was the nest only that saved him from instant death. Tough and elastic, it broke his fall; but at the same time its elasticity threw him off, and on the rebound he went rolling and bumping on down the steep slopes below the ledge, with the screaming of the eagles in his ears, and a sickening sense in his heart that the sunlit world tumbling and turning somersaults before his blurred sight was his last view of life. Then, to his dim surprise, he was brought up with a thump; and clutching desperately at a bush which scraped his face, he lay still. At the same moment a flapping mass of feathers and fierce claws landed on top of him, but only to scramble off again as swiftly as possible with a hoarse squawk. He had struck one of the young eagles in his fall, hurled it from the nest, and brought it down with him to this lower ledge which had given him so timely a refuge.

For several minutes, perhaps, he lay clutching the bush desperately and staring straight upwards. There he saw both parent eagles whirling excitedly, screaming and staring down at him; and then the edge of the nest, somewhat dilapidated by his strange assault, overhanging the ledge about thirty feet above him. At length his wits came back to him, and he cautiously turned his head to see if he was in danger of falling if he should relax his hold on the bush. He was in bewildering pain, which seemed distributed all over him; but in spite of it he laughed aloud, to find that the bush, to which he hung so desperately, was in a little hollow on a spacious ledge, from which he could not have fallen by any chance. At that strange, uncomprehended sound of human laughter the eagles ceased their screaming for a few moments, and whirled further aloof.

With great difficulty and anguish Horner raised himself to a sitting position and tried to find out how seriously he was hurt. One leg was quite helpless. He felt it all over and came to the conclusion that it was not actually broken; but for all the uses of a leg, for the present at least, it might as well have been putty, except for the fact that it pained him abominably. His left arm and shoulder, too, seemed to be little more than useless incumbrances, and he wondered how so many bruises and sprains could find place on one human body of no more than average size. However, having assured himself, with infinite relief, that there were no bones broken, he set his teeth grimly and looked about to take account of the situation.

II.

The ledge on which he had found refuge was apparently an isolated one, about fifty or sixty feet in length and vanishing with the face of the sheer cliff at either end. It had a width of perhaps twenty-five feet; and its surface, fairly level, held some soil in its rocky hollows. Two or three dark green seedling firs, and a slim young silver birch, a patch or two of wind-beaten grass, and some clumps of harebells, azure as the clear sky overhead, softened the bareness of this tiny, high-flung terrace. In one spot, at the back, a spread of intense green and a handbreadth of moisture on the rock showed where a tiny spring oozed from a crevice to keep this lonely oasis in the granite alive and fresh.

At the farthest edge of the shelf and eyeing him with savage dread, sat the young eagle, which had fallen with him. Horner noticed, with a kind of sympathy, that even the bird, for all his wings, had not come out of the affair without some damage; for one of its black wings was not held up so snugly as the other. He hoped it was not broken. As he mused vaguely upon this unimportant question his pain so exhausted him that he sank back, and lay once more staring up at the eagles, who were still wheeling excitedly over the nest. In an exhaustion that was partly sleep and partly coma his eyes closed. When he opened them again the sun was hours lower and far advanced toward the west, so that the ledge was in shadow. His head was not perfectly clear and his first thought was of getting himself back to the canoe. With excruciating effort he dragged himself to the edge of the terrace and looked down. The descent, at this point, was all but perpendicular for perhaps a hundred feet. In full possession of his powers he would find it difficult enough. In his present state, he saw clearly that he might just as well throw himself over as attempt it.

Not yet disheartened, however, he dragged himself slowly toward the other end of the terrace, where the young eagle sat watching him. As he approached, the bird lifted its wings, as if about to launch himself over and dare the element which he had not yet learned to master. But one wing drooped, as if injured, and he knew the attempt would be fatal. Opening his beak angrily, he hopped away to the other end of the terrace. But Horner was paying no heed to birds at that moment. He was staring down the steep, and realizing that this ledge, which had proved his refuge was now his prison, and not unlikely to become also his tomb.

Sinking back against a rock, and grinding his teeth with pain, he strove to concentrate his attention upon the problem which confronted him. Was he to die of hunger on this high solitude before he could recover sufficiently to climb down? The thought stirred all his dogged determination. He would keep alive, and that was all there was about it. He would get well; and then the climbing down would be no great matter. This point settled, he dismissed it from his consideration, and turned his thoughts to ways and means. After all there was that little thread of a spring, trickling from the rock. He would have enough to drink. And as for food—how much worse it would have been had the ledge been a bare piece of rock! Here he had some grass, and the roots of herbs and bushes. A man could keep himself alive on such things, if he had will enough. And, as a last resort, there was the young eagle! This idea, however, was anything but attractive to him; and it was with eyes of good will rather than of appetite that he glanced at his fellow prisoner sitting motionless at the other extremity of the ledge.

"It'll be hard lines, pardner, ef I should hev' to eat you, after all!" he muttered with a twisted kind of grin. "We're both of us [illegible] long as I kin!"

As he mused, a great shadow passed over his head, and looking up he saw one of the eagles hovering low above the ledge. It was the male, his old acquaintance staring down at him under that strange, black brow. He carried a fish in his talons, and was plainly anxious to feed his captive young, but not quite ready to approach this mysterious man-creature who had been able to invade his eyrie as if with wings. Horner lay as still as a stone, watching through half-closed lids. The young eagle, seeing food so near, opened its beak wide and croaked eagerly; while the mother bird, larger but wilder and less resolute than her mate, circled aloof with sharp cries of warning. At last, unable any longer to resist the appeals of his hungry youngster, the great bird swooped down over him, dropped the fish fairly into his clutches, and slanted away with a hurried flapping which betrayed his nervousness.

As the youngster fell ravenously upon his meal, tearing and gulping the fragments, Horner drew a deep breath.

"That's where I come in, pardner," he explained. "When I kin git up an appetite for that sort of vittles, I'll go shares with you, ef y'aint got no objection!"

Having conceived this idea, Horner was seized with a fear that the captive might presently gain the power of flight and get away. This was a thought under which he could not lie still. In his pocket he always carried a bunch of stout salmon-twine and a bit of copper rabbit-wire, apt to be needed in a hundred forest emergencies. He resolved to catch the young eagle and tether it to a bush.

His first impulse was to set about this enterprise at once. With excruciating effort he managed to pull off his heavy woolen hunting shirt, intending to use it as the toreador uses his mantle, to entangle the dangerous weapons of his adversary. Then he dragged himself across to the other end of the ledge, and attempted to corner the captive. For this he was not quite quick enough, however. With a flop and a squawk the bird eluded him; and he realized that he had better postpone the undertaking till the morrow. Crawling back to his hollow by the bush he sank down utterly exhausted. Not till the sharp chill which comes with sunset warned him of its necessity, was he able to grapple with the long, painful problem of getting his shirt on again.

Through the night he got some broken sleep, though the hardness of his bed aggravated every hurt he had suffered. On the edge of dawn he saw the male eagle come again, this time more confidently and deliberately, to feed the captive. After he was gone Horner tried to move, but found himself now, from the night's chill and the austerity of his bed, altogether helpless. Not till the sun was high enough to warm him through and through, and not till he had manipulated his legs and arms assiduously for more than an hour, did his body feel as if it could ever again be of any service to him. Then, he once more got off his shirt and addressed himself to the catching of the indignant bird whom he had elected to be his preserver.

Though the anguish caused by every movement was no less intense than it had been the afternoon before, he was stronger now and more in possession of his faculties. Before starting the chase, he cut a strip from his shirt to wind around the leg of the young eagle, in order that he might be able to tether it tightly without cutting the flesh. The bird had suddenly become most precious to him!

Very warily he made his approach, sidling down the ledge so as to give his quarry the least possible room for escape. As he drew near the bird turned and faced him, its one uninjured wing lifted menacingly and its formidable beak wide open. Holding the heavy shirt ready to throw, Horner crept up cautiously, so intent now upon the game that the anguish in the leg which he dragged stiffly behind him was almost forgotten. The young bird, meanwhile, waited motionless and vigilant, its savage eyes hard as glass.

At last a faint quiver and shrinking in the bird's form, an involuntary contracting of the feathers, gave warning to Horner's experienced eye that it was about to spring aside. On the instant he flung the shirt, keeping hold of it by the sleeve. By a singular piece of luck, upon which he had not counted at all, it opened as he threw it, and settled right over the bird's neck and disabled wing, blinding and baffling it completely. With a muffled squawk it bounced into the air, both talons outspread and clawing madly; but in a second Horner had it by the other wing, pulling it down, and rolling himself over it so as to smother those dan-

the Indians had thrown everything they did not want to take with them out of the cabin. There was no sign of Benton, and after Dodd had hallooed several times and received no answer, he went on up the creek to where the main trail crossed and ran zigzagging up a long and steep hill.

Just before he got to the top of the hill his mule snorted, and shied off to one side of the trail. Dodd turned the mule's head toward the object it seemed to be frightened at, and driving his spurs into the animal's ribs, tried to ride him up to it. He was sure it was some white man the Indians had killed, as there was no likelihood of Indians stopping in such a place, and if an Indian had been killed there his companions would have taken the body away where no white man would have been likely to find it.

Finds Body of One of His Friends in the Brush.

THE mule balked, and Dodd dismounted and walked over to the white-looking object he could see against the hillside. It was Smith. He had been shot, his skull crushed in with rocks, and his clothing removed. The body had been thrown on a clump of Spanish bayonet. He had evidently been on his way home when he was ambushed by the Indians, but the fact that the body was mutilated was proof that he had lived long enough after being shot, from ambush, to do some damage to the Indians.

Dodd remounted and rode on. When he had traveled another mile he was at the summit of another hill. Here he found another white man's body lying near the trail. It was a German named Leuter, one of two brothers who had brought in a small bunch of cattle and built a cabin on a small stream at the foot of the hill ahead. This man's, Bob Leuter's, head had been crushed in with rocks after he had been killed with rifle shots. Upon reaching the foot of the hill Dodd rode over to the cabin and found Jim Leuter dead on his blankets. He had evidently been lying asleep on some blankets he had spread in the shade of the house, and had slept so soundly he had not heard the shots fired by his brother and the Indians.

It was about three miles further to the Little Blue. When Dodd got to the place where the trail crossed that creek he found another prospector's body lying beside the dead ashes of the camp fire. Who this man was, was never known.

Dodd turned up the creek and was soon at the cabin. As was customary with the Apaches, they had destroyed almost everything they could not take with them, except the house. They had two reasons for not burning houses. One was that at some previous time they had set fire to a white man's cabin and the smoke had enabled soldiers, who might otherwise have missed them, to find and attack the war party; the other was because of the superstition that it was unlucky to burn a human habitation unless some relative of the person who applied the match had died in it.

The writer knew of but one house being burned during all of the Juh and Geronimo campaigns. And the luck spell worked to perfection at that time. For the soldiers who were following the Indians' trail, and were just making camp for the night, saw the light made by the burning cabin and, re- [illegible]

Caught Sight of the Indians in the Early Morning Light.

HERE again Dodd hallooed until he was sure Montgomery and Welsh had either escaped or were out in the woods, dead. He decided to go on to Alma, a small settlement just across the New Mexican line, and warn the people of the outbreak. The trail led through very rough country for a mile or so, and then came out on an almost level mesa, about twelve miles wide. When Dodd got out on top of this mesa he saw the camp fires of the Indians, off to the north of the trail, about three miles. They were getting breakfast, for it was now nearly daylight.

Examining the trail, he found they had left it as soon as they had got on top of the mesa; and their tracks were pointed toward the crossing of the Frisco River several miles above Alma.

Hurrying on, he arrived at Alma about 9 o'clock in the morning and told his story. Two cowboys who had just arrived in town said they would go up the river and try to notify the few settlers who lived above Alma of the nearness of the Indians. Their bodies were found that afternoon in the place where the Indians crossed the river.

Dodd had ridden his mule through a very rough, brushy and mountainous country, about sixty-five miles since he had left his camp on Eagle Creek. He was an old man and pretty well exhausted. One of the settlers took him to his home and after the womenfolk had cooked him a good breakfast he went to sleep.

Queer Names.

The appearance in the divorce court of a witness who, when sworn, had to admit that his rightful name was Jolly Death, makes one wonder how children thus burdened can be expected to honor their parents. The registers at Somerset House contain other appalling entries, such as: Boadicea Basher, Happy Jiggins, Haystack Brown, Anno Domini Davis, Judas Iscariot Burton, Ananias Cutting, Odious Heaton, Bovril Simpson, Sardine Box Joscoe, Ann Reynolds, River Jordan, Not Wanted Smith, One-Too-Many Simpson. Mrs. Andrew Lang relates that she once knew a courier whose children were named after the places where the father happened to be when he heard of their births. There were a St. Petersburg and a Naples, Kattogat and Skaggerak were the twins, while the only daughter was named Vienna.—[Manchester Guardian.

But a Poor Bargain.

Charles broke the spell as in a dejected tone of voice, he said:

"Miss Glaser, I love you, but dare not dream of calling you mine. Yesterday I was worth $50,000, but today, by a turn of fortune's wheel, I have but a few paltry hundreds to call my own. I would not ask you to accept me in my reduced state. Farewell, forever!"

As Charles was about to stride mournfully away she caught him and eagerly cried:

"Good gracious! Reduced like that! What a bargain! Of course I take you! You might have known I couldn't resist!"—[Exchange.

PROLOGUE:

CHO. (recites:) When Solomon allowed as how there were no sub-solar novelties, Solomon spoke winged words. . . . they will tell you in California between remarks on the climate that the cafeteria style of eating is original with them. . . . is it? . . . about as original with them as the climate. . . . we are merely devoluting to the manners and customs of our shaggy eared ancestors. . . . when old Oswald Flintax wanted bear meat did he sit in his cave and wait for somebody to serve it to him? . . . he went out and got it: Self Service! . . . when we are hungry do we sit in our apartments and wait? . . . we go to a cafeteria: Self Service! . . . which shows that Oswald Flintax in his apartmentlike cave was just as modern as Peter E. Potter in his cavelike apartment.

The Potter—Pa, Ma, Mamie, Bill and the Baby—have come in for the evening meal. Ma has gone ahead to reserve the table and mind the baby while the rest of them tote the trays. The Lord helps those who help themselves in a cafeteria.

MAMIE: Why do they make the trays so hot?
On a summer's day
I love a tray
That's nice and warm to carry . . . not!

BILL: C'mon, speed up; you're delaying the game—
You don't have to park the salad, Mame!
If you want some lettuce pick it and grab it.
You and your lettuce . . . you eat like a rabbit.

PA: You'd think you were home the way you crab;
Make up your mind what you want and grab.

MAMIE (to girl:)
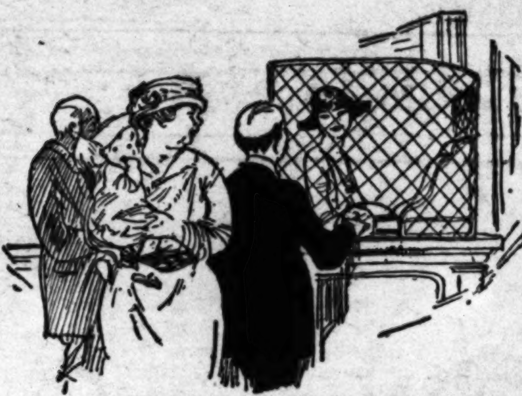
I don't see a thing I want . . . O, dear!
Have you anything else besides what's here?

GIRL: Here's a nice beef stew . . . here's nice boiled rice . . .



"How do you do, Mr. Potter."

Here's nice pot roast . . . the fish is nice . . .

BILL: If the fish is nice you shouldn't mind;
I do hate fish that's unrefined.

PA: What makes you two so blooming slow?
C'mon, let's go . . . c'mon, let's go.

MAMIE (takes ripe olives and moves on up to the dessert counter:)
(muses) Shall I eat pie or shall I not?
(aloud) Will you tell me, please, what pie you've got?

(Note: It's all laid out there in front of her. . . . but she always asks just the same. . . . so do you.)

GIRL: applepeachrasbluberrypineapplecustard lemoncreamwurzwurzwurzwurzwurz.

MAMIE: New York ice cream is very nice,
But I think I'll take a pineapple ice.

GIRL: N'Yorkchoc'latev'nillystrawb'rypeachchoc'late v'nilly.

MAMIE: I don't think I want any pie, anyway . . .
Have you got any New York cream today?

BILL (who has some of everything in the place on his tray and has just caught up:)
Are you here yet? For the love of Mike!
Why don't you glom your food and hike?

MAMIE (looking Bill's tray over:)
Speaking of glomming food, old kid,
You glommed a few . . . I'll say you did.

BILL (indignantly:)
G'wan and nibble your lettuce and ice.
A man wants to eat when he's got the price.

MAMIE: It calls itself a man . . . har! har!
It's a little pig, that's what it are.

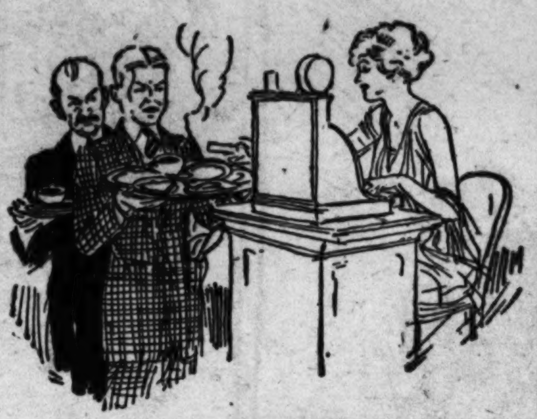
PA: There's other people here, you know;
Grab your food . . . c'mon, let's go.

(So Mamie gets some root beer and moves on up to the lightning calculator, who looks at her tray once and gives her the sad tidings. Bill staggers up next. His imagination is bigger than his appetite. . . . it always is in a cafeteria. . . . but nothing staggers the blonde calculator with the tanglefoot memory and the mouse trap mind. . . . one glance and she has it all figured out to the third decimal. . . . how do they get that way? . . . Einstein, ho! ho! . . . how long would he last figuring up the trays at the cafeteria toll gate? . . . Pa is last but not forgotten. . . . Bill and Mamie have thoughtfully left their checks behind for him to gather up.)

MAMIE: What happened to Ma, y'spose?

BILL: How should I know? Ask dad, he knows!

(Ma, with that unerring feminine instinct for making it more difficult for the male, has climbed up into the balcony and reserved a table in the farthest corner. To this



"Will you tell me, please, what pie you got?"

Pa, Bill and Mamie are now steering their hazardous way. Of course Bill's coffee and Pa's is lapping gently all over the tray by this time.)

MA (to Pa:)
See if they've got a high chair here,
Then get two glasses of water, dear . . .
Then get our food . . . here, take your tray;
I'll watch the child while you're away . . .

PA: Where can I find a high chair, eh?
Just hold the kid in your lap, I'd say . . .
(picks up tray)
Another trip! My poor old feet!
Wattle I bring you two to eat?

MA: You needn't bring me an awful lot . . .
Let's see . . . let's see, now . . . what have they got?

PA: What have they got? What haven't they got!
If you think I'll recite the list, I'll not.

MA (meditatively:)
Well, let's see, now . . . for the baby . . . rice pudding—have they got nice rice pudding? Is it well cooked? Be sure it's well cooked . . . rice should always be well cooked . . . and let me see—yes, mashed potatoes with gravy on them . . . be sure the potatoes are well cooked . . . potatoes should always be well cooked . . . and milk, if it's pasteurized . . . but of course it's pasteurized . . . you might ask them . . . now, don't forget . . . some nice rice pudding and some nice mashed potatoes with gravy on them.

PA: You mean with nice gravy on them, don't you?

MA (ignoring the interruption:)
. . . and a nice bottle of milk . . . and you can bring me . . . Oh, let me see . . . just bring me anything that you think I'd like, but don't bring me anything too heavy, just something light and nice . . . well, you know.

(Yes, he does! But he goes anyway. . . . experience has taught him he wouldn't get any more definite instructions in an hour.)

PA (exit grumbling with tray:)
She picks the balcony every time;
She certainly loves to see me climb . . .
. . . . (bluh!-bluh!-bluh!-bluh! . . . goes downstairs talking to himself.)

BILL (to Mamie:)
I'm not crowding you, am I? Why don't you move your tray?

MAMIE: You've got all the food in the place now. Do you want all the room, too?

BILL: Just for that I've got a good mind not to give you the ripe olives I brought along for you.

MAMIE (slightly touched by Bill's unexpected thoughtfulness:)
You remembered I liked ripe olives? Well, that was sweet of you.

BILL: Aw, don't get mushy.

MA (looking at Mamie's tray:)
What have you got there? Ripe olives, a silly little ice . . . and root beer? Why don't you eat something? It's a wonder you're not dead.

MAMIE: Bill eats enough for both of us.

MA (to Baby;)
Here, take that napkin out of your mouth . . . a wonder your father wouldn't hurry up . . . the poor child is starving.

BILL: Give him some of your root beer, Mamie.

PA (staggers in with tray:)
Well, here you are; I hope this'll do . . .
Here, Ma, I brought you some nice beef stew.

MA: What else could one expect from you?
You know I just can't stand beef stew . . .

PA (ignoring interruption:)
And here's potatoes and milk and rice . . .
I hope for the love of Mike they're nice.
(to Mamie)
I saw something there you like to eat,
So I brought 'em along to give you a treat.
(One guess. . . . that's right. . . . ripe olives.)

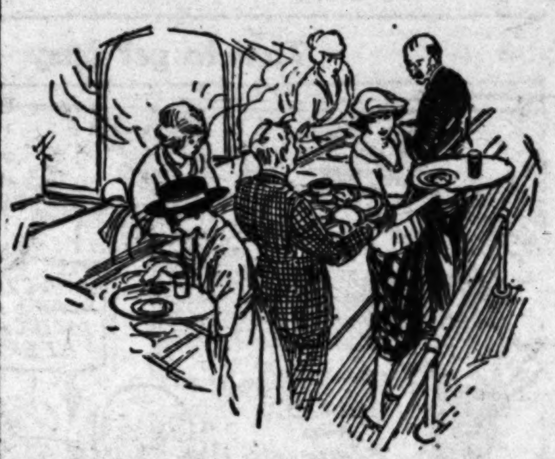
MA: Of course you bring ripe olives, too;
That's just what I'd expect from you . . .
Here, clear this off . . . take away the tray;
Get us some water right away . . .
Hurry up, Pa, don't be so slow . . .

PA: When do I eat, I'd like to know? . . .
I didn't come here to be chased to death—
Let me sit down and catch my breath.

(But he doesn't get to sit down. . . . he takes the tray and starts downstairs for the water, not realizing there's a fountain right around the post on the balcony.)

Another climb! My poor old feet . . .
When do I get a chance to eat?

(Everything comes to an end some time, even a cafeteria meal. Ma, with the assistance of Pa, Bill and Mamie, gets the baby's wraps on, and they all file down past the cashier's desk. Pa, as befits the head of the house, brings up the tail end of the procession.)



"You glommed a few—I'll say you did."

CASHIER: Hurry up, please; hurry up, please . . . sixty-three out of two dollars . . . forty-six out of a dollar . . . hurry up, please . . . yes, it's a nice day . . . don't brag about it; you had nothing to do with it . . . they're a penny apiece . . . yes, two of them would be two cents . . . hurry up, please . . . (to Pa) How do you do, Mr. Potter . . . yes, two twenty-three out of five . . . where have you been keeping yourself? . . . I'm glad to see you again . . . well, g'bye . . . hurry up, please . . . hurry up.

MA (on street to Pa:)
She seems to know you pretty well;
What's her name, or won't you tell?

PA: She used to work where I used to eat . . .
(wearily) Gosh, I'm tired . . . Oh, my feet!

"You glommed a few. . . . I'll say you did."
"When do I eat, I'd like to know?"

MA: Funny you can't remember her name . . .
She seems to know you just the same . . .
Here, carry the child across the street.

PA: Gosh, I'm tired . . . Oh, my feet!

(And that's that.)

THE HOW IN HOUSES

HOW TO PLAN HOW TO BUY HOW TO SAVE

THE BATHROOM COMPLETE.

ANCIENT Roman bathrooms were marvels of elegance and beauty but even they didn't equal the modern American bathroom in convenience and sanitation. No other room in the house has a more continuous, universal or personal effect on the comfort of the entire household. If the people of the world are divided into two groups of those who take a cold bath every morning and those who do not, the former group is certainly the happier.

In planning an ideal bathroom the following need special consideration—walls, floor, fixtures, heating, lighting, ventilation and supply closets.

Spotless and Glistening Must be All Bathroom Adjuncts.

THE walls and floor admit of several treatments, but possibly the most popular, although rather more expensive, finish is tile. It gives the appearance of spotless and glistening cleanliness and reduces to the minimum the effort required to keep it in good order. This tile need not necessarily be white, as one most attractive room was done in light green tile and another in blue. Buff and terra cotta have also been used. As some one has said, it isn't necessary to have the bathroom present the appearance of an operating-room in a hospital, although of course this spotless whiteness is no drawback. In fact, if the room is located on the side of the house where there is little sunshine it is quite imperative to have white tiling.

If the walls are plastered, they should be painted with a glossy paint, as heat and moisture destroy the plaster. Sometimes the walls are first covered with linen and then painted. This gives a still more lasting wall covering. There are also glazed papers for the walls which come in white, light tones of colors and tiling effects. If there is any wall decoration it should be simple.

There Are Many New Ideas for the Bathroom Floor.

IF THE floor is tiled there should be a mat of some description on it. The bath mat should be hung up after it is used. A good permanent mat is one of rubber similar to those used outside the front door and in office buildings. These are of a heavy rubber composition with a perforated design. There are white ones which are especially suitable on bathroom floors.

Tile is especially suitable for bathroom floors because it is made with a base and [illegible] curved surface aids sanitation by preventing dust and dirt from collecting in the corners. If linoleum is used it should be allowed to stretch before the strips of wood which hold it to the floor are finally placed on the edge. If this isn't done the linoleum will hump up in the center of the room and if not fixed immediately will crack.

If a hardwood floor is used it is well to use maple because the grain is tighter and therefore is less apt to splinter and is less susceptible to moisture.

Fixtures should be chosen with ideas of service, utility, beauty and sanitation. They are usually made of vitreous china, solid porcelain or enameled iron.

Strong, Nonabsorbent and Impervious is Vitreous China.

VITREOUS china is made of high-grade clay and fired, usually twice. It is strong, nonabsorbent and impervious to acids. After it has been fired once it is covered with a fine, glasslike, transparent glaze and fired again. This prevents it from cracking, crazing or peeling off.

Large pieces such as the tub or the kitchen sink are too large to be made of this material so are usually made of solid porcelain or enameled iron. Solid porcelain is also made of clay which is glazed and fired, but this material allows for contraction and expansion. The tub should be tiled into the wall so that the fittings are concealed.

Since the bathroom must possess the qualities of simplicity and dignity, only those fixtures should be bought which express these qualities. A white porcelain pedestal lavatory has these qualities in its symmetrical and graceful lines. Also it is not bulky and this too is a prerequisite, as fixtures must be compact in order to leave the greatest amount of floor space.

Besides the tub, lavatory and closet, there may be additional china fixtures such as a dressing-table and a dental lavatory, but unless the floor space is unusually large these should be omitted.

A Cold, Mausoleumlike Room is to be Avoided.

IN a majority of small houses, bungalows or flats, some separate heating apparatus is needed. There are many good electric heaters that may be used for this purpose. Care should be taken in the use of many of the styles of movable gas heaters as they are apt to use too much oxygen out of the air. If one is used a window should be kept open all of the time it is burning. Gas heaters which are installed in the floor, of which there are a number of splendid types on the market, are excellent. There is in that case no perceptible amount of poisonous fumes. The kind which has a draft leading through the wall is also popular.

With the number of art glass makers found in every locality it should not be difficult to get a satisfactory type installen in the bathroom window. The window may be sent to the factory and the desired glass fitted into it. The curtains should be of stout muslin or barred Swiss, or some material with sufficient body to withstand steam or damp without getting limp or stringy.

The Lighting Arrangements Need Careful Study.

THE mirror or lights should be so placed that the light, whether daylight or artificial, should fall on the face of the person rather than on the mirror itself. For that reason the light should come from above or at one side and not at the back. There are shaving mirrors fitted with small electric lights in the frame which also throw the light on the face of the person.

The ideal place for the bathroom cupboards or cabinets is at one end of the room under the windows, with a mirror between them under which is a window seat with a lid used as a receptacle for soiled clothes. If the floor space is about 8 by 10 feet, each cupboard or chest of drawers may be two and three-fourths feet wide and four feet high with a two-foot window over each one. These extend into the room about twenty inches and allow two and one-half feet for the width of the mirror. The seat below the mirror is about fifteen inches in height.

The tops of the chests of drawers may be used as a dressing table. If there is a full-length mirror empaneled in the door then the space over the window seat may be utilized for a medicine cabinet, which can be recessed into the space between the studding, with an extension of only one inch into the room. The shelves in it are three inches in depth. This cupboard combination gives a space for medicine, toilet articles and both clean and soiled linen.

Accessories of Various Kinds Make for Convenience.

THERE are some other additions to a well-equipped bathroom which should be mentioned. A stout, short hook for a razor strop near the mirror will be greatly appreciated by the man of the family. Also there should be two or three other hooks for bathrobes, for if there is a window seat there need be no chair in the room.

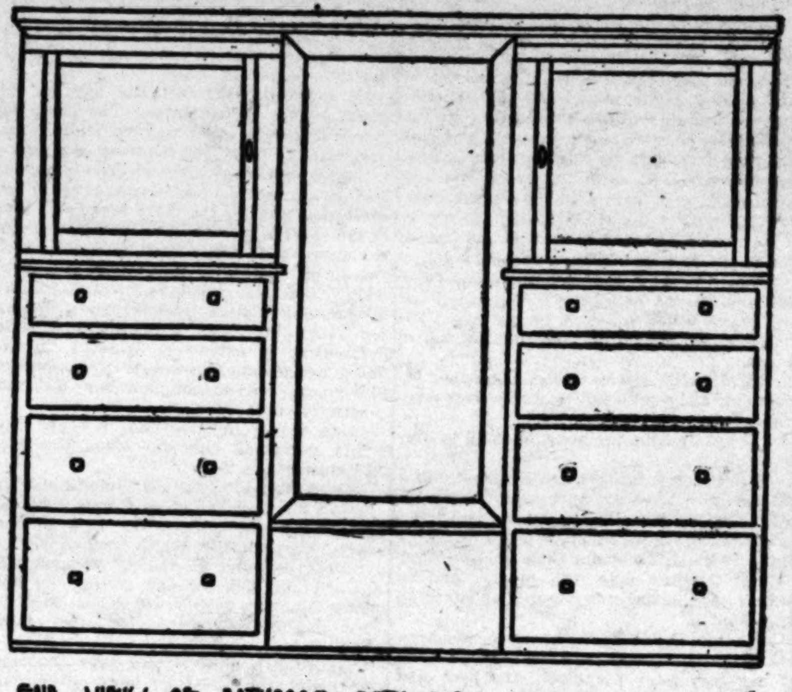
Each member of the family should have a separate rod for his towels and one for the guest towels. These are preferably of glass or porcelain, as metal rods such as nickel-plated ones, wear off with polishing and become spotted and tarnished. There are, however, those made of hardwood which are painted the same tone as the woodwork.

"Plate-glass shelves which are removable prevent the repeated coats of paint which wooden shelves require to keep them in order.

Toothbrush racks are much in evidence, but it is much better to keep the brush in a rack inside the cupboard. The habit of keeping them exposed to the dust may be criticised from a sanitary point of view.

Soap pockets sunk in the wall near the bath are convenient and easy to care for.

There are some rooms large enough to contain a pair of scales. This is more or less of a necessity if there is a growing child in the family. Hardware stores sell also combination faucets in which hot and cold water may be mixed to any temperature. Cheap plumbing, poorly installed, everyone knows is after all the most expensive. This is one room where economy does not pay.



END VIEW OF BATHROOM WITH WELL ARRANGED CABINET

GOBLETS ARE GOOD.

If you are buying new glassware for your table why not have some goblets? They are much more attractive than the ordinary water glass.

Side Lights.

DECORATIVE GINGHAMS.

Ginghams are used a great deal for interior decoration. Checked gingham in blue and white, pink and white and lavender and white are used in bedrooms, breakfast rooms, kitchens and even in dining-rooms of country houses. Sometimes it is used as borders for white curtains and often as entire side drapes. These may be made more fancy by adding small ruffles of white or of the material. A number of rooms in beach cottages may be done with a delightful effect in different colored ginghams in each room. Gingham is easily laundered and they keep clean for a long time. If used for side drapes they look well hung straight in twelve inch strips.

SUMMER RUGS.

There are many rugs manufactured for summer cottages which are artistic, inexpensive, durable and reversible. These may be found in wool and cotton and grass materials and in all of the standard sizes. The advantage that these rugs have over many others is in the color and pattern. In most cases they are two or three-toned rugs in plain colors.

SOMETHING NEW.

Different and artistic sofa pillow covers are made of one quarter-inch cotton tape woven in the meshes of a 10-cent string dish cloth bought at a 5 and 10-cent counter. The tape is dyed in soft and harmonious tones. It is then woven, with a bodkin, using a simple geometric pattern, with the brighter tones in smaller quantities toward the center. It is surprising what artistic results are obtained.

TOO MUCH DIVERSITY.

Pictures in which different mediums of expression are used should not be closely associated in one room. A picture may be done in oil, water color, pastel, or maybe a photograph print or steel engraving. If several of these varieties are used in one room it is impossible to harmonize them. The same care must be taken with the use of several kinds of materials or textures in one room.

A new automobile needs care from the start to keep it new. So Does a New Suit!

THE ITINERANT LOVER.

because her own warm nature was very responsive to any love that assailed it passionately enough. The first man who had wooed her happened to be young, wealthy and kind, and he had made her nearly happy—he thought wholly so. So had she thought—God help her!—so had she thought till now.

She drove her teeth into her lip till the blood came. She sat and heard the egoist discourse. She loved him! She realized again all the contemptibility, the cruelty, the selfishness, the littleness of the man. Yet she loved him!

Then something unprecedented in his smug career, something almost unrealizable, fell upon the itinerant lover. His itinerancy checked, his wanderings fixed, he fell blindly at Roberta Stuart's feet and adored them and her with a whole, true first passionate single-heartedness that he had never before given, nor to any degree experienced.

She knew it—was scheming for it.

So she smiled, a cruel, beautiful smile that curled up the corners of her full red mouth and reflected the vendetta that lay always alongside the love, sometimes superseding it, in her heart.

So he was bringing it back to her humbly, was he—the gift she had given him, which he had taken and tossed aside? Bringing it back, full value, heaped up measure. She had no fear for herself. She was strong—strong in the armor forged from the pride that had "come back to her"—as she had told him it would long ago—and in the trust her husband ever gave her most completely. She did not forget that, with its other occupancy, her Sicilian heart held also her husband's honor.

Good Cam! When his wife paraded Faraday's devotion almost flauntingly before the whole hotel he only shut his eyes the closer. He said he knew her. His psychological insight—though he might have asked the meaning of the term had it been spoken to him—was unerring. Roberta almost wept at what seemed to her the pathos of it. If she could she would have loved him.

The climax, inevitable with such a woman and such a man, came in the second week of their new acquaintance. She was sitting in the big palm-shaded vestibule of the hotel after dinner waiting for her husband to take her out. It was a glorious, hot, still night and they had planned to spend an hour on the pier; many lights and music upon the water satisfied a certain undefined craving in Roberta.

To her came Faraday, very slowly, giving himself time to feast his eyes on the vision of her, in long black dress with the scarlet silk wrap thrown over it, her pale cheeks and red lips entrancing under the shadow of black hair.

"You are going out?" he said, coming up to her.

"To hear the band," she answered carelessly, smiling at him.

"Why do you never let me take you?" he said a little recklessly, looking into her eyes, feeling the balance of things slipping. "Always——"

"My husband," she said.

He looked round. They were alone in the vestibule. He slipped his arm under her loosely opened wrap and put it on her waist.

"Roberta!"

She looked at him, very still.

"Your husband, Roberta! What a farce, this! A farce! You do not love him—you love me—me."

She did not answer, but he felt her quivering, and her erect head drooped a little, acquiescent.

"You love me—me!" he said wildly, "and I love you. Love. God! what a poor word for what I feel! I adore you, worship you with every drop of blood in my veins, with every fiber of my being. I was mad from the first moment I saw you. We were meant for one another. I could have killed that cold Scotsman when I knew you were his. Roberta, Roberta, my darling, you will leave him—you will come away with me. We will go together to the beautiful South that you and I both love. Together we will wander hither and thither and forget everything but each other. Tomorrow—tonight—now. Roberta!"

She lifted a ghastly face. He stopped.

"What? What? What?" she said almost frenziedly, and swayed rather, then voluntarily drew herself away from him.

What? Wh—a repetition of—of—he could not remember, and it did not matter.

"Roberta, my darling."

"I—have—I had," she said, changing her tense confusedly, "no man—no man to thrash you for this."

He stared, started, suddenly white as she. She stood in the middle of the vestibule, a wan ghost under the glare of electric light, but with a very devil of fury incarnate loosed in her blazing black eyes. Her bosom dilated, she threw her head back, gazing at him—gazing—gazing—and looking all white and black with her black gown and hair and eyes, and white neck and whiter face, and the scarlet wrap striking a weird note of startling color. Back came a mad recollection fraught now to him with a terrible significance. The floodgates of memory loosed showed him the black and white little Sicilian wildcat raving at him in the bottom of a red-cushioned punt.

His pale face grew ghastly. He threw out his hands towards her, stammering brokenly.

She smiled.

"No one—then——"

Cambray came into the vestibule at that moment, humming a snatch of an opera, and stopped dead.

Roberta went up to him and laid her face down against his arm. He dropped the coat he was carrying to hold her and looked over the black head terribly at Faraday, standing here stammering.

"My darling!" said Cam.

"Cam," she said scornfully drawing herself erect, "Mr. Faraday is urging me to visit the South with him. The invitation is for you to decide."

She drew his head down and kissed him before Faraday's eyes, then flew from the vestibule, gasping, her hands pressed over her ears to shut out the sounds. She knew her cold Scotsman.

Twenty minutes later, having pacified a raving hotel proprietor and an aghast staff, Cambray went to her room to look for her. He found her flung upon the bed, her black and scarlet huddled round her, her distended eyes looking somewhat vacantly out into space. He bore signs of stress in a blood-streaked face, torn tie and crumpled collar, but he smiled the smile of a man who has done good work and on whom a great calm has fallen after the storm.

He went over to the washbasin and rinsed his hands and face before touching her.

"Wh—wh—what have you done, Cam" she faltered, behind him.

But she knew.

He turned round, toweling himself vigorously.

"Never mind, dearest. I'm going to take you out, and you're not to worry over anything. Because it's all over."

She got up from the bed and clung to him mutely.

"Don't worry, dearest," said honest, blind Cambray. "I won't have you worry. I shan't say another word to you about it tonight, except to say that I—I—I'm proud to think"—his voice was a little husky—"that—that Caesar's wife, you know. And to thank you, darling, for giving it to me to do for you."

Roberta lay back a moment on his arm, her eyes half closed, her full red lips trembling very near his own. He bent and kissed them passionately.

They went out together into the warm, still night and sat on the pier amid a crowd of pleasure-seekers and the myriad twinkling lights that she always liked dotting and dimpling the dark water below. She felt Cambray's faithful, passionate eyes searching her white face and set it stiffly like a mask, and sat mutely, blind and dead. He kept a protective arm along the back of her chair.

In the pavilion the band was playing Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance," with a glorious fanfaronade and blare of marching music.

"Isn't that good, dearest?" Cam was saying.

She opened her deaf ears to listen mechanically and heard the storm of violins, the blare of cornets, the throb of drums, wailing a dirge in a minor key.

HATH NOT AN EDITOR.

are not proof against that insidious malady which once killed a poor little pussycat.

"In what form," inquired Mr. Smith, "are the results of your labors to be given to the world?"

Victoria toyed with her cup.

"I am writing a story," she began slowly, "and I knew the minute I laid eyes on you that you were going to be my hero. I think," she added dreamily, "that I knew even before that. It was not only your appearance, though you looked just exactly as I had planned you would, though you had just that air of distinction that I wanted my hero to have. It was something I saw in your picture—an unexpected depth, perhaps. You had," she told him frankly, "a peculiar charm for me."

"Well, by George," said Mr. Smith. "Do you know I have always felt that if someone would write me up it would make a good story?"

"It will be a good story," said Victoria with conviction.

"And I may see it? Promise me that I may see it," pleaded Mr. Smith.

"You may see it," proclaimed Victoria sweetly, and took a well-earned sip of her neglected tea.

"You are a very difficult person to understand," she announced.

"Am I?" said Mr. Smith, eagerly.

"But I've discovered one thing about you."

"Have you, really? Good or bad?"

"Bad," said Victoria, severely.

"How distressing!" said Mr. Smith, concealing his delight with difficulty.

"You are a flirt."

"A flirt?"

"A very crafty, a very clever, a very desperate flirt."

Mr. Smith beamed.

"What if I am?" he demanded.

"Only this," returned Victoria. "As soon as I finish my tea I am going back to the shelter of Miss Greenwood's wing. I am not very old and I'm very inexperienced, and I can see that it's dangerous for me to stay here."

"Coward!"

"'He who fights and runs away—'" began Victoria and rose.

Mr. Smith looked at her oddly.

"'May live to fight another day.' When?" he pursued.

Victoria flushed slightly and put the rose against her cheek.

"I'm naturally pugnacious," she observed, "and my mother and I are at home on Tuesday afternoons."

He followed her reluctantly back to the group around the tea table. The group received them with something like enthusiasm. Victoria was quite the youngest and prettiest girl present, and you may have observed that Mr. Smith had his points. But within a very few minutes the party broke up. One of the short-haired women mentioned a dinner engagement. The oldish gentleman with the air of shabbiness pleaded an excess of work. The thin, wild-eyed creature in the apricot-colored dress insisted upon sharing her waiting car with both of them. She seemed to be extremely attentive to the oldish gentleman with the air of shabbiness. Her manner was fawning and her voice was positively saccharine.

"He's rather in your line of work," Mr. Smith remarked casually, when the door had closed upon them.

"Short stories?" returned Victoria quickly.

"No. She does the short stories, the emaciated lady who seemed to love him so much," answered Mr. Smith, chuckling.

"What does he do then?" Victoria was straightening her hat and patting her hair before a narrow mirror which had Mme. Le Brun and her daughter in the panel at the top.

"He publishes them—and pays abnormal prices for them, too—not her's, of course," added Mr. Smith, chuckling again.

Victoria eyed Mme. Le Brun and her daughter with a peculiar tensity of expression.

"What is his name?" she asked thinly.

"Same as mine," replied Mr. Smith, who was fastening his glove with some difficulty. "Only I'm a manufacturer—in the hosiery line—and he's a regular highbrow. You must have heard of him. He's Eustace Smith of the Spotlight."

Victoria cried all the way home. Twilight was deepening, crowds were gathering and lights were blooming along the avenue. The limousine threaded its way with infinite deftness, but Victoria did not lift her head to look. The hat made of soft white feathers was knocked hopelessly askew. The white kid gloves were wadded into a ball and pressed into service as a handkerchief. The many white ruffles were soaked with her tears.

She cried all the way out of the car, into the house, up to her room. She locked the door against her anxious mother and little brother, who whimpered in sympathy. She flung her new hat across the room. (Happily it landed on the bed.) She threw herself down on the chaise longue and buried her head in the pillow.

She cried until she was quite exhausted, and then she sat up, pushed the wet strands of hair out of her eyes, and cooled her hot cheeks in her hands. Light from the street lamp across the way crept through the windows and mingled with the shadows in her room. Light from the hall stole in through the keyhole and from beneath the door. A faint odor of coffee, the distant crash of dishes, murmurings from carefully lowered voices in the dining-room, floated up to her. [illegible] heard him wandering [illegible] door, and occasionally the light from the keyhole was blotted out by his [illegible] eye.

And then the doorbell pealed. The maid called, "Mrs. Anderson!" Her mother called "Wren!" And little brother pounded at her door with "Vic! Vic! Let me in! Two messenger boys came at the same time. One brought a box and one brought a note. Here they are!"

She unlocked the door and flashed on the lights and little brother tumbled in. They scrambled to wrench the string from the box and to break the seal on the note.

The roses were from Mr. Smith—the Mr. Smith in the hosiery line. They bore his card and the significant message—"Till Tuesday."

The note was from Harley and read as follows:

"As soon as the directors' meeting was over I called up Marjorie and asked her how things went. She said you made a smashing hit with Eustace Smith. She said that before he left he confided to her that he would take a great interest in your work. He remarked that you were the only rising authoress he had ever met who hadn't tried to vamp him."

And those of you who are fond of Harley Cox may be interested to note that even before Victoria caught little brother into a mad embrace, waved the precious missive above her head, and dashed with the happy news down to her expectant family, she smiled rather impishly at poor Mr. Smith's roses and said:

"Won't Harley be furious!"

A Square Meal?

CHARLES F. MURPHY said in New York the other day:

"We were promised a new heaven and a new earth after March 4, but I think the outcome is rather disappointing.

"In our disappointment we feel like the hungry hunter. He stopped for the night at a tavern down South, but first he said cautiously:

"'I'm very hungry. What are you going to give me for supper, and what will be the price?'

"'We give a gol-durn good supper for $1.50,' said the landlord—'duck and 'taters.'

"'Fine! That suits me,' said the hungry hunter heartily.

"He washed up, and in due course the bell rang for supper. Rubbing his hands and smiling, the hunter hurried into the dining-room. Then his face fell. There was nothing on the oilcloth-covered table but a bowl of potatoes and another one of buttermilk.

"'Here, landlord,' he shouted, 'where's the duck?'

"The landlord came in from the kitchen.

"'The duck?' he said. 'Why, man, don't ye understand? Ye take yer 'taters and duck 'em in yer buttermilk. That's what duck and 'taters is. I guess ye never visited these parts before'."

Tale of a Chick.

THE death of John Habberton in a soldier's home led Theodore Dreiser, the novelist, to say:

"So the author of 'Helen's Babies' died penniless! The career of the modern novelist seems as horrible as that of the table d'hote chicken.

"'Waiter, this chicken is bad,' a patron said in a 40-cent table d'hote the other day.

"Impossible, sare!' the waiter indignantly answered. 'He is good, vair' good. On Monday he was roast veal, on Tuesday he was boiled veal, yesterday he was cold chicken and today he is boiled chicken—vair' good boiled chicken. He will not be bad till tomorrow; then we waiters will eat him.'"

COL. THEODORE ROOSEVELT told at an American Legion banquet a story about a fake soldier:

"Like most fakes," said Col. Roosevelt, "he gave himself away. He was describing how he got his medals, and he made the fighting so fierce that one of his listeners said with a sneer:

"'Under all that machine-gun fire it's a wonder you didn't get hit.'

"'I would have got hit for sure,' said the fake hero, 'if I hadn't crouched down in a kilometer.'"

Worth Considering.

FOR three strenuous hours the auctioneer had tried to work his listeners up to the proper pitch of enthusiasm. But either weather or their lunch disagreed with them and they simply wouldn't be roused. The sale was one of horses, and lot after lot went for very poor prices. At last a sad, sorry-looking animal was led into the ring.

"Now, gentlemen," shouted the auctioneer, "what offers for this horse? Will somebody start the bidding?"

There was a pause. Then a voice came slowly from somewhere in the middle of the crowd.

"Two dollars," it said.

"Gentlemen! Gentlemen!" protested the auctioneer, tearfully. "The horse is alive."

WHEN OTHERS FAIL SEE ME

Supreme Opinion.

BISHOP BRENT of Buffalo administered a merited rebuke to a visiting English novelist the other day.

It was at a Buffalo dinner party and the English novelist, after a number of witticisms of a shocking if not almost blasphemous kind, turned to the guest of honor and said flippantly:

"'Bishop, what do you think of God, anyway?'

"'I think,' Bishop Burt answered, 'that the only thing that really matters is what God thinks of me.'"

SENORA PILAR SEREDA, the Spanish painter, was defending the bull fight at a dinner in New York.

"An American visitor to Madrid," she said, "left the bull fight one afternoon in disgust.

"And then the American saw a pair of flashing black eyes, and he spent hours chasing a red cloak round and round the town."

BISHOP BRATTON, at a dinner in the Jackson, was genially patronized by a millionaire.

"I never go to church," the millionaire said. "I guest you've noticed that, bishop?"

"Yes, I have noticed it," said Bishop Gratton gravely.

"I guess you wonder why I never go to church, don't you?" the millionaire pursued. "Well, I'll tell you why, bishop. There are so many hypocrites there."

"Oh, don't let that keep you away," said Bishop Bratton, smiling. "There is always room for one more."

ELINOR GLYN, who spent last Easter in Spain, said at a dinner:

"The average Spanish couple have a child a year for twenty years or so. A good many of these children die, but nevertheless the average Spanish family boasts about twelve children.

"A Spanish grandee took his family to America last year and one day as he was leading the way into a New York department store a policeman halted him rudely.

"'Here, what you been doin'?' the policeman said.

"'Nothing,' said the Spanish grandee.

"'Then what are all these children follerin' you for?' the policeman said suspiciously."

WILLIAM L. ETTINGER, New York's Superintendent of Schools, was discussing the German campaign to break up the Allies.

"German propagandists," he said, "distort history. They misinterpret Germany's acts and motives in such a way that—that—

"Well, it reminds me of a story. A little girl was visiting her aunt. The family cat sat on the hearth rug, and the aunt said:

"'Oh, look at kitty, washing her face!'

"The little girl watched the cat for a moment and then said with scorn:

"'Washing her face? Pshaw, she's not washing her face. She's washing her feet and wiping them on her face.'"

To Cool Off.

A COUNTRYMAN was inscribing the name of a highly-respected, recently departed deacon on a tombstone. The stone rested on an empty beer barrel in his shop.

A friend of the late worthy called in to see how the sculptor was progressing with the work, and objected to his friend's tombstone resting on a beer barrel, remarking:

"Do you know, John, that my departed friend never drank a drop of beer in all his life?"

"Well," replied John, "I bet he would give something for a pint now!"

AT THE Logan street school the other day, one of the children was asked to spell window, but instead he said widow.

"Don't you know the difference between a window and a widow," cried the teacher.

JUDGE KENESAW LANDIS was talking at a Chicago reception about our vast new armies of office holders.

"It is strange," he said, "how puffed up a political office makes some men. It almost turns their heads.

"In the smoking car of a train the other day a chap turned to the chap seated beside him and growled fiercely:

"'That's makes the fourth time you've blown out my match.' What do you mean by it?'

"'Force of habit,' said the other chap. 'You see, mister, I've just been appointed to the fire department.'"

JOHN W. WEEKS of the President's Cabinet was explaining to some interested friends how every political change affects industry. "Why," he remarked, "only the other day I was in a department store when a man came in and asked for some of those hollow book forms that we used to use to fill out our book cases.

"'But we don't carry any of them,' said the clerk. 'Nowadays you use sectional book cases and get them unit by unit according to the number of books you own.'

"'I've got all the books I want,' replied the man, but the trouble is, some of them leak.'"

But his "parlor" had to be run on a strict cash basis. So when a man a little too well known to Uncle Mose as "slow pay" came in to have his shoes shined and suggested to the old negro a desire to pay at a later date, Uncle Mose did some quick thinking.

"I'se sorry, boss; I sure is," he replied, with diplomatic suavity; "but I jes' can't do it. You see, de banker on de nex cohna an' me—we done make a 'greement dat ef I didn't loan money he wouldn't shine shoes, an' I jes' can't break dat 'greement."

ROBERTS stepped into Delhart's office and asked what about a little round of golf.

"Just strikes me," Delhart [illegible] "Wait until I phone my wife and we'll be off."

Delhart asked for the number and then, placing the phone on the edge of the desk, leaned back comfortably in his desk chair, receiver at ear.

"Hello, Martha, dear. Hello—Hello! This is Dick. Yes—Dick. Did you hear that all right? You did!"

Delhart moved around to a more difficult angle from the phone.

"I called up to tell you I am going out to play some golf with Roberts. What's that? You can't hear a word I say? I'm going out golfing with Roberts, dear? You don't? I never saw such rotten service. Well, if you can't hear me, I'll explain when I get home." And Delhart hung up.

Roberts couldn't keep from asking questions.

"Why on earth didn't you talk into the phone, old man? Then your wife could have heard what you said."

"Say, you are ignorant!" laughed Delhart, "I didn't want her to understand."

[illegible]ECTABLE MATRON.

[illegible] her. She came [illegible] our neighborhood from a village of [illegible] 500 people and brought her village [illegible] rule to apply to everything in os Angeles. Many things in our town horfied her, but the most horrifying was the ovie business. She declared that the stuos should be driven to some place where ey would not be continually under the nose a respectable matron. She would never y a house in any section where she could t look outdoors without seeing some of those people."

One morning a famous comedian appeared our neighborhood to shoot a scene. We xcitedly informed each other and rushed the corner. All except the respectable atron. Her nose went up and the corners her mouth went down. She dragged her arden hose into her front yard, turned her ck to us and generally endeavored to give e impression that a famous comedian was othing to her.

A few days after this occurrence the reectable matron and I were returning from arket. A "front" of a colonial house had en put up on a vacant lot. The crowd of lookers, the street full of machines, and e imploring tones of a director's voice ming through a megaphone were sure gns of a movie scene. At the curb stood old-fashioned open carriage with white rses decorated with ribbons and in charge a black coachman.

I was walking steadily by, knowing my ighbor's aversion to anything connected ith the movies. But her steps lagged. A ttle flurry ran through the crowd and a urmur of "Here they come." A bridal uple appeared in the doorway. The groom ore a braided gray suit, a collar with great ide ends and a flowing necktie. An imense gold chain was looped across his owered vest, and altogether he looked as he had just stepped from some old grandther's portrait. Of course, the bride was e center of interest. Her wedding gown stiff silk was a mass of ruffles. A man's ze watch dangled on a heavy gold chain ung round her neck. Over her shoulders e wore a lovely lace shawl, and in one oved hand she carried a stiff bouquet amed in lace paper. She, too, looked as ough she had just slipped out of some old cture. The two walked slowly to the ach and entered it with much ceremony. hen they climbed out and went back to ry it once more," probably for the thirtieth me.

[illegible] I was anxious to go on, but my neighbor [illegible] rooted to the spot. So we watched [illegible] another rehearsal. I finally walked away and left her standing there.

It was less than a week later that in a convenient vacant lot near by a cruel sheriff arrested an innocent hero. Of course, we women all hurried to the scene of action—and the respectable matron followed in our wake! However, she retreated very slowly from her positions. She had decided that there was no special harm in watching a scene. Still a line must be drawn somewhere, and she drew her line at taking part. She did not wish to offend any of the neighbors, but she was sure no really nice woman would take part in a moving picture.

Two weeks after she had drawn her line we learned that an auction scene in a rural picture would be put on at a near-by studio. About fifty women were required for "atmosphere." It seemed an easy way to make $3, and a number of us went to the studio. The respectable matron walked along "to see how they do." To our astonishment and our amusement, the assistant director pointed a nervous finger at her and remarked:

"You're a good country type. Count yourself in."

His pointing finger seemed to hypnotize her. Without a word of protest she followed us into the barnlike dressing-rooms. Silently she received a calico dress, shawl and bonnet, and lined up with the "bunch" to have her face patriotically daubed with red, white and blue. At noon she came out of her trance sufficiently to refuse to go home to lunch because she was ashamed of her appearance. She ate lunch in the studio cafeteria with the rest of "those people." At the end of the day she received $3 and returned thoughtfully to her neglected home.

That momentous day was just three months ago. Since then she has entered her name as an "experienced extra" at four studios, and has been atmosphere in several pictures.

Yesterday we met in a grocery. While we were talking a woman entered and received a very haughty greeting from the respectable matron. With her eyes snapping and a little red showing in her cheeks, she said to me:

"That woman has just moved next door to me. What do you suppose she had the nerve to say to me? That no really nice woman would take part in a picture! I let her know that we people in pictures are as good as anybody!"

To John Burroughs on His [illegible] Anniversary

[illegible]

Thou art a light, now known to fame!
And highly prized by the refined,
Who honor thy illustrious name
Among the greatest of mankind!
For thoughts of kindness, broadly sown;
From living things, to roughest stone.

From grass to flowers, mammals to man
You see Creation's lovely forms;
And grasp great knowledge from God's plan,
Even in tempests, or in storms:
Rivers or mountains, trees or ferns,
Thy searching eye some secret learns.

You take no life—from love of chase,
But see a wondrous beauty there:
Learning some truths, from form, or grace,
Then, to the world, those truths declare;
Building for coming ages, good,
With God, through Nature understood.

From forest flowers, to meadow weeds:
The bee, or bramble, have you care;
You tell the world it greatly needs
To love and cherish their welfare,
Raising mankind to greater heights
For its advancement, and delights.

Friend of Whitman, and scholars great;
To science and development;
Poet and author, to translate
The music of accomplishment.
Thou, good old Seer of Hudson's Vale,
Teachest that kindness should prevail.

Thy friendship is the highest prize
Awarded to a growing mind,
Who here would build his temple wise
Learning from Nature's forms refined
That labor in her vineyards vast
Brings joys and pleasures, which must last.

No king was ever crowned with gems
That ranked in glory—of your kind—
No scepter 'bossed with diadems
Could add a luster, if entwined
About your aged brow—here named—
Or fill thy niche, however framed.

J. FRANK WALDO.

BETWEEN STATIONS.

BY FRANCES WIERMAN.

"MAY I sit here, please?"

I closed my magazine and hastily athered my bundles from the seat beside e, to make room for the speaker. As our yes met we both exclaimed, "You!" for it as my former neighbor, Millie Weston. As ell dressed as ever, from her tight, jaunty oque to her perfectly fitting suit and correct loves. Her carefully coiled hair was satin mooth, her cheeks a healthy and attractive olor, her bright eyes and trim head moved ith quick, bird-like motions. She was one of ose slender, bird-like little girls that Dickns was so fond of putting into his stories. hen she had been a neighbor of mine she as one of my favorites, she was such a usiness-like little thing, and yet so essenally feminine. It seemed to me as I looked her that there was a new quality in her xpression, she seemed to be in a sort of aze of happiness and good will. I could ot understand this different look until she uddenly and shyly said:

"You call me Millie Weston. But I'm Mile Upham now. Because I'm married, and m just coming back from my honeymoon!"

So that accounted for the halo of happiness and good will—it was the bride-look! After expressing my good wishes and sincere hope that she would always be as happy as she was now, I added:

"But if you are on your honeymoon, I suppose your husband must be with you. And of course I want to meet him."

She laughed. "Yes, he is in the car. But—he's very bashful, you know. I'm always so self-possessed—he isn't that way. I am afraid he wouldn't like it if I turned around and pointed him out to you. So we'll wait till there are vacant seats, where we can all be together."

Which came about at the next station.

The new Mrs. Upham turned and beckoned, and her husband rose and lumbered down the aisle, to be presented to me. Lumbered is the proper word. Of all gawky, green country boys I ever saw, he was certainly the gawkiest and greenest. He bowed in a manner that would have made money for him if he had done it on the stage. His hands were painfully in his way; and his feet were too much in evidence. His clothes were new and good, but did not fit him anywhere. But with all his awkwardness, honesty and kindliness shone out of his eyes. It was a most beautifully tender and gentle look he sent his wife as he sat down. There was a certain reserve about that look and about his manner that pleased me. He looked like a pure man! But yet—what a mate for Millie Weston, with her exquisite taste in clothes, her dainty grace, her attention to every detail of appearance. "Well," I thought, "they say people should marry their opposites, and Millie has certainly done that!"

Evidently my surprise in his appearance showed in my face, for Millie flushed painfully and for several minutes seemed on the point of crying. I felt so sorry that I had betrayed my thoughts; but I really could not be blamed. Knowing Millie so well, he was the last man on the train I would have picked out as Millie's choice of a husband.

Probably Mr. Upham felt that there was something wrong in the atmosphere. He was not a fool, if he was green—and he excused himself for a smoke and left us. As he went down the aisle he looked back to give his wife another of those shy, gentle looks.

As soon as he was gone, Millie turned to me with flushing eyes and quivering lips.

"Oh," she burst out, "I know what you think! I saw it! You think he is no man for me and that I am too stylish for him. You think he is a green, countrified gawk, and so he is! And I am glad of it. And that is why I married him!"

"Millie, I am sorry," I began.

"Oh, I know. You are sorry because you gave yourself away. Everybody acts the same way. And some of them snigger right out. And that doesn't make me as mad as when they feel sorry for me, and don't you feel sorry for me! Because I'll just tell you I am a lucky girl to get him!"

"But, Millie——"

"Oh, yes," she went on, "his clothes aren't right—don't you think I can fix all that up after we are married awhile? He looks green—and he is green. And that is why I married him. Just because he is green!"

"But listen, Millie——"

"No, you listen. You just listen to me. And then maybe you will understand. And maybe you won't, because you never had to work in a big place full of men and men coming and going all the time; and all kinds of men, except green ones. All kinds of foul-minded men, and foul-mouthed men and men that couldn't look at a woman without having bad thoughts. And men carrying nasty pictures and cards in their pockets and showing them to each other. Once one man dared another to show some to us girls—and we just had to sit there because we weren't allowed even to leave our chairs. And men who made all kinds of signals to us, and waited outside for us, and tried to make dates. And men who leered at us. Oh, I wouldn't marry the richest man in the world if ever I caught him leering at a girl who had to take it, because she was working for a living. And men that tried to leer over the telephone—we could just feel it. And men who came in with their wives and stepped behind them, so they could leer at us. And men that called us 'peachy' and 'girlie' and 'dearie.' Oh, if you only knew how tired I was of such men. And I could have married any number of handsome, stylish men. I wouldn't have one of them! I didn't want to work in such a place all my life; but I just was not going to marry such a man. And in the summer I went to a farm and I met Ray Upham. He is a real man, even if his clothes don't fit. And he is strong, and he is good, and he won't take any money away from his wife to give to another woman. And he doesn't know how to leer at a working girl. And oh, I can't tell you how gentle and kind he is to me. Yes, he is green. He is as green as grass, and I love him!"

She stopped to draw breath and I began again:

"But, Millie——."

The train slowed down, the brakeman called "Sixteenth street" and Millie jumped up.

Oh, my stop! Good-by. I'll come and see you some time," and out she danced with all her bird-like motions.

It took several minutes for me to regain my composure, for really I had to use my handkerchief on my eyes. I opened my magazine again, to read; but I laid it down. For I began to think about the baby girl I had laid away with such bitterness. Suppose she had lived to grow up and work for her own living and have such experiences as had Millie Weston?

Germany as a World Pacifier.

That Germany, after much evasion, shilly-shallying and delay, at length accepted the reparation terms insisted on by the Allies was a distinct forward step in the much-needed pacifying of the world. It evinced a large improvement in the German attitude and morale, a disposition no longer to shirk the tasks and burdens laid upon the people mainly responsible for the World War, and showed that they had at last decided to assume a positive part in the reconstruction of human affairs.

It is now possible for Germany to become once more a leading and influential factor in our civilization. She is very far from being ruined and, in spite of the heavy reparation dues (aggregating $32,000,000,000) which will handicap her for many years, she can by resolute, industrious effort recover a vast deal of the ground she lost. She can become prosperous and respected if she will only in good faith turn away fro mall thoughts of militarism and world domination, and engage only in the contests of peace, aiming at leadership purely in legitimate lines of industry and commerce. Again, as in her golden past, her merchant vessels may ply over all the seas and her products find markets in every land. It will benefit the world in general as well as herself if she will take such a course. She can thus live down the distrust, the enmity and the prejudice of the nations, and win their confidence and friendship—and in no other way.

If Germany's acquiescence in the situation proves sincere and lasting, there is promised to distracted Europe a long period of calm. Possibly it may mean ultimately the end of wars and rumors of wars on the continent. If the millions of now suspicious, restless and unfriendly human beings there get down again to useful and productive work, that part of the globe may prosper as never before. The reaction of the bettered conditions would be wonderfully beneficial to the United States also, for extended and profitable trade relations would necessarily grow up between those countries and ours. The prosperity of Europe would increase our prosperity, for she will always be, in proportion to her financial ability, a customer of this nation.—[Leslie's.

BY MAY ED

ALTHOUGH not blessed, or hampered—according to the point of view—with any particular business or vocation in life, Charles Faraday was always distinctly a man of affairs.

That they were affairs of the heart rather than of the head had ever been a source of annoyance and uneasiness to the Dowager Lady Faraday; it was the business instinct in her that prompted her annoyance at time and opportunities lost in useless dalliance. When her eldest son reassured her on his brother's score she only shook her becapped, evangelical head and prophesied that some day Charles would find himself seriously involved. After the young man, however, had been involved in a whole series of more than usually undesirable escapades she began to lose patience and spoke seriously to him about his shortcomings.

"I consider it lamentable," she told him, "that a young man of your age can seriously devote himself to an endless series of flirtations, often entirely out of your own class of life. Some day, Charles, you will burn your fingers, and"—righteously—"you will have to bear the brunt of the burning. Only yesterday I was ashamed"—she wiped her eyes—"when my very old friend, Cecilia Caversham, came to me about her own girl. That you should trifle with the affections of Cecilia's child——"

She looked pained.

"I consider myself the victim of temperament," he murmured deprecatingly.

"'Victim!'" Lady Faraday snapped. "'Victim' indeed! Victim of a fiddlestick! It was Cecilia's girl who was 'victimized.' Every one is talking about it. And it would have been a very satisfactory arrangement for you, now I come to speak of it. But, instead, the poor dear child——" she applied the handkerchief again.

Charles lifted his fine eyebrows in his usual charming distress.

"I had really no idea——" he began.

"Nonsense!" said Lady Faraday. "With your experience you ought to know how susceptible girls of that age are. And then it's not only nice girls like Cecilia's but—but—I really am ashamed. When I only remember the dreadful husband of that terrible little music hall person who came the other day to swear at you——"

Charles was adjusting a new tie critically at the pier glass. Its slate color almost exactly matched his fine eyes. His mother's anger rose.

"It must end!" his mother declared firmly. "I insist upon it, Charles. It is absurd that a young man of your ability should have the allowance you have settled upon him and pass his life in utter idleness. I shall speak to Derek about it."

"Derek will not interfere," said Charles complacently. He knew his brother.

"What are your plans for next week?" asked Lady Faraday, changing her tactics.

"I'm going down to St. Medbury," he answered, "to stay with Mrs. Simonds-Smith."

"With whom?" said his mother almost in a shriek. "I never even heard the name before? Some impossible person, I suppose, whom you have picked up somewhere?"

"She picked me up," he explained.

"Don't split hairs," said Lady Faraday impatiently. "Is she young? Is she pretty?"

"Neither one nor the other," he answered truthfully.

"I don't believe you!" said Lady Faraday sharply. "I suppose she is a dreadful, made-up, would-be-young person"—in a meretricious age, Lady Faraday proclaimed her own fifty years by uncompromising caps and gray hair—"and you will get into some fresh entanglements. And why, for goodness sake, St. Medbury?"

"It has a cathedral," he remarked.

"Don't talk nonsense to me about cathedrals!" said Lady Faraday angrily. "I shall write to your Uncle Rupert, I think, and ask him to get you into the diplomatic service, or—or—find a seat for you to contest, or—or——"

"But I should go in for neither, mother," said Charles, escaping.

Mrs. Simmonds-Smith was a very merry widow, indeed, of almost middle age, verging on portliness, and with only a pardonable soupcon of the make-up and would-be-young element with which Lady Faraday had accredited her. Before she settled in St. Medbury she had possessed somewhat of an itinerant temperament, and when she discerned its like in Charles Faraday she took to the scapegrace at once.

She had met him in Switzerland one summer—before the éra of portliness and make-up, which had only just dawned—and he had formed a very agreeable part of her holiday. They traveled, walked, talked and climbed together, and, both being experts at the same game, and pleasurably recognizing the fact, they played together, quite assiduously and charmingly. Neither kindled a fire, only the pleasantly temporary semblance of one, so neither was really burned.

"You must come down and stay with me in St. Medbury," she said to him.

He was a well-born boy, and looked it, and he was also quite amazingly handsome. She would not mind dangling him before her provincial neighbors.

"There is a cathedral," she added, "and quite a lot of pretty girls."

It was a year or two before he remembered the invitation again and the giver of it; then, having an empty week or two before him, and his mother's temper being unusually touchy, he wrote an insinuatingly reproachful reminder to Mrs. Simmonds-Smith and betook himself to St. Medbury.

"My little niece," said Mrs. Simmonds-Smith playfully, as she gave him tea in her rather overbedecked drawing-room, "is staying with me. Now"—she shook at him an arch forefinger—"she is a little girl—a dear little girl—just from school, and you must behave very, very nicely. My dear Mr. Faraday, I remember you, I assure you."

He thought he also remembered her, before this portliness that really distressed him, when the admonitory forefinger had been a taper thing of beauty, but he only smiled with charming deprecation.

"Ah!" he said. "I adore ingenues—only we never have the bona fide thing nowadays, do we?"

"But that is just," said Mrs. Simmonds-Smith, "what you must not do. I know your adoration" (he made a mental note that fat women should not be arch,) "and you are not to adore my little Berta. She really is ingenue, you know—an interesting mixture of ingenuousness and unusual maturity for her age. Schoolgirl innocence," said Mrs. Simmonds-Smith with the air of an analyst, "and southern impetuosity. My poor brother married a Sicilian."

She said it compassionately as if with a figurative headshake at the idea of the impetuosity of Sicilian women in general. Faraday thought there might be possibilities in Mrs. Simmonds-Smith's niece. The susceptible organ that he fondly called his heart was at that moment unoccupied.

"I shall be delighted to make her acquantance," he said, very candidly.

At that moment the door opened and Roberta came into the room.

"Came" is a wholly inadequate description. There was a sinuous, litheness an overpowering grace of movement about Roberta that invested the ordinary action of entering a room with something indescribably subtle, made it an entrancing sight, a joy, a delight, that conveyed the very poetry of motion.

She was slim, not with the lank, boyish slimness of the 18-year-old English miss, but with a slender fullness and roundness that gave, just as Mrs. Simmonds-Smith had said, an impression of early maturity. Though only a little above middle height, her splendid carriage gave her girlish dignity, and the fire smoldering beneath the dark softness of her southern eyes formed a piquant contrast with the virginal curves of her full, red mouth. In the curves of bust and throat and cheek, and in the glorious sweeping line from shoulder to foot, there was the unmistakable promise of splendid womanhood.

Her black hair was parted and coiled simply in a schoolgirlish knot on the nape of her neck, and she wore a white frock that clung to her and fell and rippled away lovingly about her. Pale and with a sort of tentative innocent shyness, she came forward more like a graceful child than a young woman.

"You are Mr. Faraday," she said without awaiting for an introduction, putting out a soft, brown tinted hand with ingenuous friendliness.

Her voice was the voice of the South—low, liquid, musical; dormant in it there lay the troublesome suggestion of passion.

As Faraday listened and looked at her he fell headlong and irretrievably into one of his easy loves.

The young man, inured to conquest, pursued the tenor of his easy conscienceless way, but the conquest of Roberta was accomplished almost before the lazy desire for it had well been formulated in his mind. He put out a finger and the citadel fell.

He spoke the word he knew so well how to speak, he looked the look he knew so well how to look from his eloquent, long-lashed eyes; both word and look had become something like a parrot repetition with him. The passionate child of the South reciprocated this semblance of a love with a love that was only too real, hot from the depths of a hitherto unstirred but impetuous heart. Faraday basked in it and told himself for a whole week that he adored her.

He told himself that the little girl was very lovely; that she undoubtedly loved him, as he undoubtedly loved her—for the moment; that southern women were so much more sympathetic than their English sisters, and that this summer idyll was very beautiful and held fresher elements of interest to his jaded senses than any heretofore.

For the time being he walked and talked and thought wholly with and of Roberta; spent moonlight hours with the romantic child in the garden after dinner; accompanied her to all the cathedral services, because sacred music and dim stained glass and mystic hush, and kneeling by Roberta in a vast empty twilight space all appealed to his esthetic sense. Together, too, inadequately chaperoned sometimes by Mrs. Simmonds-Smith, whose increasing portliness made her very sleepy out of doors in hot weather, they floated up the narrow river that wound round about St. Medbury, Roberta, in a happy dream, at the tiller, he lazily on his oars, the two pairs of eyes speaking eloquently what in their hostess' presence they might not voice. Faraday, who had done such things many times before, delved for the same sensations, but to Roberta it was the great, the glorious, the sacred, the ineffable first time.

She had come to St. Medbury straight from a convent school and awesomely unsophisticated, except by the intuitions of her passionate nature. Till now the intuitions had lain dormant, but they were there, true, potent, ready to awake at the touch of the first hand that might unlock her heart-gates. Fate willed that Faraday's should be that hand—and—they awoke.

God help her! Charles Faraday's was the hand. He was at this time a slim young man of 26 or thereabouts, very tall, with the long, loose, graceful panther litheness that usually betoken the athlete. His appearance, however, belied Faraday. His eyes, too, long-lashed, beautiful eyes, expressive of the very soul of candor and honor, his fine, sensitive mouth, his poet tongue, all belied him. Honor with Faraday was an elastic quantity; his poesy if analyzed would have been found usually to reflect only his own ego. But the analysis was one which few women ever made and those few only in the bitterness that followed the learning of the lesson he had taught them. Women of the world were among them.

Who, then, shall wonder at little Roberta bowing down, blind with faith, to worship the idol? Afterwards, when he had, with his own hand, shown her the clay feet, she knew, but even then the knowledge brought no balm to a wound, but rather added pang that the pedestal was still there in her heart for him, with the unworthiness of the idol upon it mounting and gibing at her for her own helplessness to cast it out.

It was when Faraday's week's visit had lengthened into a fortnight that Mrs. Simmonds-Smith, whose perturbation was growing, spoke to her niece:

"Roberta, I've a duty before me——"

"Yes, aunt," said Roberta, dreaming.

"Duties are unpleasant necessities," said Mrs. Simmonds-Smith, fanning herself, "but I'm such an aggressively moral sort of person that I never can shirk them with any sense of satisfaction to myself. Are you listening, child?"

"Yes, aunt," said Roberta, her aunt's last words floating irreverently into the dream.

She sighed.

"I don't believe," said Mrs. Simmonds-Smith more vigorously, sitting up to shoot a sharp glance at the girl, "I don't believe you are. As I said, Roberta, I have a duty before me and I intend to perform it. You are staying here under my protection, dear, and it is incumbent upon me to see that you don't make a little fool of yourself with Charlie Faraday——"

Roberta started; her olive cheeks flew a danger signal.

"You're so terribly earnest and unsophisticated," Mrs. Simmonds-Smith pursued.

"Aunt," said Roberta, "so is——"

"Pooh!" said Mrs. Simmonds-Smith briskly. "He is neither, my dear child. He falls in and out of what he calls 'love' on an average about once a month, if not oftener. He is, I grant, amusing, but it is not the sort of amusement for you. He's that really abominable thing, a thorough male flirt and absolutely conscienceless, nature having blessed him with a face that is a delight to look at and a pretty gift of tongues—why, it's all the easier to him to fool poor little——"

"How dare you?" Roberta almost screamed.

She jumped up, two scarlet spots flaming in her cheeks, her hands clenched at her sides.

"How dare you? Do you think I—I—I don't know——"

"My poor, dear child!" said Mrs. Simmonds-Smith, thoroughly shocked and startled for once in her easy life, "you must not fall in love with Charlie Faraday. You must not, indeed. If I had thought it was more than a flirtation on either side——"

"It is," said Roberta, swaying a little, and white now, "a flirtation on either side—on neither side—no—on neither side——"

She went to the door, walking a little uncertainly. When she reached it, she turned around and stood erect.

"Roberta!" said Mrs. Simmonds-Smith, struggling up from her deep chair to intercept her.

"I love him!" said Roberta.

The poor child flew out of the room, sobs strangling in her throat, down through the sunlit garden, at the bottom of which on the lazy river the moored punt rocked gently. She sprang in with the swift agility of a wildcat, and, crouching at the bottom of the craft, laid her arms upon the red cushions and her black head upon them—madly awake now.

There Faraday found her, an hour later, a white heap upon the red cushions, but with a beautiful picturesqueness of abandonment in the chaos that struck his esthetic eye with a certain sense of pleasure, even while he was hurrying across the intervening garden to reach her.

He leaped into the punt.

She started, shuddered, and looked up.

"My own dear little girl!" he said, putting out his hands with a caress and lifting her.

She allowed him to lift her to the seat beside him, and leaned her head against his shoulder. The overhanging bank effectually screened them from the vantage point of windows, and, knowing this, he slipped an arm around her waist. (He always made discretion play a large part in his affairs, hence his unscathed escapes.)

"My dear little girl—what?"

"N—n—nothing! Really, n—n—nothing."

But as she spoke she opened her big southern eyes wide on his face, and in them he read the woman's soul he had evoked—the woman's soul which had finally supplanted the careless child soul. How charming! he reflected. Then he reflected that matters had reached the stage when it behooved him to be careful.

His carefulness, however, was always managed with a considerable amount of finesse. It was not in him to be what is termed brutal. His whole fastidious being would have revolted at the bare suggestion. There was nothing crude about his retreats. They were always graceful, and came about so naturally that they really seemed indefinable as such. He was already wearying a little of the situation, and of St. Medbury, and his hostess, and the cathedral services. The itinerancy was a fever, a disease, in his blood. He felt himself ready to absorb something new, in need of fresh sensations. The two weeks had been very pleasant, and the little girl beside him had been a wholly delightful companion, but—but——

But the thing was decidedly beginning to pall. That was the sober truth, which there was no blinking. Also, Mrs. Simmonds-Smith this very morning had said something about Roberta which had seemed most alarmingly like an attempt at probing. His sensitive discretion had taken fright; valor was a negative quantity with him. Love-making, however, with charming little Roberta was easy; moreover, it had become a second nature with him, and he felt it would meet the occasion now, and smooth the path of the announcement that he had intended to make of his near departure. As usual, he expressed the love-making more in the subtle inflection of his well-modulated voice, in the tender pressure of the encircling arm, than in actual words, which bear repetition.

"N—n—nothing." He mocked very gently. "Oh, my dear little Berta, but I think there is. You are going to tell me?"

Her pale face lay against his shoulder, tear-stained, the red lips tremulously vibrating. He bent and kissed them, and she returned his caress with an abandonment of passion that she showed now, poor child, for the first time, never doubting.

With the same absolute faith she told him, too, the wherefore of her tears, and waited, confident.

"Your aunt?" he repeated lightly. "What an absurd idea of hers, wasn't it? As if there was any possible harm in what has been to me, at least, a wholly pleasant and delightful friendship. And I hope it has been so to you, too, dearest, sweetest little girl."

"H—h—has been?" she stammered, starting.

"Why of course," he said kindly, "all delightful things come to an end, don't they? That's part of the jest of that abominable old cynic, Fate. My delightful time must come to an end now, very shortly, I fear, for I—I—er shall have to leave St. Medbury tomorrow. Family business, and all sorts of perfectly rotten affairs to see to, the mater is worrying me"—Lady Faraday had more than once been a useful scapegoat—"to come home to talk matters over with her."

Roberta was looking at him, astounded, white-faced.

"B—b—but," she stammered, "you'll c—c—come back?"

He sighed deeply.

"Ah, when, I wonder?" he said pensively. "One never knows. Of one thing I'm certain, though. I shall never forget my visit to charming, quaint old St. Medbury, and the happy fortnight I've spent here—or is it—— Yes, I declare, it will be nearly three weeks tomorrow! Time flies so, under perfect conditions, when one is absolutely and ideally happy, as I own I have been. One loses all count of it. Your aunt has been most kind, really, in letting me extend a sort of week-end visit into a regular visitation. No, I shall never forget it, this delightful fortnight, and my dear little—friend. Even if we were destined never to meet again—one never knows——"

"What? What? What?" she almost wailed. She had pulled herself away from his arm, and was staring at him, her eyes wide open in blank, anguish, incredulous amaze, which she made no attempt to conceal. In a moment there flashed back upon her consciousness disconnected phrases of her aunt's: phrases culled from a shrewd worldly wisdom denied to babes such as she, phrases that, in her blindness, she raved at, spurning them—"that abominable thing—a thorough male flirt—a flirtation on either side—all the easier to fool poor little——"

"What do you mean?" she breathed rather than spoke.

"My dear little girl," he said, biting his lip in vexed anticipation of "a scene" that would be really abhorrent to so sensitive a nature as his, "what should I mean? What is there in what I have said to call for this—er—melodramatic attitude? You surely—er—have not misinterpreted—misunderstood—— Oh! pray get up! I really cannot——"

She had slipped with one of her characteristic, sinuous movements down from the seat, and now half knelt, half crouched in the bottom of the punt, facing him, still staring with blank eyes, still striving against incredulity, still all but speechless. Heart and brain were hammering like drums, with great bursting throbs that choked her, driving the breath in panting gusts between her parted lips.

Faraday raised his fine eyebrows now in very real distress.

"Oh, pray get up," he said futilely. He stretched out the long, white hands that a moment or two ago had been a caress she loved.

She struck at them in fury.

"What are you saying?" she panted, in a voice he hardly recognised. "What are you saying? Do you mean that all this time—that all this time—that all this time——" She trailed off into a senseless repetition. "You're not really going—for ever—and ever?" She stretched out two gripping hands. "But—but—I love you!"

She fixed her eyes on his face, reading it, and read it like an open book—read what the child of a fortnight ago could not have done, but what to the anguished woman of this moment stood out in letters of fire; read all the contemptibleness of him, all the heartlessness, all the delicate cruelty, measured the height and depth of his utter egoism and blatant vanity, and, though unable in her inexperience to define it, yet felt the full horror deep down in her writhing soul.

Treading close upon the despair of this first great love came an uglier passion of rage—rage incarnate, rage of the South, hot as its love, rage that swept over her irresistibly, and shrieked out a terrible vendetta. He had humiliated her, mocked her, stolen her blind adoration blindly given, and put her aside.

"Oh! you!" she cried. "You—you!—and you kissed me and I kissed you——"

"My dear little Berta," he murmured, really at a loss in face of such unexpected intensity in this pretty child, "you will forget all this—nonsense——"

"Forget!" she said, leaning forward and speaking very quickly. "Forget! Never! You don't know me! I will never forget! Never forget that I hate you—now!" A sob broke in her throat at the lie. "Never forget that—I'll be revenged! I am no cold English girl—to forget. You didn't know whom you were dealing with when you brought this on me. How dare you! How dare you! How dare you! How dare you! And I told you I loved you—and—and—I kissed you! Oh, my God! I can't forget! Oh, if I had only strength to kill you I'd do it, I think! No, I don't think—I know I would. I hate you!"

She gathered vehemence, staring at him with black eyes distended in her white face.

"Oh," she said, in a voice like a moan, "if—I—I—I had a man to thrash you for it, you—you—heartless devil!"

She was beautiful in her fury, but with the beauty of a tiger-cat gathered for a spring as she crouched there swaying a little from sheer force of compelling emotion.

"Go away!" she said. "Go away! Leave me! I've got some pride left. It will come back to me when——"

Suddenly exhausted, she flung her arms forward on the cushions, laid her black head on them, and knelt thus, very still.

Quite silently Faraday got up and left her. There seemed nothing else to be done in the face of this most uncomfortable development, he told himself.

To a very shrewd, but eminently tactful, hostess he explained that a wire had summoned him back to town again. In any case he had made up his mind to tear himself away tomorrow. But she would understand.

He felt uncomfortably that she did.

So it fell that the pride that brought Roberta in, dry-eyed and smiling, at tea time and sustained her through the eternity of a half hour, was not called upon to stand the additional test of Faraday's presence.

In the hall afterward as she went through she picked up a glove he had dropped and carried it away to her room. The Pride swore an oath of vendetta over it, and the Love kissed it, and cried as it fondled it, before putting it away in a shrine of its own. The Love cleft deep into the Sicilian heart that could not forget.

Six years after, when the black-eyed little Sicilian girl and dull old St. Medbury were hardly memories with him, Faraday met the Cambray Stuarts at Brighton.

He was still the dallying dilettante loafer whom many women loved and more men despised. During the six years he had wandered itinerant and culled much sweetness from many flowers. He had on leaving Roberta six years ago followed a pretty peeress half over Europe, and the blue eyes had displaced the black in his fickle affections, and between them they nearly managed a cause celebre. It was discreetly hushed up, however, on one of Faraday's skillful retreats, and he returned home to fall in and out of love with his distracted mother's latest companion. This, too, was now hardly a memory with him.

She first attracted his momentary unoccupied attentions at lunch. She sat at a small table with her husband, a huge, healthy, reddish-haired young Scotsman, discussing an attractive menu with a vivid interest that seemed somehow to suit her.

Faraday's table was to her right, where he had a full and uninterrupted view of a glorious sweep of profile and throat and bust. After she had swept in and sat down and begun her lunch, all in a careless, regal, unconcerned way, he ate no more.

At last she turned her head and met his eyes, and her own, full and black, distended widely for a moment before the dropping lids veiled them again discreetly. His vanity gauged the effect of the glance as it listed, and about his shaven upper lip curled a slight, fine smile. An adorable woman!

As she left her table she dropped her adorable handkerchief, and he was quick to return it to an adorable hand before her red-haired husband could perform the office. She murmured thanks and trailed out, leaving with a faint suggestion, that yet hardly was a memory, in the sweet timbre of her voice.

He looked them up in the visitor's book, and went off to the smokeroom to smoke casual acquaintance with the red-headed young Scotsman through the proffer of his own unparalleled cigars, a brand he especially imported. The acquaintance soon extended, for Cambray Stuart was a genial, unsuspiciously good fellow. That evening the lover sat next to Mrs. Cambray Stuart at dinner.

He neglected his soup, feeding on enchantment. Her voice was beautiful, so was her profile under the shadowing black hair and the glorious slender fullness of her perfectly matured figure. With the advent of the fish the slight memory his neighbor had evoked came back and puzzled Faraday a little. Through two ensuing courses he pooh-poohed it to himself, and then when the sweets appeared he voiced it in an apologetic question:

"Something like a memory is troubling me; yet I could never have forgotten you had we ever met before."

"I do not think we ever have," she said meditatively, resting her eyes on his face.

With the lie, she was taking him in with a deliberate scrutiny that tried to be cold, but could be so only ostensibly. She saw him stouter than six years ago at St. Medbury—a pang drove through a Sicilian heart that could not forget—his hair already a little thinner on the top, the fine lines of his mouth and chin thickening. Idealism was absent from his face now. Laziness and self-indulgence and an intolerable egoism were making of him something grosser. Yet the old pang drove again into her, scorching and searing her, heart and soul, brain and body. But the six years that had developed the pale girl into a glorious woman had taught her also how to dissemble. And so she had lied boldly.

"I do not think we ever have."

"Not—at—at——" he said, racking his brains.

She held her breath. Would he remember? No, dear God! not that—not that——

A sudden enlightenment, not wholly pleasant and a little confused, broke over his face.

"Were you ever at—at—St. Medbury?" he asked, turning to her. "I think it must have been——"

She had herself admirably in hand.

"No, I don't—think so," she said slowly. Then, lightly, "But one really forgets trifles, doesn't one? I have such a shocking memory."

"Still I thought—" he began dubiously, relieved.

"Perhaps," she said, after a pause, "you met my—my—little sister there."

"Ah!" she exclaimed. This solved a rather awkward problem really quite satisfactorily; and he hated to probe. "Ah! that must have been what was puzzling me. You—you—er—must have been very much alike—though I see the difference very plainly now."

She smiled a little wry smile, but her teeth were dazzling, and the bitterness was lost on him.

"Is she—er—with you?" he ventured further.

"She—is dead," said Mrs. Stuart, an indescribable hardness sweeping over the beautiful face.

He looked his pained concern, and voice it very gently in his own perfect manner. With the putting aside of a painful subjec he was happily aware that he might, too put aside that little momentary uneasines that was assailing him, for what, he reall hardly recollected on the instant—do doub some episode. So the little sister died? Well, well, he remembered her, he thought as rather a—rather a pretty little girl.

But this woman was adorable!

As he talked to her his low voice raise all the ghosts of the pain and passion sh had frantically striven all these six years t lay. She answered very little. That, how ever, he rather enjoyed. Ego was satisfie and, as often, blind.
